articles of association of all kinds of companies including private limited companies, object clauses and capital clauses of various companies, rulings for different books &c. to be kept, notices, resolutions &c. that may be required for all ordinary purposes.

A table of stamp duties payable in connection with the formation and management of companies has been given in Appendix G.

In order to make room for insertion of these things matters have been compressed in this edition to their utmost extent. Still, so large additions would not have been possible without leaving out the English Act of 1929 which is of little practical use in this country until amendment is made of the existing Act incorporating the provisions of the former. In the first edition this English Act was printed for the reasons given in the Preface thereto. But as it now appears that on account of the impending Reforms in the Constitution the Government is not in a position to undertake this heavy piece of legislation during the next few years, I have thought it better to omit the English Act of 1929 so that more useful matters may be inserted.

I am under deep obligation to my erudite friend Dr. Radhabinod Pal, M.A., D.L. (Tagore Professor of Law in 1925 and again in 1930, and Advocate for the Commissioner of Income Tax, Bengal) for writing a Chapter for this book on the law and rules relating to Income Tax as applicable to companies. This has been printed as Appendix H and is for the guidance of people having connection with companies.

I offer my sincere thanks to Mr. N. K. Majumder, M.A., G.D.A., R.A., Registrar of Companies, Bengal, and to Mr. A.L. Collett, Registrar, Original Side, Calcutta High Court, who have, very kindly, helped me with valuable informations and suggestions regarding the Rules and Forms.

The Index to this edition has been prepared by Mr. Khadyot Kumar Ghosh, B.L., Pleader, and the Table of Cases by Mr. Pradyot Kumar Ghosh. My thanks are due to both of them for their labours.

Preface to the First Edition.

The Indian Companies Act (VII of 1913) is almost a verbatim reproduction of the English Companies (Consolidation) Act of 1908. Although some minor amendments were made in the English Act, principally by the Acts of 1913 and 1917, the real changes were introduced by the Companies Act, 1928 (18 & 19 Geo. 5, c. 45). This Act contained 118 sections with many amendments in the Schedules. It made so many alterations that consolidation became necessary. So the Companies Act, 1929 (19 & 20 Geo. 5, c. 23) was passed which consolidated all the Acts from 1908 to 1928. It came into operation on the 1st November, 1929.

As a result of this new Act, the Indian Act will, no doubt, be overhauled ; but when the Government will be in a position to undertake this onerous task is a matter of speculation. In this connection it should be borne in mind that in normal times it took the Government about five years to reproduce the provisions of the English Act of 1908 in the present Indian Act. This time the public will not be satisfied with such reproduction of an English statute and a considerable body of opinion has already grown against this course.......

From the two tables of corresponding sections the reader will see at a glance that out of 385 sections (as against 296 of the Act of 1908) 94 sections are altogether new, and amendments have been made in 125 other sections. All these new provisions will have to be considered in the light of public opinion which is yet to be elicited and further provisions for the protection of the investing public will have to be made in view of the peculiar conditions prevailing in this country. At present the hands of the Government of India are full on account of the pending question of Reform and disturbed political conditions. The consideration of such an important and contentious measure will require a calmer atmosphere.

Soon after the passing of the present Act of 1913 the Calcutta High Court, as all other High Courts, made Rules under s. 246. These Rules were published in the Gazette of India on 15th February, 1930. These have been printed as Appendix G.

Although there is a number of books on the Indian company law in the field, so far as real annotated editions on the lines of Lord Justice Buckley's Companies Act are concerned, there are not too many of them. Moreover a considerable number of important decisions have been passed on this subject by the highest Courts, in England and India, during the last few years. So there is perhaps some scope for a work like this in which I have endeavoured to collect almost all important decisions, reported up to date, under the appropriate sections, the English cases naturally far outnumbering those of all the High Courts in India put together. I have tried, wherever possible, to explain the more important principles of company law by giving ample quotations from the judgments of eminent English and Indian Judges.

Special attention has been paid to the elucidation of those matters which a layman is likely to feel difficulty in understanding when he is engaged in promoting, floating and managing limited liability concerns, as for instance :—the nature, scope, powers and limitations of public and private companies ; acts ultra vires of companies and directors ; powers, duties, rights and liabilities of directors and managers, and how far their acts bind the company ; the duties and liabilities of auditors ; jurisdiction of Courts and the doctrine of internal or what Lord Hatherley called "indoor" management ; debentures, ordinary and perpetual ; fixed and floating charges ; conversion of private companies into public companies and vice versa ; meanings of share capital and fixed and circulating capital ; distinction between share and stock ; different classes of shares, e.g., preference, ordinary, deferred, pre-preference and founder's shares ; cumulative and non-cumulative dividends ; nature of shares and the mode of their transfer ; transfer in blank and priority of titles ; rectification of the register of members before and after winding up ; re-organisation, re-construction and amalgamation of companies and their effects on different classes of shareholders ; extraordinary and special resolutions ; statutory, ordinary and extraordinary general meetings, notice, quorum, adjournment, voting, poll, minutes, and chairman's rights and duties regarding general meetings and board meetings ; contracts, bills of exchange &c. and liabilities of companies thereon, as well as the personal liabilities of the directors and managers ; the meaning of "promoter" and his liabilities ; what constitutes a prospectus and the duties and liabilities of the directors and promoters in connection therewith ; authority coupled with interest ; underwriting, allotment, call and forfeiture of shares ; different kinds of winding up and their incidence ; contributories, past and present ; their respective liabilities and the right of set off; duties and liabilities of official and voluntary liquidators; effect of a compulsory winding up order and stay of suits and proceedings against the company; application of the bankruptcy rules in winding up; public and private examination of directors and officers; fraudulent preference; preferential payments and prerogative rights of the Crown in the winding up; bona vacantia; misfeasance of promoters, directors, officers, liquidators and auditors; defunct companies; &c. Although these and many such matters are fairly well known to the members of the legal profession, they are not so clear to business men who really conduct the affairs of limited companies. Therefore I have tried to explain them at some length by reference to as many decided cases as possible.

In annotating Table A of the Act notes on those points only have been given which have not been previously dealt with under the appropriate sections to which references have been given. I have tried to avoid repetition by giving cross-references under various sections of the Act and articles of Table A.

Rules and notifications made under the Act by the Governor General in Council and corrected up to date have been given in Appendix A. For the convenience of secretaries and managers of companies three tables have been compiled and printed as Appendices B., C. and D.

In writing any commentary on the Indian Companies Act one must draw largely upon the various standard works on the English company law. In this respect I am greatly indebted to Lord Justice (Lord Wrenbury) Buckley's Companies Act, 13th ed. (1924), Sir Francis Gore-Brown's Joint-Stock Companies, 36th ed. (1925), Palmer's Company Precedents, 12th ed. (1922) and his Company Law, 13th ed. (1929), Halsbury's Laws of England, vol. V (Company), Mr. Justice Buckland's Indian Companies Act, 3rd ed. (1922); Stiebel's Company Law and Precedents, 3rd ed. (1929), Topham's Company Law, 5th ed., Haydon's Secretary's Manual, and Crew's Public and Company Meetings.

For the detailed Index my best thanks are due to Mr. Monmohan Banerjee, M. A., B. L., Advocate, Calcutta High Court, who is also on the staff of the Indian Cases.

ADDENDA.

S. 2, sub-s. (1), cl. (2). Company. The word "Company" covers a company registered under the old Act VI of 1882. But the fact that the provisions of the Act of 1913 are made applicable to such a company cannot render that company one actually registered under the Act of 1913—Chota Nagpur Banking Assn. v. Radha Gobinda (1941) Pat. 561, 194 I. C. 649.

S. 3. Under the Act the High Court is the Court which has jurisdiction to wind up a company having its registered office anywhere in the Punjab—Raghubir Singh v. Indian M. P. Fund Insurance Co. (1942) L. 74, 44 P. L. R. 1.

S. 4, sub-ss. (2) & (5). Where a company consisting of more than 20 persons formed in 1922-23 is unregistered, the members thereof can be punished for continuing to be members of such company under sub-s. (5) (enacted in 1936) though they cannot be punished for originally forming themselves into a company in contravention of sub-s. (2)—Muthuveeran v. Mottayan (1942) 1 M. L. J. 230.

S. 21. Though a memorandum and articles may not constitute a contract as between a promoter and the company, an implied contract may be proved by the acts of parties on the terms set out in the articles—Gulab Singh v. Punjab Zemindara Bank (1942) L. 47(49), 43 P. L. R. 619, relying on Isaac's case (1892) 2 Ch. 158; Beckwith's case (1898) 1 Ch. 324 and R. Solton & Co. (1894) 3 Ch. 356. Thus, where in pursuance of certain articles acted upon by the company a shareholder was appointed managing director and acted as such for 11 years and was remunerated in accordance with the terms set out in the articles, the articles constituted an implied contract between the company and the shareholder, so as to entitle him to a declaration that he was the managing director of the company—Ibid.

S. 32, sub-s. (5). While a company is always liable where a return is not sent to the registrar as required by this section, the officers of the company are liable only if they knowingly or wilfully authorise or permit the default—Public Prosecutor v. Lury & Co. (1941) 2 M. L. J. 487, 1941 M. W. N. 846, approving Bhaskaradu v. Subbarayudu (1914) 38 Mad. 674.

S. 72. This section is merely permissive and not imperative; it only provides one of several methods whereby a communication or notice may be served on a company—Dawsons Bank v. Municipal Committee (1941) R. 339 S. B. (Roberts C. J., Dunkley & Shaoo JJ.).

S. 76, sub-s. (2). Before an ordinary director can be convicted of an offence under this section, there must be evidence to show that he was knowingly and wilfully a party to the default—Periannan v. Emperor (1941) M. W. N. 959, 197 I. C. 729.

S. 91B, sub-s. (1). It is open to a company to agree with a shareholder to whom it owes money that the debt shall be set off against future calls. But where he is himself a director and the managing agent, he cannot validly vote for a resolution authorising such set off. The resolution would be invalid when the necessary quorum is lacking without such director's presence. Such a shareholder can therefore on liquidation be placed in the list of contributories in respect of an unpaid share money—Panda Lal v. South Indian General Assurance Co. (1941) 2 M. L. J. 595, 54 M. L. W. 440.

S. 109. An agreement between the parties that the amount paid to the company will be a second charge on the machinery and other goods of the company creates a floating charge, that is, a charge which would fasten on the property that might exist when the time arrived for the charge to be enforced, and would be void under s. 109 for non-registration—Maheshwari Brothers v. O. L. Indra Sugar Works (1942) A. 119 F. B., 1942 A. L. J. 75. For the principal tests as to whether a charge is a floating one or not, see this case.

S. 119. G. & Co. issued a debenture to D on 18-11-1937. Under its conditions the debenture-holder was authorised to appoint a receiver after the principal money had become due, and it was provided that any such receiver should be deemed to be the agent of the company. On 21-12-1939 D obtained the Court's leave under the English Courts' (Emergency Powers) Act, 1939, s. 1(2) to appoint a receiver, and on the following day W was appointed. On 10-10-1940 W applied to the Court for leave to sell the property. The company was not in liquidation: held, that the receiver must still be held to be the agent of the company and there was no need for the application—In re Wood's Application (1941) 110 L. J. 73.

S. 129. It was held in Lewis Merthyr Consolidated Collieries [(1929) 1 Ch. 498] that the preferential rights of creditors over those of debenture-holders applied only to the property secured by a floating charge. Therefore where the floating charge over certain property ceased to float, directly a receiver was appointed, but had become crystalized by that appointment, the creditors had no right under the Act to be paid in priority to the debenture-holders out of the assets comprised in that property. But the creditors will have priority in respect of other property over which no receiver was appointed—Griffin Hotel Co., Joshua Tetley & Sons Ltd. v. The Company (1941) 165 L. T. 57.

S. 137. This section has no relation to a prosecution for an offence under s. 282—Emperor v. Vishwanath (1942) S. 9.

S. 138. This section does not bar a prosecution upon a private complaint of an offence under s. 281—Ibid.

S. 141A. This section does not bar a prosecution upon a private complaint of an offence under s. 282—Ibid. The words "of any offence in relation to the company for which he is criminally liable" in this section mean not only criminally liable under the Act, but criminally liable under the Penal Code as well—Emperor v. Vishwanath (1942) S. 9.

S. 153. An order sanctioning a scheme of reconstruction of an insurance company by the dissolution of an old company and creation of a new one, even when such scheme involves the transfer of money deposited by the dissolved company under s. 7 of the Insurance Act, 1938 and the reduction of contracts of insurance, is an order under s. 153 of the Indian Companies Act, and an appeal lies against such order under cl. (4) of that section—In re Light of Asia Insurance Co., Governor General in Council v. Sailendra Nath Mitra (1942) 46 C. W. N. 441.

J. N. Das
Advocate High Court
Srinagar
Jammu & Kashmir

The Governor General in Council even though he is not a party to the proceedings and the Superintendent of Insurance are entitled to appeal against such order—Ibid.

Creditors and policy-holders of an insurance company are two different classes of creditors, and a joint meeting of these two classes is not legal—Ibid.

S. 160, sub-s. (1). Sub-s. (1) of s. 160 does not deal with payment orders at all. A payment order against a deceased contributory is not executable. The ordinary law that a process against a dead man is a nullity is not altered by this section. The remedy of the liquidator is to proceed against the estate of the deceased in due course of administration—O. L. Bharat National Bank v. Pandit Jogeshwar (1941) L. 480, 43 P. L. R. 650 relying on Peoples Industrial Bank v. Ram Chander, 52 All. 430, (1930) A. L. J. 373, (1930) A. 503.

S. 162, cl. (v). In ascertaining the debts of the company the sums under items such as "calls in advance", "share suspense", "forfeited shares account" and "deposit against premium", which the company could not be called upon to pay immediately, cannot be taken into account, but "loans", "advances" and "outstanding liabilities" must be considered—Sudhiya Nath v. Behar National Insurance Co. (1941) P. 603, 20 Pat. 538.

S. 162, cl. (vi). Where in consequence of an onerous contract with a creditor the company loses its identity and the creditor becomes de facto the company with a power to bring it to an end whenever it suited him, and in accordance with the stipulation in the contract seizes the machinery and plant of the company with the result that the company is unable to carry on its business and to pay its debts, it is just and equitable to wind up the company—Canning v. Soobran Pratap (1941) P. C. 106(109).

Where an insurance company is sought to be wound up under the just and equitable clause and there is no evidence of the future prospects of the company, the fact that the Superintendent of Insurance has not taken any steps under s. 33 of the Insurance Act, 1938 for the winding up of the company, deserves consideration, though it is not a deciding factor—Sudhiya Nath v. Behar National Insurance Co., 20 Pat. 538, (1941) P. 603.

In considering whether such a company should be wound up under the just and equitable clause, the sums due to the company from its debtors, agents and policy-holders and the value of its tangible assets in the form of furniture, motor cars, books, stationery &c. should be taken into account—Ibid.

The amount paid by a comparatively new insurance company in making a contact with the public and building up public confidence cannot be described as reckless expenditure. To some extent at least it represents the goodwill sought to be built up which is an asset—Ibid.

S. 171. Where the managing director of a company which is being wound up by Court presented a claim against the company and asked that his application should be treated as an application to file a suit against the official liquidator under s. 171 and he was allowed time for the purpose, but he failed to file the suit within the time granted and the Court refused to grant him a further extension of time, such refusal amounted to a dismissal of his claim, and he could not turn round and ask the Court to inquire into the claim under s. 191 and adjudicate on it in the liquidation proceedings—General Agencies & Traders, Ltd v. Viswanadhan (1941) 2 M. L. J. 417, 54 M. L. W. 275, (1941) M. 855.

S. 179. A successful litigant against a company in liquidation is entitled to be paid his costs in full in priority over other ordinary creditors, except where there are other creditors in the same position as himself when they both will rank pari passu as regards the fund available for the discharge of their debts--Kailash Picture Palace, Ltd. v. Kidar Nath (1942) L. 10, 43 P. L. R. 648 relying on Dominion of Canada Plumbago Co. (1884) 27 Ch. D. 33 and Bailey & Leetham's Case (1869) L. R. 8 Eq. 94. It is however open to the liquidator to show that the condition of the assets of the company was such that immediate payment cannot be made—Ibid, relying on London Metallurgical Co. (1895) 1 Ch. 758 and Maneklal v. Suryapur Mills Co. (1928) B. 252, 52 Bom. 477, 110 I. C. 33.

S. 179, cl. (f). After judgment had been given against a company in an action, the judgment-creditors brought proceedings to obtain a garnishee order directing payment to them of money in a banking account in satisfaction of the debt. The banking account was in the name of the liquidator of the debtor company who alone had authority to draw cheques on the account: held that the money in the bank (which had been paid into Court pending its decision) was not attachable, because it was money owed by the bank to the liquidator and not to the company between whom and the bank there was no relationship of banker and customer—Lancaster Motor Co. (London) Ltd. v. Bremuth, Ltd. (1941) 110 L. J. 398.

S. 186. A call validly made by the directors prior to liquidation of the company becomes a debt due from the shareholder after the date for its payment has passed and is indistinguishable from any other debt. The Court has no jurisdiction to question the propriety of the liquidator seeking to get in such a debt due to the company—Public Benefit Provident Insurance Society (1942) A. L. J. 47.

By virtue of sub-s. (2) of s. 186 it is wholly discretionary in a Court whether any set off can be allowed. As a fixed judicial principle the Court never allows a person to whom the company is indebted to set off the debt against what is due from him as a contributory in respect of calls—Ibid.

A voluntary liquidator who is a nominee of the Superintendent of Insurance under s. 90 of the Insurance Act, 1938 is not empowered to make a call himself without intervention of the Court—Ibid.

S. 186. Under the law of set off which is applicable in the winding up, where there are two amounts, one in the account of A and the other in the account of A and B (in this case B being wife of A), if it is shown that the latter account was really in trust for A, the amount due under one account can be set off against the amount due under another account—Panikar v. T. N. & Q. Bank (1942) 1 M. L. J. 161.

S. 191. [See the note under s. 171, supra].

S. 192. Where under the memorandum of association of a company the preference shareholders are entitled to return of capital in a winding up in priority to all other shareholders, the unpaid portion of the shares held by the ordinary shareholders can be called up to repay to the preferential shareholders the amount of their capital after the payment of all the debts of the company. But the preference shareholders are not entitled to dividends when the company has made no profits at all—D'Cruz v. Viswanathan (1941) M. 806, (1941) 2 M. L. J. 94.

S. 199. If a consent order provides for the enforcement of a guarantee clause in execution, it can under s. 199 be enforced in the same manner in which decrees in any suit pending in the Court can be enforced—Probodh Lal v. Chandan Mull (1941) 46 C. W. N. 98 (104).

S. 212, sub-s. (1), cl. (b) read with s. 179, cl. (b). By virtue of s. 191 (1) (b) and s. 248 (1) (b) of the English Companies Act, 1929 (corresponding to s. 179, cl. (b) and s. 212 (1) (b) of the present Act) a liquidator in a voluntary winding up may without sanction carry on the business of the company, so far as may be necessary for its beneficial winding up. If in the proper exercise of this statutory power the liquidator incurs obligations, those to whom he incurs them are entitled to be paid out of the assets of the company in priority to those who were creditors at the beginning of the winding up, and it makes no difference whether the obligations are in respect of rents, rates or goods. If the conditions referred to above have been satisfied, the post-liquidation creditors come first, and if not, their claims cannot be entertained until the pre-liquidation creditors' claims have been satisfied. There is no question of the two classes ranking parri passu—Great Eastern Electric Co. (1941) 165 L. T. 366. It is sufficient if the liquidator formed bona fide and reasonably the opinion that the carrying on of the business was necessary for the beneficial winding up of the company. No objective standard by which the liquidator is to be judged should be set up after the event—Ibid.

S. 227, sub-s. (2). Where during the pendency of a winding up proceeding a bank agrees to employ a cashier and to transfer his unsecured deposit in the bank into a security deposit and does so transfer it, the whole transaction is void under this sub-section. Inasmuch as the cashier obtained an undue advantage over his fellow creditors, the Court would not validate the disposition by giving it its sanction—Ram Lal v. O. L., Benares Bank (1942) A. W. R. (H. C.) 7, (1942) A. L. J. 78.

S. 229. There is no power to waive by agreement the statutory right of set off given by s. 31 of the English Bankruptcy Act, 1914, the terms of which are imperative—Victoria Products, Ltd. v. Tosh & Co., Ltd. (1941) 165 L. T. 78.

S. 229. An employee of a company deposited in its general accounts a certain amount as security for the discharge of his obligations. It was agreed between the parties that the employee would get interest on this money and the money would be a second charge on the machinery and other assets of the company: held that the agreement clearly indicated that the parties never intended that the security money should be treated as a segregated fund in trust for the employee or that it was not to be utilised by the company for any purpose—Maheshwari Brothers v. Indra Sugar Works (1942) A. 119 F. B., 1942 A. L. J. 75. For the test whether such a deposit money is to be held as a trust fund or not see this case.

S. 234. Under this section the Court has wide powers, and it can sanction a compromise between different parties before the Court—Probodh Lal v. Chandanmull (1941) 46 C. W. N. 98. An order passed on consent in a winding up proceeding cannot be challenged by a consenting party in a separate suit—Ibid.

S. 235. This section does not prima facie exclude non-feasance. The section would apply to every act whether of commission or omission which is a breach of duty to the company in consequence whereof loss to the company results. To become a director by accepting a gift of shares is a misfeasance. Where such a person continues to act as a director and inspite of the auditor's report exposing the fraud of the company does not make any enquiries or take steps, but joins in a resolution condemning the auditor's report and signs the balance-sheet sanctioning the remuneration to the managing agents, he is guilty of gross and wilful negligence and clearly of misfeasance—Subbayya v. Machayya (1942) 1 M. L. J. 207.

Where a director signed a prospectus without caring to ascertain what the antecedents of the other directors were or how the company was going to be worked or who the partners of the managing agents were, but twelve days before the declaration under s. 103 was sent to the registrar and before the company commenced business he resigned: held, that in the circumstances it could not be said that he was guilty of any misfeasance by reason of which any pecuniary loss was sustained by the company—Ibid.

S. 237. The whole scheme of s. 237 appears to be enabling rather than mandatory or exclusive. The Court may order the liquidator to prosecute or refer the matter to the registrar. He may refuse to prosecute and the liquidator with the previous sanction of the Court may prosecute, but the section is not limited to the criminal liability of the directors under the Companies Act and so the section is not limited to special offences created by the Act—Emperor v. Vishwanath (1942) S. 9.

S. 243. Having regard to the fact that neither party to an application under s. 294(1) of the English Act of 1929 (corresponding to s. 243 of the present Act) can control the date when the Court makes its order, the two years referred to in the section must be calculated from the date of the dissolution of the company to the date of the issue of an application under the section—In re Scad, Ltd. (1941) 165 L. T. 108.

S. 278. As there are no provisions to the contrary in the Companies Act, the taking cognizance of an offence under the Act must be governed, as in the case of an offence under the Penal Code, by s. 190 of the Code of Criminal Procedure which contains no restriction with regard to the person who may lay a complaint [In re Ganesh Narayan (1889) 13 Bom. 600 followed]. Accordingly a private person has locus standie to file a complaint for an offence under the Companies Act. G. O. No. 518 of 6th June, 1916 and G. O. No. 3070 of 23rd August, 1932, though permitting the registrars to file complaints, do not restrict the Magistrate in the exercise of his powers under s. 190 Cr. P. Code. There is no legal objection to the proceedings being dropped by the Magistrate, if he finds that he ought not to have taken cognizance of the offence—Muthu Veeran v. Mottayan (1942) 1 M. L. J. 230. See also Emperor v. Vishwanath (1942) S. 9.

S. 280. No appeal lies from an order under this section dismissing a petition for taking security—Vendurumudi v. National Assurance Co. (1941) M. W. N. 81.

S. 282. S. 137 has no application to a prosecution for an offence under s. 282, nor does s. 138 or s. 141A bar a prosecution upon a private complaint of an offence under s. 282—Emperor v. Vishwanath (1942) S. 9.

S. 282B. As to what is trust money see Rama Krishna v. Official Liquidator (1941) 2 M. L. J. 910.

Reg. 72. A director or a managing director is in no way a servant of the company: he is the agent of the company for carrying on its business—Gulab Singh v. Punjab Zamindara Bank (1942) L. 47, 43 P. L. R. 619, reversing on this point (1940) L. 243.

The principles applicable to the issue of an injunction at the instance of a dismissed servant ought also to apply in the case of a dismissed agent, e.g. a managing director—Ibid.

Reg. 88. Unless a construction of the articles leads to the conclusion that there was an intention to supersede the ordinary rule, it must be held that where no quorum has in fact been fixed, the acts of the major part of the directors for the time being are valid—Ganesh Flour Mills Co. v. Jag Mohan (1941) 44 P. L. R. 15.

Indian Companies (Amendment) Act XXVI of 1941 1199
INDEX ... 1201-1246

ACHAMBEY TRADING CORPORATION LTD.
Srinagar-Kashmir.

INTRODUCTION.

Preliminary.

The history of legislation regarding companies, as opposed to mere partnerships, has been shortly delineated in the beginning of this book, namely, at pages 15 and 16. The present Act, that is, Act VII of 1913 was based on, and almost a verbatim reproduction of, the English Companies Act of 1908 which was a consolidating Act. In 1929 this English Act was thoroughly overhauled and another consolidating Act was passed not only altering the arrangement of the sections of the previous Act, but introducing as many as 94 new sections and making amendments in 125 out of 296 sections of the Act of 1908.

This as well as a growing demand, which became more and more insistent since the passing of the English Act of 1929, for making more stringent provisions regarding the powers, duties and responsibilities of directors and managing agents, resulted in the passing in India of the Companies (Amendment) Act of 1936.

The Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936.

This amending Act, namely, the Act No. XXII of 1936 has not taken the form of a consolidating Act, and has not therefore altered the arrangement of the sections of the Act of 1913, but has introduced provisions most of which are verbatim copies of the new provisions of the English Act of 1929, although there are certain provisions and amendments for the purpose of dealing with problems peculiar to this country. Some special provisions relating to banking companies have also been made taking into consideration the recommendations of the Central Banking Enquiry Committee.

Commencement of the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936.

This amending Act received the assent of the Governor General on 27th October, 1936. Sub-section (2) of section 1 of the Act provided : "It shall come into force on such date as the Governor General in Council may, by notification in the Gazette of India, appoint in this behalf." This notification was published in the said Gazette of 28th November, 1936 which stated : "The Governor General in Council is pleased to appoint the 15th January, 1937 as the date on which the said Act shall come into force"—See Notification No. 24 (23)—Tr. (C.L.) dated 28th November, 1936 in Gazette of India dated 28th November, 1936, Part I, p. 1492.

In this book the provisions introduced by the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936 have been incorporated in the sections, Tables and Forms of the Act VII of 1913 and have been put in italics. The nature and effect of the amendments have briefly been indicated in this Introduction.

Subsequent Amendments.

Thereafter the following further amendments have been made by :— Act XX of 1937 amending s. 93 and repealing sub-s. (1C) of that section; the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937 amending ss. 6, 7, 8, 11, 87C, 109, 232, 245 and 286, and inserting cl. (17) in s. 2, and the new ss. 2A, 42A and 289A; Act II of 1938 amending ss. 17, 34, 86D, 86I, 87D, 102, 130, 134, 153A, 237, 277, 277D, 277E, 277F, 277I, 277M, 284, regulations 56, 77, 106, 109, 116 of Table A, Form I in the Second Schedule and Form F in the Third Schedule; Act XXXIV of 1939 amending ss. 83, 107 and 207; Act XXXII of 1940 amending ss. 152 and 208C; Act XXXVI of 1940 inserting the new s. 244B. All these amendments &c. have been incorporated in their appropriated places in italics within square brackets inorder to distinguish them from the amendments introduced by Act XXII of 1936. The War Donations and Investments (Companies) Act XXXVII of 1940 has been given as App. A (see p. 795) and the Indian Companies (Amendment) Act XXVI of 1941 amending ss. 104 and 282B has been printed as App. M (see p. 1199).

Trading Corporations.

The definition of a "trading corporation" has been introduced by the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937. See the new cl. (17) of sub-s. (1) of s. 2. For the meaning of the expression see notes on p. 42. For the necessity of defining a "trading corporation" see the new s. 289A (at p. 660) which has also been inserted by the aforesaid Order. This section says that powers conferred by the Companies Act on the Central Government shall, in relation to non-trading corporations with objects confined to a single Province, be powers of the Provincial Government. But as regards trading corporations the powers will always be those of the Central Government, even if the objects of these corporations are confined to a single Province.

Companies whose registered offices were in Burma and Aden.

Since the separation of Burma and Aden from India companies whose registered offices were at the date of separation at those places are deemed to be companies registered and incorporated outside British India and as such will not be included in the expressions "company," "existing company," "public company" and "private company". See the new section 2A at p. 43 and note thereunder. In this connection see also the new s. 42A at p. 151.

Illegal Associations.

No company, association or partnership, consisting of more than ten persons in the case of a banking business, and of more than twenty persons in the case of any other business, the object of which is the acquisition of gain, can be legally formed unless it is registered under the present Act or is formed in pursuance of an Act of Parliament or some other Indian law or Royal Charter or Letters Patent. So partnerships consisting of more than the aforesaid numbers of persons, unless so registered, will be illegal associations with all their consequent risks and disabilities (see s. 4 and notes at pp. 49-55).

Amendments made in s. 4.

By the amending Act of 1936 the new sub-ss. (3), (4) and (5) have been added. Sub-s. (3) says that this section shall not apply to a joint family carrying on a joint family trade or business. But where two or more such joint families form a partnership they will, it is apprehended, come within the mischief of this section, and in computing the number of persons the minor members of such families will be excluded.

Sub-s. (5) provides that every member of such illegal associations will be punishable with fine not exceeding Rs. 1000.

Sub-s. (4) says that every member of such an association carrying on business will be personally liable for all liabilities incurred in such business. For effect of the amendments see pp. 49-50.

Companies Authorized to be Incorporated.

Companies authorized to be incorporated under the present Act may be, (a) companies limited by shares—these must have share capitals divided into shares of a fixed amount [see ss. 5 (i) and 6 (1) (v)], (b) companies limited by guarantee—these may be with or without share capital [see ss. 5 (ii) and 7] and (c) unlimited companies [see s. 5 (iii) and 8]—these may also be with or without share capital [see s. 8 (2)]. These companies may be either public companies or private companies. See s. 5. For the definition of a public company see the new Cl. (13A) and for the definition of a private company see the new Cl. (13) of sub-s. (1) of s. 2 at pp. 25 and 26.

Companies formed under the previous Indian Acts or in pursuance of an Act of Parliament or of Letters Patent may be registered under the present Act in accordance with the provisions of Part VIII, even if the sole object of such registration be that the companies may be wound up.

An unregistered company as defined in s. 270 including any partnership, association or company consisting of more than seven members may also be wound up as provided in part IX of the present Act.

The companies authorised to be incorporated, (as distinguished from registered) under the Act must state in the memorandum of association, (i) the name of the company, (ii) the province in which the registered office of the company is to be situated and (iii) the objects of the company, and except in the case of "trading corporations" [for definition see the new cl. (17) of sub-s. (1) of s. 2], the territories to which they extend. If the company has a share capital (which is obligatory in the case of a company limited by shares) the memorandum must state the amount of share capital with which the company is proposed to be registered, and the division thereof into shares of a fixed amount. Each subscriber must write opposite to his name the number of shares he takes, but he cannot take less than one share.

In the case of a company limited by shares or a company limited by guarantee the memorandum shall also state that the liability of the members is limited.

In the case of a company limited by guarantee the memorandum must comply with the provision of s. 7, sub-s. (1) (v).

In the case of an unlimited company the memorandum should comply with the provisions of s. 8.

Any company already registered as a limited company may re-register under the present Act, and a company already registered as an unlimited company may register itself as a limited company (s. 67).

As to the companies authorized to be registered under the present Act and the provisions therefor see Part VIII of the Act.

Objects of a Company.

The question whether a company should be incorporated as a company limited by shares, or a company limited by guarantee or an unlimited company generally depends upon the object for which it is going to be formed. If the object is to promote commerce, art, science, religion, charity or any other useful object and not to pay any dividend to its members, it may be formed as a limited company under s. 26 of the Act. On registration such a company will enjoy all the privileges of limited companies and be subject to all their obligations except those of using the word "Limited" as a part of its name, of publishing its name and of filing a list of members and directors and managers with the registrar of companies. Such companies are usually registered as companies limited by guarantee. For the fees to be paid for registration of such a company under s. 26 see Table B, II (p. 761 and App. E. (p. 811). Other Companies limited by guarantee are not entitled to these privileges.

As observed in Palmer's Company Law [13th ed. (1929) p. 404] "Companies with unlimited liability are rarely formed now. While limited companies have been increasing by 'leaps and bounds', unlimited companies have dwindled nearly to zero."

Where the object of a company, association or partnership or any individual member thereof is to carry on a business for the acquisition of gain, it must be registered under the present Act or some other Act &c. mentioned in s. 4, if it consists of more than ten persons in the case of a banking business and more than twenty persons in any other case. Otherwise it will be an illegal association with all its risks and disadvantages (see s. 4 and notes, at pp. 49-55).

Generally speaking a limited company is formed for the following purposes :—(1) to carry on a contemplated new business or a number of new businesses; (2) to acquire an existing business; (3) to convert business owned by a single individual or a firm into a limited company; (4) to form a syndicate for the purpose of working a patent, option or concession or developing an infant industry and then to sell it at a profit to a new company promoted by the syndicate or to any other company.

Formation of Companies Limited by Shares.

So that a company may be launched, some person or persons must conceive the idea, give it a practical shape, and take steps to get it registered and try to secure the necessary share capital. The person or persons who do this are called promoters of the company. For the meaning of the term "promoter" and his duties, obligations and liabilities see notes to s. 100 (pp. 273-278).

If the idea is to acquire and carry on an existing business, the promoters should think out in consultation with the vendors the following details and settle them in writing :—(1) the amount of money for which the vendors are willing to sell the business with its goodwill, plant, machinery and all movable and immovable property in connection with the business ; (2) the amount required to set it a-going and to meet the working expenses ; (3) the amount necessary for carrying out urgent improvements ; (4) the authorized share capital with which the company is to be registered ; and (5) the amount of the probable preliminary expenses (as to what are preliminary expenses see p. 261).

Name of a Company.

When all these have been satisfactorily settled a suitable name, under which the company is to be registered, should be selected. Where the goodwill of the business to be acquired is of any value, the name in which it is carried on may be retained with the addition of some other suitable words and "Limited" as the last word.

Where it is necessary to give a new name to the company the provisions of s. 11 should be complied with (see notes, pp. 77-79). For the names which a company is forbidden to take see the new sub-s. (3) of s. 11. After selecting a name it is better to secure the approval of the registrar of companies before the printing of the memorandum of association &c. so that it may not clash with that of a company in existence. But if such a company is in the course of being dissolved, its consent may be obtained to adopt the name (for form of such consent see Form 72, p. 1149).

Agreement with Vendors.

Now it is time to enter into an agreement with the vendors for acquiring the business. Before incorporation of the company this is usually done by the promoters on behalf of the company. Such a contract is valid and specific performance thereof may be enforced against the company, provided that the company has ratified and adopted the contract and that the object clauses of the memorandum of association warrant it [see s. 27, cl. (e) of the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877)]. For form of such an agreement see Form 1 (p. 1090), and for form of adoption thereof see Form 2 (p. 1092).

An agreement to sell a business may also be made with the company after its incorporation (see Form 3, p. 1092).

It should be remembered, however, that whether the agreement is made before or after the incorporation, it is provisional only and not binding on the company until it gets from the registrar the certificate for commencement of business [see s. 103, sub-ss. (2) and (3)].

As to the agreement to issue fully paid shares to vendors see Form 8 at p. 1095.

Memorandum of Association.

The memorandum of association must be printed, divided into paragraphs numbered consecutively and signed by each subscriber (who must add his name, address and description) in the presence of at least one witness who is to attest the signature. The signature of a subscriber cannot be attested by another subscriber. See the new s. 9 and notes.

For the contents of the memorandum of association of a company limited by shares see s. 5 and Form A, p. 773. For the specimen of a complete memorandum with all necessary object clauses in the case of a company formed to purchase an existing business as a going concern see Form 9, pp. 1095-1097, and for that of a company intended to do general business see Form 10, pp. 1098-1100.

(1) Name in the memorandum.

The memorandum should contain, the name of the company with "Limited" as the last word. As regards the selection of the name see p. [5] above. A company may, by passing a special resolution and with the approval of the Government, change its name [see s. 11 (4) and notes at p. 79]. Where a company is, through inadvertence or otherwise, registered with a name identical with or similar to that of an existing company, it may be changed with the consent of the registrar of companies [see s. 11 (2)]. In such cases a fresh certificate of incorporation is to be obtained from the registrar [see s. 11, sub-ss. (5) and (6)].

(2) Province in which the registered office will be situated.

Next, the province in which the registered office is to be situate, e. g., Bengal, Bombay, &c., is to be stated in the memorandum. A company may by passing a special resolution change the registered office from one province to another subject to confirmation by the Court [see s. 12 (1) and notes thereto].

(3) Objects of the company.

Much care and circumspection is necessary in drafting the object clauses. The objects should be lawful and they must not offend against the provisions of the Act [e.g., prohibition of purchasing its own shares and of giving financial assistance in connection with such purchases (s. 54A)], the general law (e.g., running a lottery) or be immoral (e.g., keeping a brothel) or opposed to public policy (e.g., sale of public offices).

The memorandum must state the objects of the company and, except in the case of trading corporations as defined by s. 2A, the territories to which they extend [see s. 6 (1) (iii)].

The objects should be clearly and definitely expressed. It is not enough to say that the object of the company is to carry on any business which it may think profitable, for this defines nothing. In the case of a trading company the trade should be defined and not the various acts which it would be within the powers of the company to do in carrying on the trade. Wide powers taken in general terms will be construed as merely ancillary to the specific objects mentioned in previous clauses. But objects should not be confused with powers; the memorandum should state the objects of the company and not the powers (see pp. 61-62). In this view the power to borrow money need not be taken in the memorandum of association; it is sufficient if the power is taken in the articles of association. But it is safe to take the power in the memorandum, for a company other than a trading or a banking company has no implied power of borrowing (sse pp. 321-323).

In App. K specimens of the main object clauses of various companies are given (see Forms 16-62, pp. 1102 to 1115). These with additions and alterations may be used for drafting the objects clauses of the momorandum of association taking other suitable clauses from Forms 9 and 10 of App. K (see pp. 1102-1115).

Companies are often formed specially for acquiring and taking over the business of persons, firms or other companies or for amalgamating with other companies. For the first object clauses of such companies see Forms 12 to 15 (pp. 1101-1102).

(4) Limitation of liability.

The memorandum should state that the liability of the members is limited. In case a company limited by shares is wound up, a member will not be bound to pay any thing more than the amount unpaid on the shares taken by him [see s. 156, (1) (iv)].

(5) Capital clause in the memorandum.

The memorandum must also state the amount of share capital with which the company is proposed to be registered and the division thereof into shares of a fixed amount. It is not necessary to state anything further. For at any time a company can by passing special resolutions take the powers to issue shares with preferred, deferred or other rights. But where it is intended to issue a particular class of shares with unalterable rights (e.g., the founders' shares), the memorandum should state the number of such shares and the amount of each and should define the rights of such a class. For, if the memorandum defines the rights attached to a particular class of shares, they cannot be varied except with the sanction of the Court in a proceeding under s. 54 or s. 153, unless the memorandum also gives the power to alter such rights (see pp. 69-71). In this connection see the new s. 66A.

The classes into which the shares are divided and their respective rights regarding dividends and voting are more properly stated in the articles of association. Therefore the question of the capital clauses will be discussed under the heading "Articles of Association" post. But as these capital clauses defining the rights &c. of the respective classes of shareholders are generally included in the memorandum of association, forms of such capital clauses are given in App. K (see Forms 66-70, pp. 1146-1148). With the necessary alterations they may be incorporated in the articles of association.

(6) Association and subscription clause.

The association and subscription clause should be in the form given in Form A of the Third Schedule to the Act (p. 773) and each subscriber shall write opposite to his name the number of shares he takes, but he cannot take a fraction of a share. Any person except a minor, a lunatic or a firm in the firm name may be a subscriber to the memorandum of association (see pp. 56 and 58). In the signature the full name should be given. Address and occupation should also be explicitly stated. If the subscriber has no occupation, the fact should be mentioned. There must be at least seven subscribers except in the case of a private company where at least two are required. An agent may sign the memorandum on behalf of his principal where authority in this respect is given by the principal.

The signature must be attested by a person who sees the subscriber sign. If all the subscribers sign in the presence of one person he may attest all the signatures, otherwise different witnesses will be necessary. The signature of a subscriber cannot be attested by himself or by another subscriber. Names, addresses and descriptions of the subscribers and witnesses should be given [see pp. 73-74, Form A of the Third Schedule to the Act (p. 773) and Forms 9 and 10, pp. 1097 and 1100].

Alteration of the memorandum—amendments in ss. 10 and 12 —the new ss. 20 A and 25 A.

A company cannot alter the conditions contained in its memorandum except in the cases, in the mode and to the extent provided in the Act. But by an amendment in s. 10 it has been provided that any provision in the memorandum relating to the appointment of a manager or managing agent and other matters of a like nature, incidental or subsidiary to the main objects of the company, will not be deemed to be such condition. The object of this amendment appears to be to frustrate the designs of such managers, managing agents and secretaries as try to perpetuate their office by inserting clauses to that effect in the memorandum of association (see p. 74).

The memorandum of association can be altered only, (1) as to the change of the registered office from one province to another and (2) with respect to the objects within the limits mentioned in s. 12 by passing special resolution and obtaining the sanction of the Court [see s. 12 including the new clauses (f) and (g) and s. 13 and notes to those two sections at pp. 80 to 84]. A certified copy of the order confirming the alteration with a printed copy of the memorandum as altered should be filed with the registrar within 3 months of the order for registration upon which only the alteration will take effect (see ss. 15 and 16).

The new s. 20A provides that no member shall be bound by an alteration made in the memorandum or articles after the date on which he became a member, if and so far as the alteration requires him to take or subscribe for more shares or in any way increases his liability, unless the member agrees in writing to be bound by the alteration.

The new s. 25A provides that when an alteration is made in the memorandum or articles every copy of the memorandum or articles issued after the date of the alteration shall be in accordance with the alteration, and sub-s. (2) provides penalty for contravention of this provision.

Stamp and fees.

As to the stamp for the memorandum of association see App. L (p. 1197) and as to the fees to be paid to the registrar of companies for registration see Table B, pp. 760-762. The stamp must be affixed before the memorandum is signed.

Articles of Association.

The articles of association contain the regulations of the company. They must not contain anything which is against, or repugnant to, the provisions of the Act, nor should they go beyond the scope of the memorandum of association to which they are subordinate. For their respective functions and other matters relating to the articles see s. 17 and notes thereto.

In the case of a company limited by shares it is not obligatory to register any articles of association. If they are not registered, the provisions of Table A will automatically apply to the company (see s. 18 and notes). A new set of articles for the management of the company may be and often is registered excluding Table A altogether or in part, for the provisions of Table A will apply to a company in so far as its articles do not exclude or modify them (see s. 18).

The articles must be printed, be divided into paragraphs numbered consecutively and signed by the subscribers to the memorandum (who must add their addresses and descriptions) in the manner the memorandum is to be signed [see the amended s. 19 and pp. (7-8) ante].

The articles by numbered clauses should make provisions as to (1) the exclusion, total or partial, of Table A ; (2) definition of important words and phrases; (3) adoption or execution of a preliminary agreement, if any ; (4) capital clauses specifying the different classes into which the share capital of the company will be divided and defining the rights of the respective classes regarding dividends, bonuses, voting and modification of those rights ; (5) allotment of shares ; (6) share certificates ; (7) calls ; (8) forfeiture, surrender and lien ; (9) transfer and transmission of shares ; (10) increase and reduction of capital ; (11) consolidation and sub-division of shares ; (12) borrowing ; (13) general meetings, proceedings thereof and votes of members ; (14) management ; (15) directors, their qualifications, remuneration &c., and board meetings ; (16) dividends, reserve and depreciation funds ; (17) accounts and audit ; (18) common seal ; (19) notices and (20) special provisions in the winding up.

Unless powers are taken in the articles the following things cannot be done :—(1) keeping branch register in the United Kingdom (s. 41) ; (2) issuing share warrants to bearer (s. 43) ; (3) making arrangement for a difference between shareholders in the amounts and times of calls (s. 49) ; (4) accepting amounts on shares, though not called up (s. 49) ; (5) paying dividends in proportion to the amounts paid up on shares (s. 49) ; (6) increasing the share capital by the issue of new shares (s. 50) ; (7) consolidating and dividing the share capital into shares of larger amounts (s. 50) ; (8) converting any paid up shares into stock and re-converting that stock into paid up shares of smaller amounts (s. 50) ; (9) subdividing the shares (s. 50) ; (10) cancelling shares not taken or agreed to be taken (s. 50) ; (11) reducing the share capital (s. 55) ; (12) increasing and reducing the share capital (if any) of a company limited by guarantee (s. 66) ; (13) varying the rights attached to any class of shares (s. 66A) ; (14) rendering the liability of the directors unlimited (s. 71) ; (15) allowing proxies to vote and demand a poll at a general meeting (s. 81) ; (16) providing for the appointment of directors, filling up casual vacancies among them and their qualifications (see ss. 83B, 84 and 85) ; (17) having official seal for use at a place outside British India (s. 91) ; (18) fixing the minimum subscription [s. 101, sub-ss. (1) to (2A) and (7)] ; (19) paying commission for placing shares (s. 105) ; issuing redeemable preference shares (s. 105B) ; (20) paying interest out of capital in certain cases (s. 107) ; (21) closing register of debenture-holders for inspection (s. 125); and (22) converting a private company into a public company (s. 154).

In case any of the foregoing powers are not to be found in the articles of association, powers may be taken by passing special resolution. But it is better to have them in the original articles.

As to articles of association generally see s. 17 and notes thereto. A specimen of the articles of association of a company intended to be managed by managing agents and excluding Table A is given in Form 63 (pp. 1116-1130). For the forms of articles of a company intended to be managed by the directors see Form 64 (pp. 1130-1142) and those of a private company intended to be managed by the governing director see Form 65 (pp. 1142-1146).

Amendments in s. 17.

By the amendments in s. 17 it has been provided by the amending Act of 1936 that the articles of a company shall be deemed to contain regulations identical with or to the same effect as regulations 56, 66, 71, 78, 79, 80, 81, 82, 95, 97, 105, 107, 112, 113, 114, 115 and 116 contained in Table A of the Act. Of these, regulations 78 to 82, both inclusive, will not be deemed to be included in the articles of any private company except one which is the subsidiary company of a public company. It should be noted that regulations 97 and 107 have been amended by the said amending Act and regulations 56 and 116 have been amended by the amending Act II of 1938. It has been further provided that regulation 107 shall be deemed to require that a statement of the reasons why of the whole amount of any item of expenditure which may in fairness be distributed over several years, only a portion is charged against the income of the year, shall be shown in the profit and loss account, unless the company in general meeting shall determine otherwise. As to the nature of the contents of these regulations see pp. 87-89.

As the regulations mentioned in the last paragraph have been made compulsory, it is better to insert them in the articles of companies to be formed after the commencement of the amending Act.

As to other such compulsory provisions in the articles see sub-s (1) of the new s. 79 relating to the proceedings of a general meeting. These also should be kept in view in framing the articles of association. The provisions mentioned in sub-s. (2) of s. 79 shall have effect in so far as the articles of the company do not make other provisions in that behalf. This also should be kept in view in framing the articles of a company.

Alteration of Articles.

Subject to the provisions of the Act and to the conditions contained in the memorandum of association, a company can alter or add to its articles (s. 20). The only other limitations are that they must be altered in good faith and not to commit fraud on or to take an unfair advantage over a minority of shareholders. For other matters in connection with such alteration see notes to s. 20 at pp. 91-95.

As to the provisions of ss. 20A and 25A relating to the alterations of articles see p. [8], ante.

Capital clauses in the articles.

Where it is intended that the shares should be divided into several classes, e.g., preference, pre-preference, or A preference, B preference, A ordinary, B ordinary, deferred, founders' or management shares, with special rights, privileges and conditions attached to them, the provisions to that effect should be made in the articles of association. For forms of such capital clauses see Forms 66 to 70 in App. K (pp. 1146-1148) which may be used with necessary modifications.

For a discussion as to the rights &c. of these different classes of shareholders see pp. 69 to 71 and 663-666.

Stamp.

As to the stamp on the articles of association see App. L (p. 1192). The stamp must be affixed before the articles are signed.

Consent and Qualification of Directors.

Every company except a private company must have at least three directors [see the new sub-s. (1) of s. 83A]. The promoters should settle the number, qualification and remuneration of the directors and approach suitable persons for their consent. If it is thought expedient to appoint the directors by the articles, their consent in writing signed by themselves or by their respective agents authorized in writing should be obtained. Where it is provided in the articles that a director must have certain number of qualification shares, he must either have subscribed for those shares in the memorandum of association or signed a contract to take from the company and pay for the qualification shares and filed the same with the registrar or taken from the company and paid for or agreed to pay for his qualification shares or made and filed with the registrar an affidavit to the effect that a number of shares not less than his qualification is registered in his name (see the amended s. 84). This last provision makes it possible, it is apprehended, to acquire his qualification shares, if he can so secure it, without paying for them in cash. A list of persons who have thus consented to be directors of the company should also be prepared and filed with the registrar (see s. 84 and notes at pp. 223-224). S. 84 does not however apply to a private company or a company which was a private company before becoming a public company [see sub-s. (3) of s. 84].

For the form of directors' consent see Form IX, App. E, pp. 822-823, for that of contract to take the qualification shares see Form XI, App. E, p. 824 and that of the list of directors who have thus consented see Form X, App. E, p. 823.

Registration.

For registration of a company the following documents should be filed with the registrar of companies for the province in which the registered office is to be situate, namely :—

1. The memorandum and the articles of association (if articles are prepared) duly signed (in the case of a private company by two and in any other case by seven subscribers at least) and properly attested as stated above and stamped.

2. Statutory declaration under s. 24(2) of an advocate or attorney of a High Court (for meaning of High Court see p. 45), or of a director, manager or secretary of the company who has been named as such in the articles (see Form I, App. E, pp. 814-815).

3. Directors' consent under s. 84 (see Form IX, App. E, pp. 822-823).

4. Agreement by directors to take qualification shares under s. 84 (see Form XI, App. E, p. 824), if the directors have not signed the memorandum for the number of qualification shares.

5. List of directors who have thus consented (s. 84). For form see Form X, App. E, p. 823.

Along with these proper fees for registration (see Table B, pp. 760-762) should be paid.

Upon registration the registrar will give a certificate of incorporation and from the date of incorporation, as mentioned in the certificate, the subscribers and other persons, who subsequently become members, form a body corporate having an altogether separate existence, perpetual succession and a common seal (see s. 23 and notes, pp. 100-104).

The memorandum and articles upon registration become a contract binding the company and the members, their heirs and legal representatives to observe all the provisions thereof (see s. 21 and notes at pp. 96-99).

A member is entitled, on payment of one rupee or such less sum as may be prescribed in the articles, to a copy of the memorandum and also of the articles, if articles are registered. The copy must be sent within 14 days of the request (see the amended s. 25).

Situation of Registered Office and Changes therein.

The new s. 72 provides that a company must have a registered office as from the day on which it begins to carry on business or as from the 28th day after the date of incorporation whichever is the earlier, for a private company is entitled to commence business as soon as it is incorporated.

In the case of all companies, including a private company, notice of the situation of the registered office and of any change therein must be given within 28 days after their incorporation, or of the change, to the registrar (see Form VI at p. 818 and Form 73 at p. 1150). The inclusion in the annual return of the statement as to the address of the registered office will not satisfy the obligation imposed by s. 72. For the consequences of contravention of these provisions see sub-s. (6) of s. 72.

Where in pursuance of s. 41 a company keeps a British register of members, it shall within one month from the date of opening such register file with the registrar a notice of situation of the office where such register is kept and any change or discontinuance thereof. For form of such notice see Form II at p. 815.

Common Seal and Publication of Name &c.

A company must get its common seal prepared in which its name is engraven in legible characters [s. 73 (b)]. It is better to have one the impressions from which may be obtained by lever movements. For ordinary purposes, in addition, rubber stamps may be used, one containing the name of the company and others containing words and phrases in daily use in the company's transactions and correspondence, such as "For & on behalf of the......Limited," "copied," "cancelled," "& Co." (for the purpose of crossing a cheque) &c., &c.

A company should also have its name displayed in a conspicuous position on the outside of its registered office as well as other places where its business is carried on, as provided in cl. (a) of s. 73. It should further have its name mentioned (preferably printed) in legible English characters in all bill-heads, letter paper, notices, advertisements and other official publications of the company, as well as on all bills of exchange, hundis, promissory notes, endorsements, cheques and orders for money and goods, bills of parcels, invoices, receipts and letters of credit of the company (s. 74).

Where any notice, advertisement, &c. contain a statement of the authorized capital of the company they should show in equally prominent position and equally conspicuous characters the amount of capital which has been subscribed and the amount paid up (s. 75).

As to the proof of seal, power to affix it and the documents which require a seal see pp. 119-120 and 724, and as to the form of affixing seal and that of the register of documents sealed see Forms 83 and 84 at pp. 1152 and 1153 respectively.

Contracts.

Contracts which are required to be made in writing may be made on behalf of a company in writing signed by any person acting under its authority, express or implied, and may in the same manner be varied and discharged. Contracts which may be made by parol only may be made by parol on behalf of the company by any person acting under its authority, express or implied, and may in the same manner be varied or discharged (see s. 88 and notes at pp. 239-241). A bill of exchange, hundi or promissory note, if made, drawn, accepted or endorsed on behalf of a company by any person acting under its authority, express or implied, will bind the company, provided the company, by its constitution, has express or implied power to make, accept, indorse or issue bills of exchange, promissory notes and other negotiable instruments (see s. 89 and notes at pp. 241-243). The directors or other officers who act for the company in these matters should take care that it is clearly expressed to be done for and on behalf of the company, otherwise they may find themselves personally liable (see notes at pp. 241-242).

Every manager or other agent of a company other than a private company, not being the subsidiary company of a public company, who enters into a contract for or on behalf of the company in which contract the company is an undisclosed principal must, at the time of entering into the contract, make a memorandum in writing of the terms of the contract and specify therein the person with whom it has been made. The manager or agent must immediately deliver the memorandum to the company to be filed and laid before the next board meeting and send copies to the directors, otherwise the contract will be void as against the company. See the amended s. 91D. As to the penalty for default see s. 91D (3).

Ordinarily contracts on behalf of a company do not require to be made under its common seal which is made use of on special occasions such as sealing the share certificate, power of attorney, &c.

As to the execution of deeds abroad and power for a company to have official seal for use abroad see ss. 90 (amended) and 91.

Books and Accounts.

Every company must cause to be kept proper books of account with respect to (a) all receipts and expenditures of money, (b) all sales and purchases of goods, and (c) the assests and liabilities of the company [sub-s. (1) of s. 130]. The books of account must be kept at the company's registered office or at such other place as the directors think fit. They shall be open to inspection by the directors during the business hours [sub-s. (2)]. As regards the books of account of branch offices see sub-s. (3) of the new s. 130. For the consequence of default by the managing agent, his partners and others and the directors see sub-s. (4) of the new s. 130.

Statement by Banking and some other Companies.

A banking company, an insurance company, or a deposit, provident or benefit society, must, before it commences business and also on the first Mondays in February and August every year during which it carries on business, make a statement in Form G in the Third Schedule (see p. 792). A copy of the statement together with a copy of the last audited balance-sheet laid before the members should be displayed and, until the display of the next following statement, kept displayed in a conspicuous place at the registered office of the company, and at every branch office or place where the business of the company is carried on. Every member and creditor of the company will be entitled to a copy of the statement on payment of a sum not exceeding 8 as. (amended s. 136). As to the penalty for default in complying with the above requirements see s. 136 (4).

Directors.

Where the directors have not been named in the articles and subject to the provision (if any) for the appoinment of directors therein, the subscribers of the memorandum of association shall be deemed to be the first directors of the company until the directors are appointed in a general meeting (s. 83 B) and any casual vacancy among them may be filled up by the directors subject to the provisions of s. 83 B (iii).

Where the articles provide, as in reg. 68 of Table A, that the number of the directors and the names of the first directors shall be determined by the subscribers of the memorandum of association, they should forthwith proceed to fix the number of and to appoint the directors, for the names of the directors or proposed directors are to be given in the prospectus [s. 93 (1) (c)] or the statement in lieu of prospectus [s. 98 (1)]. This may be done either at a meeting of the subscribers called for this purpose or by a statement in Form 74, App. K, p. 1150.

If the directors are required to hold qualification shares, a director must obtain them within two months after his appointment or such shorter time as may be fixed by the articles (s. 85), and in default he will cease to be a director and shall be incapable of being re-appointed until he has obtained the qualification [see the new s. 86 I (1) (a)]. After he has thus ceased to be a director if he acts as such, he will be liable to the penalty provided in s. 85 (2). But the acts of a director will be valid notwithstanding any defect that may afterwards be discovered in his appointment or qualification (s. 86).

The company should keep a register of its directors and managers and managing agents (see the new s. 87 and Form XII, App. E, pp. 824-825) and file with the registrar a copy thereof and from time to time file with the registrar notice of any change among the directors and managers and managing agents (Form XII, above). For consequences of default see s. 87 (5).

The new s. 87 provides that the company shall within 14 days from the date of appointment of or any change in the directors, managers and managing agents send to the registrar a return and notification of change in Form XII (see pp. 824-825). It further provides that the register to be kept under this section shall be open to the inspection of any member without charge and of any other person on payment of one rupee or such less sum as the company may impose for each inspection. As to the penalty for default see sub-s (4) of s. 87. In case of refusal the Court may direct an immediate inspection [see sub-s. (5) of s. 87].

S. 91A (1) provides for the disclosure of a director's interest in any contract or arrangement entered into with the company at the meeting of directors. Sub-s. (2) of that section mentions the penalty for contravention of the above provision.

As regards the position, powers, duties, obligations and liabilities of directors see notes at pp. 36, 209-223, 244-250, 274-283, 583-590, 594-602, 650-658, 711-719 and 748-749.

In a limited company the memorandum of association may provide that the liability of the directors or any of the directors will be unlimited. In such a case notice is to be given to the director before he accepts the office that his liability will be unlimited, and in default the proposer will be liable to penalty (see s. 70). Where the memorandum does not contain the provision, it may be inserted therein by special resolution, if so authorized by the articles (s. 71). The power in the articles may be taken by altering it under s. 20. Where the memorandum is so altered by special resolution, a copy thereof should be embodied in or annexed to every copy of the memorandum issued after the date of alteration (see s. 25A).

New Provisions relating to Directors.

The amended s. 83A provides that except in the case of a private company which is not subsidiary company of a public company, every company shall have at least three directors.

The amended s. 83B provides that except in the case of a private company not less than two-thirds of the whole number of directors shall be persons whose period of office is liable to determination by retirement in rotation. This restriction will not however apply to a company incorporated before 15th January, 1937 where by virtue of articles of such a company the number of directors falls below the two-thirds proportion. It is doubtful if the company can exempt itself from the operation of this section by altering its articles after the above-mentioned date. The new s. 87-I provides that notwithstanding anything contained in the articles of a company other than a private company the directors, if any, appointed by the managing agent shall not exceed in number one-third of the whole number of directors.

As regards the obligation of a director to take his qualification shares see the amended s. 84 which is a reproduction of s. 140 of the English Act of 1929. See also p. [11] ante.

The new s. 86A following s. 142 of the English Act of 1929 provides heavy punishment for an undischarged insolvent person acting as a director, managing agent or manager of a company including one incorporated outside British India which has an established business within British India.

The new s. 86B following s. 151 of the English Act of 1929 prohibits assignment of office by a director or manager (where the articles or an agreement empower them to do so) except with the sanction of a special resolution. The proviso and explanation regarding the provision of alternate directors are not however in the English Act.

The new s. 86C which is a reproduction of s. 152 of the English Act of 1929 provides that any provisions in the articles, contract or otherwise for exempting any director, manager, officer or auditor from, or indemnifying him against, any liability which by virtue of any rule of law would otherwise attach to him in respect of any negligence, default, breach of duty or breach of trust shall be void. In respect of any such provision which is in force on the 15th January, 1937 this section had effect only on the expiration of six months from that date. But if a judgment is given in favour of such a person or if he is acquitted or a relief is granted to him under s. 281 the company may indemnify him.

The new s. 86D provides that no company, except a private company which is not a subsidiary company of a public company and except a banking company, shall not make any loan or guarantee any loan made to a director or to a firm of which such director is a partner or to a private company of which such director is a director or member. As to the punishment for contravention of this provision and as to the special liability see sub-s. (2) of this section.

The new s. 86E prohibits a director or a firm or a private company of which a director is a partner or a director, from holding any other office of profit than that of a managing director, manager, legal or technical adviser, banker, or managing agent. There is a saving in the proviso for a director elected or appointed before 15th January, 1937 in respect of an office of profit held by him on that date.

The new s. 86F prohibits a director or the firm of which he is a partner or any partner of such firm, or the private company of which he is a director or member, from entering into any contract for sale, purchase or supply of goods or materials with the company except with the consent of the directors thereof. This restriction will not however apply to such contracts entered into before 15th January, 1937.

The new section 86G makes provision for removal of a director whose period of office is liable to determination by retirement in rotation, by an extraordinary resolution and for appointment of another person in his stead by an ordinary resolution. The section will not however apply to directors elected or appointed before 15th January, 1937.

The new s. 86H provides that except with the consent of a general meeting, the directors of a public company or of a subsidiary company of a public company shall not (a) sell or dispose of the undertaking of the company, or (b) remit any debt due by a director.

The new s. 86-I states the events on the happening of which the office of a director shall be vacated. A company may of course specify in its articles any other ground for vacation of a director's office.

The new sub-s. (3) of s. 91A requires that every company must keep a register in which the particulars of all contracts or arrangements made with the company in which a director is interested should be entered and that the register shall be open to inspection by any member of the company. This last provision has been rightly characterised by the Bengal Chamber of Commerce as highly objectionable, as disclosure of such particulars may be prejudical to the interests of the company. Sub-s. (4) of that section provides penalty for contravention of this provision.

The amended s. 91B prohibits voting by an interested director in respect of the contract or arrangement in which he is interested directly or indirectly. This prohibition does not apply to the directors of a private company, but shall apply to one which is a subsidiary company of a public company in respect of contracts or arrangements with any person other than the holding company. For the definition of a subsidiary company see the new sub-s. (2) of s. 2.

For the statements relating to directors to be made in prospectus see the amended s. 93 and those to be made in the statement in lieu of prospectus see Forms I & II at pp. 762-770.

Under the new s. 130 the directors should see that proper books of account are kept with respect to (a) all sums of money received and expended by the company, (b) all sales and purchases of goods by the company and (c) the assets and liabilities of the company. For default in complying with this provision the managing agents, where the company is managed by them, and in other cases the directors will be liable to a fine not exceeding one thousand rupees.

Under the new sub-s. (1) of s. 131 it is the duty of the directors to lay before the company in general meeting every year a balance sheet and profit and loss account &c. mentioned in that sub-section. The new s. 131A provides that the directors shall make out and attach to every balance sheet a report with respect to the company's affairs and other matters mentioned therein. As to the penalty for default see sub-s. (3) thereof.

The new sub-s. (3) of s. 132 provides that the profit and loss account must include particulars showing the total of the amount paid whether as fees, percentages or otherwise to the directors as remuneration for their services. It further provides that if any director is by virtue of nomination, whether direct or indirect, of the company, a director of any other company, any remuneration or other emoluments received by him for his own use, whether as director of, or otherwise in connection with the management of, that other company, must be shown in a footnote to the profit and loss account.

The new s. 141A provides that if a director is convicted as the result of a prosecution initiated under that section upon a report under s. 138 he shall not, without the leave of the Court, be a director of or in any way concerned in or take part in the management of a company for five years from the date of such conviction. An application by a director, manager or other officer of a company for leave to act as a director or to take part in the management of the company under s. 141A must be made on notice to the company and the Advocate General or Public Prosecutor, as the case may be (Rule 39 at p. 863).

The new s. 177A provides that a statement as to the affairs of the company, verified by one or more persons who are directors, must be submitted to the official liquidator, provisional or otherwise, and if the liquidator so directs the statement should be submitted and verified by persons who have been directors of the company. As to the penalty for default see sub s. (5) of that section.

Under the new s. 207, where it is proposed to wind up a company voluntarily the directors are to make a declaratian of solvency verified by an affidavit for the purpose of a members' voluntary winding up. The new s. 209A provides that in a creditors' voluntary winding up the directors must cause a full statement of the position of the company's affairs together with a list of the creditors of the company and the estimated amount of their claims to be laid before the creditors' meeting which is to be presided over by one of the directors [see sub-s. (3)]. As to the consequences of default see sub-s. (6) of s. 209A.

By the new s. 237 a machinery has been provided for prosecuting present or past directors, if it appears to the Court in the course of a winding up by or subject to the supervision of the Court or to the liquidator in a voluntary winding up that they have been guilty of any offence in relation to the company for which they are criminally liable.

A considerable number of provisions has been introduced by the new s. 138A for punishing present or past directors of a company which at the time of the commission of the alleged offence is being wound up in any way or is subsequently ordered to be wound up or subsequently passes a resolution for voluntary winding up, if they do any act or omission mentioned in sub-s. (1) or (2) of that section.

Punishment is also provided in the new s. 282A for wrongfully obtaining possession of the company's property by a director, for wrongfully withholding possession and for misapplication of such property by a director. S. 282B provides penalty for misapplication by directors of the securities and provident funds of the employees of the company.

For a list of offences under the Act see App. H. (pp. 1080-1086), for a list of documents &c. to be filed with the registrar see App. I (pp. 1087-1088) and for a list of books &c. to be kept under the Act see App. J. (p. 1089).

It should be remembered that "director" includes any person occupying the position of a director by whatever name called [see cl. (5) of sub-s. (1) of s.2] and that the word "officer" includes a director [see s. 2 (1), (11)]. See also s. 2 (1) (9) & (9A).

As to the statements regarding directors to be made in a statutory report see the new s. 77.

Board Meetings.

In accordance with the provisions of the articles regarding the board meetings and proceedings thereat the directors should hold those meetings. A notice should be issued to the directors appointing the date, time and place of the meeting and the subjects for discussion. This notice may be signed by a director or the secretary (if any) or by the managing agents if they are empowered by the articles to call such meetings. As to the form of the notice see Form 75, App. K, p. 1150.

Soon after the registration of the company and the appointment of the directors urgent and inportant subjects should be brought before the board meeting, as for example, approval of the company's seal, custody of the keys thereof, appointment of chairman and managing director, appointment of bankers, auditors and secretary, adoption or approval of vendor's agreement (if any), quorum of board meetings, appointment of committees for dealing with particular matters, and delegation of authority to some of the directors, e.g., for sealing share certificates, signing cheques, settling the prospectus &c., &c.

The directors may, if so authorized by the articles, as in Table A (see reg. 72), appoint one of their body to the office of managing director or manager. In such a case, also in the case of appointment of a secretary or managing agents, agreements should be entered into by the company with such managing director, secretary or managing agents defining their duties, remunerations, &c. As to the forms of such agreements see Forms 6 and 7 of App. K (pp. 1093-1095).

For the form of agenda of board meetings see Form 77, App. K at p. 1151. Before the meeting is held the secretary should prepare typed copies of the agenda paper keeping spaces for the names of the directors, and the chairman or the secretary's notes (see App. K, Form 77, p. 1151).

The secretary should take notes on the agenda paper of the proceedings and resolutions of the meeting and get them initialled by the chairman of the meeting. From these notes he will be able to write the minutes of the meeting in the minute book for board meetings. See s. 83 and notes thereto at pp. 207-208, where the importance of these minutes and the position and duties of the secretary have been discussed.

These minutes are ordinarily read and approved at the next meeting and signed by the chairman. For form of the minutes see Form 78, App. K at pp. 1151-1152. As to the specimens of resolutions see Forms 79 to 82 at p. 1152.

A register of board meetings held should be kept in Form 76 (p. 1151).

Disclosure of director's interest in a contract.

Every director who is directly or indirectly interested in any contract or arrangement with the company must disclose the nature of this interest at the first meeting of directors after the acquisition of his interest (see s. 91A and notes thereto) and he must not vote on any such contract or arrangement (s. 91B and notes thereto). A register must be kept in which particulars of all such contracts &c. should be entered [see the new sub-s. (3) of s. 91A]. As to the consequences of default see sub-s. (4) thereof.

In the case of contract for the appointment of a manager or managing agent of the company in which contract a director is directly or indirectly concerned or interested or in the case of variation of any such existing contract, a memorandum of the interest of the director and an abstract of the contract of variation must be sent to every member of the company and the contract shall be open to inspection of any member [s. 91C].

New Provisions relating to Managing Agents and Managers.

The expression "managing agent" has for the first time been defined by the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936 [see cl. 9A, sub-s. (1) of s. 2]. The word "manager" was of course defined by the original Act (see p. 37), but that was no definition at all. The aforesaid amending Act has also put in a new definition of the word [see the new cl. (9) of sub-s.

(1) of s. 2]. For the distinction between a "manager" and a "managing agent" see p. 37.

The statutory report of a company must state the names, addresses and descriptions of the managing agents and managers, the arrears, if any, due on calls from them as well as from the directors and the particulars of any commission or brokerage paid or to be paid in connection with the issue or sale of shares to any director, managing agent or manager or a partner of the managing agent, if the managing agent is a firm or, if the managing agent is a private company, a director thereof [see s. 77 (3) (d), (g) and (h)].

Hitherto, if the articles so provided, the managing agents could nominate any number of directors who were not subject to retirement by rotation. But the new sub-s. (2) of s. 83B now provides that in the case of a public company incorporated after 15th January, 1937 not less than two-thirds of the whole number of directors must be persons whose period of office is liable to determination at any time by retirement in rotation. See also s. 87-I.

The new s. 86A provides that if any person being an undischarged insolvent acts as managing agent or manager, he shall be liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years or to a fine not exceeding one thousand rupees or to both.

A managing agent shall not be able to transfer his office unless the transfer is approved by the company in general meeting [see s. 87B (c)], but an assignment of his office by a manager shall be of no effect unless and until it is approved by a special resolution [see s. 86B]. It is rather difficult to appreciate the reason for this distinction and common sense suggests that the distinction, if one was necessary, should have been the other way about.

S. 86C enacts that save as provided in that section any provision in the articles or a contract or otherwise for exempting any director, manager or officer [which includes a managing agent—see s. 2 (1) (11)] or auditor from indemnifying him against any liability which by virtue of any rule of law would otherwise attach to him in respect of any negligence, default, breach of duty or breach of trust in relation to the company.

Save in the case of a private company which is not the subsidiary company of a public company, no managing agent shall, after 15th January, 1937, be appointed to hold office for a term of more than 20 years at a time; and a managing agent who has been appointed previous to that date shall not hold office after the expiry of 20 years from the 15th January, 1937 unless then re-appointed or unless re-appointed before the expiry of the said 20 years. A managing agent whose office is terminated in accordance with the above provisions shall be entitled to a charge upon the assets of the company by way of indemnity, subject to existing charges and encumbrances, if any. The termination of the office shall not take effect until all moneys payable to the managing agent for loans made to or remuneration due up to the date of such termination are paid (see s. 87A).

If a managing agent, or a member of his firm or if the managing agent is a company, a director of or an officer holding from it a general power of attorney, is convicted of a non-bailable offence in relation to the affairs of the company of which he is a managing agent, he shall be liable to removal from his office by a resolution of the company notwithstanding any thing to the contrary in the articles or agreement [see s. 87B (a)]. The office of a managing agent shall be vacated if he is adjudged insolvent [s. 87B (b)]. A charge or assignment of his remuneration or any part thereof shall be void as against the company [s. 87B (d)]. Upon a winding up of the company the contract of management shall be determined without prejudice however to his right to recover any moneys recoverable from the company, provided that where the Court finds that the winding up is due to the negligence or default of the managing agent himself, he shall not get any compensation for the premature termination of his contract of management [s. 87B (e)]. Except in the case of the appointment of a company's first managing agent prior to the issue of the prospectus or statement in lieu of prospectus where the terms of the appointment are there set forth, the appointment of a managing agent, his removal, and variation of his contract of management made after 15th January, 1937 shall not be valid unless approved by a resolution of the company [see s. 87B (f)].

Where a company appoints a managing agent after 15th January, 1937, his remuneration shall be a sum based on a fixed percentage of the net annual profits of the company, with a provision for a minimum payment in the case of absence or inadequacy of profits, together with an office allowance to be defined in the agreement of management. Any other form of or additional remuneration shall not be binding on the company unless sanctioned by a special resolution [see s. 87C]. This provision does not apply to a private company except one which is the subsidiary company of a public company or to an insurance company [s. 87C (4)]. For the meaning of the expression "net profits" see sub-s. (3) of s. 87C.

Except in the case of a private company which is not the subsidiary company of a public company, no company must make to its managing agent or to his partner or to a member or director of his private company where the managing agent is a firm or a private company, any loan out of the company's moneys or guarantee any loan made to the managing agent. But this will not prevent the managing agent from holding any credit in a current account maintained subject to the limits approved by the board of directors for the purpose of the company's business [see s. 87D (1) & (2)]. As to the penalty for contravention of this provision see s. 87D (3).

Sub-s. (5) of s. 87D provides that after 15th January, 1937, except with the consent of three-fourths of the directors present and entitled to vote on the resolution, a managing agent or the firm of which he is a partner, or any partner of such firm, or, if the managing agent is a private company, a member or director thereof shall not enter into any contract for the sale, purchase or supply of goods and materials with the company.

No company incorporated after 15th January, 1937 shall make any loan or guarantee any loan made to any company under the management of the same managing agent; and no company shall, after the expiry of 6 months from the 15th January, 1937, except by way of renewal of an existing loan or guarantee given, make any loan to or guarantee any loan made to any such company. But these restrictions will not apply to loans made to or guarantees given by a company to or on behalf of a company under its own management or its subsidiary companies [see s. 87E (1)]. As to the penalty for contravention of these provisions see sub-s. (2) of s. 87E.

S. 87F provides that a company, other than an investment company (that is to say, a company whose principal business is the acquisition and holding of shares, stocks, debentures or other securities), shall not purchase shares or debentures of any company under the management of the same managing agent, unless the purchase has been previously approved by a unanimous decision of the board of directors of the purchasing company.

S. 87G prohibits a managing agent from issuing debentures, and except with the authority of the directors and within the limits fixed by them it prohibits the managing agent from investing the funds of the company. Any delegation of any such power by a company to its managing agent shall be void (see s. 87G).

By s. 87H a managing agent is debarred from engaging on his own account in any business which is of the same nature as and directly competes with the business carried on by a company under his management or by a subsidiary company of such company.

Except in the case of a private company the managing agent shall not, after the 15th January, 1937, be able to appoint more than one-third of the whole number of directors notwithstanding any such power given to the managing agent in the articles of the company (s. 87-I).

The amended s. 91C provides that where a company enters into a contract for the appointment of a manager or managing agent in which contract any director is directly or indirectly concerned or interested or varies any such existing contract, the company must within 21 days send to every member an abstract of the terms of such contract or variation together with a memorandum indicating the nature of the director's interest therein, and that the contract shall be open to inspection by the members. As to the consequences of default see sub-s. (2) of s. 91C.

As the managing agent is an agent of the company, he should comply with the provisions of s. 91D if the company is not a private company (other than the subsidiary company of a public company).

For the statements to be made in the prospectus relating to the managing agent see the amended s. 93, and for such statements to be made in the statement in lieu of prospectus see Forms I and II in the Second Schedule at pp. 762-770.

As to the obligation of the managing agents and managers to keep books of account and the consequences of default see the new s. 130.

As the word "officer" includes managing agents [see s. 2 (1) (11)], if he is convicted as the result of a prosecution initiated under s. 141A for an offence in relation to the company, he will not be able, it is apprehended, without the leave of the Court, to be the managing agent of or directly or indirectly be concerned in or take part in the management of any company for 5 years from the date of his conviction [see s. 141A (4)]. As to the application for leave to the Court under this section see Rule 39 at p. 863.

As to the obligation of a managing agent to submit to the official liquidator, provisional or otherwise, a statement as to the affairs of the company and the consequences of default, see s. 177A.

Following the provisions of s. 277 of the English Act of 1929 a machinery has been provided in the new s. 237 for the prosecution of any present or past managing agent, among others, who has been guilty of any offence in relation to the company for which he is criminally liable.

Following s. 271 of the above English Act of 1929 a considerable number of new and serious offences have been created by s. 238A for past or present managing agents, directors, managers and other officers in relation to a company which is being wound up in any of the three modes or is subsequently wound up. These offences are punishable with imprisonment for 2 years or 5 years (see s. 238A).

As to the punishment for wrongfully possessing, wrongfully withholding possession of and misapplying property of a company by its managing agent, director, manager or other officer or employee see s. 282A, and as to the punishment for making default in depositing the securities of employees of the company in a scheduled bank or making default in investing the provident fund moneys of such employees as directed in sub-s. (2) of s. 282B, see sub-s. (5) of that section.

For a list of offences under the Act see App. H, (pp. 1080-1086), for a list of documents &c. to be filed with the registrar see App. I pp. 1087-1088 and for a list of books &c. to be kept under the Act see App. J. (p. 1089).

It should be remembered in this connection that the word "officer" includes a managing agent [see s. 2 (1)(11)] and the word "director" includes any person occupying the position of a director by whatever name called. So a managing agent may be liable as a director or manager and vice versa if he occupies such a position [see s. 2 (1)(5)(9) & (9A)].

After the expiry of 2 years from 15th January, 1937 no banking company can be managed by a managing agent other than another banking company (see s. 277H). For the consequences of contravention see sub-s. (4) of s. 277L.

Prospectus.

Great care and skill are required in drafting a prospectus by which share capital is raised for the company. It should be attractive but at the same time it should not contain misrepresentation of any material fact or any deceptive, misleading or ambiguous statement. The prospectus must comply with the provisions of ss. 92 and 93, and conditions as to waiver of compliance thereof and as to notice of any contract &c. not specifically referred to in the prospectus are void (s. 96). In drafting a prospectus the new provisions introduced in s. 93 (shown in italics) by the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936 should be carefully studied and complied with. For the consequences of default in complying with any of the provisions of s. 93 see the amended s. 97.

The prospectus should contain a copy of the memorandum of association except where it is published as a newspaper advertisement. A form of application for shares should always be given [see s. 96 (2)]. A skeleton prospectus is given in Form 88 at pp. 1155-1157, App. K. As to the applications for shares see Forms 89 and 90 at pp. 1157-1158.

A copy of the prospectus is to be dated and signed by every person who is named therein as a director or proposed director or by his agent authorized in writing. This is to be filed with the registrar for registration on or before the date of its publication. If a prospectus is issued without such a copy being so filed, the persons who are parties to the prospectus shall be liable to a penalty (see s. 92). The date of the prospectus will be taken as the date of its publication unless the contrary is proved.

Where a prospectus invites persons to subscribe for shares in or debentures of the company, a director, promoter or any other person who has authorized the issue of the prospectus will be liable for any misleading or untrue statement therein to all persons for compensation or damages who subscribe for the shares or debentures on the faith of the prospectus (see s. 100 and notes at pp. 272-283). They can escape liability only if they can prove want of knowledge or honest mistake of fact or that the non-compliance or contravention was in respect of matters which were immaterial (see the amended s. 97).

As to what is a prospectus and what will be regarded as such see notes at pp. 40-41 and 251-252; and as to the meaning of the word "vendor" see ss. 95 and 96.

Where there is a misrepresentation or concealment of a material fact in a prospectus the following remedies are open to the allottee: (1) rescission of the contract to take shares; (2) defence taken in an action for call; (3) rectification of the register of members; (4) damages in an action of deceit; (5) damages under s. 100; and (6) criminal proceedings (see pp. 251-254).

It sometimes happens that a company allots its shares or debentures to somebody with a view that the whole or part of those shares or debentures may subsequently be offered for sale to the public. Following s. 38 of the English Act of 1929 it has been provided in the new s. 98A that any document by which the offer for sale to the public is made shall for all purposes be deemed to be a prospectus issued by the company and as such must comply with all the provisions relating to a prospectus issued by the company. It will be presumed that an allotment or agreement to allot shares and debentures was made with a view to those being offered for sale to the public, if it is shown (a) that an offer of the shares or debentures or any of them for sale to the public was made within 6 months after the allotment or agreement to allot or (b) that on the date when the offer was made the whole of the consideration to be received by the company in respect of them had not been so received.

S. 97 will apply to the person or persons making the offer as though they were persons named in a prospectus as directors of a company and the provisions of s. 93 will have effect as if it required a prospectus to state the additional particulars mentioned in cluses (a) and (b) of sub-s. (3) of s. 98A. See also sub-s. (4) of that section.

Statement in Lieu of Prospectus.

A company which does not issue a prospectus must not allot any of its shares or debentures before it has filed with the registrar a statement in lieu of prospectus giving most of the particulars required to be given in a prospectus, in the form given in Forms I and II in the Second Schedule of the Act (see pp. 762-770). The statement is to be signed, as in the case of a prospectus, by every person who is named therein as a director or a proposed director or by his agent authorized in writing (s. 98).

The terms of any contract referred to in the prospectus or statement in lieu of prospectus cannot be varied except with the approval of the company in general meeting (s. 99).

Prospectus offering Debentures for Subscription.

The word "prospectus" means any prospectus, notice, circular, advertisement or other invitation offering to the public for subscription any shares or debentures of a company [s. 2 (1) (10)]. So when a prospectus is sought to be issued offering debentures for subscription, the prospectus thereof should comply with the requirements of ss. 92, 93 and 98.

For forms of such a prospectus, application, allotment and transfer of debentures and the debenture itself see Forms 139, 140, 141, 142 and 143 respectively printed at pp. 1184-1189.

Underwriting.

For avoiding or minimising the risk of failure of an issue of shares or debentures of a company it is usual to make arrangement for underwriting them before issuing the prospectus. No allotment of shares can be made unless the minimum amount, fixed in the memorandum or articles and mentioned in the prospectus, has been subscribed and the application money (not less than 5 p. c. of the amount of the share) received by the company in cash within 180 days (roughly 6 months) after the first issue of the prospectus. In such a case all moneys received from applicants for shares shall have to be returned (s. 101). In the case of the first allotment of share capital of a company which does not issue any invitation to the public to subscribe for its shares, the company cannot go to allotment unless the minimum amout mentioned above and named in the statement in lieu of prospectus has been subscribed and the application money (not less than 5 per cent. of the amount of the shares) paid in cash [see s. 101 (7)]. For this reason also it is advisable to secure underwriters for the whole or at least a substantial portion of the issue.

The underwriter writes a letter to the promoters or directors of the company agreeing to underwrite a specified amount of the issue on the footing that he is only bound to take up his rateable proportion of what the public does not subscribe (see Forms 85 and 86 at pp. 1153-1154). An underwriter usually procures sub-underwriters on similar conditions (for sub-underwriting letter see Form 87 at pp. 1154-1155). An underwriting letter, when accepted, ripens into a contract. As to what "underwriting" is and the obligations of an underwriter see pp. 304-306.

Payment of commission and brokerage.

The responsibilities of an underwriter are undertaken in consideration of a commission the payment of which must have been authorized by the articles and disclosed in the prospectus (s. 105). Reproducing s. 47 of the English Act of 1929 the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936 has made provision in the new s. 105A for issuing at a discount shares of a class already issued provided that (a) such issue is authorized by a resolution of the company and is sanctioned by the Court (as regards contents of the order see Rule 38 printed at p. 863); (b) the resolution specifies the maximum rate of discount not exceeding 10 p.c.; (c) not less than 1 year must at the date of issue have elapsed since the date on which the company was entitled to commence business; and (d) such shares are issued within 6 months after the date on which the issue is sanctioned by the Court or within such extended time as the Court may allow. Every prospectus relating to the issue of such shares and every balance-sheet issued after the issue of the shares must contain the particulars of the discount or so much thereof as has not been written off. For the consequences of default of this latter provision see sub-s. (3) of s. 105A.

Save as aforesaid, the payment of a commission or discount on a share is illegal (see notes at pp. 303-304). The total amount of commissions in respect of shares and that of commissions or discounts in respect of debentures, or so much thereof as have not been written off, must be stated in every balance-sheet until the whole amounts have been written off (s. 106).

If a commission for subscription of its shares is paid by a company not issuing a prospectus, it must be disclosed in the statement in lieu of prospectus or in a statement in the prescribed form (see Form XVII, p. 830) and filed with the registrar, and where a circular or notice, not being a prospectus, is issued, the commission must also be disclosed therein [s. 105 (1) (b)].

Issue of redeemable preference shares.

Reproducing s. 46 of the English Act of 1929, the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936 has made provisions for issuing redeemable preference shares, if so authorized by the articles, in the case of companies limited by shares. Subject to the provisions of clauses (a) to (d) of sub-s. (1) of s. 105B these shares may be redeemed by the company. In every balance-sheet issued by the company particulars mentioned in sub-s. (2) must be stated and for consequences of default see that sub-section. As regards other provisions relating to the same see sub-ss. (4) and (5) of s. 105B.

Payment of Interest out of Capital.

Payment of interest or dividend out of capital is illegal. But where any shares are issued to defray the expenses of the construction of any works or building or the provision of any plant which cannot be made profitable for a long period, the company may pay interest not exceeding 4 per cent. per annum on so much of that share capital as is for the time being paid up, subject to the conditions and restrictions mentioned in s. 107.

Application for and Allotment of Shares.

It is not lawful to issue any form of application for shares or debentures unless the form is issued with a prospectus which complies with the requirements of s. 93 [see the new sub-s. (2) of s. 96].

Applications for shares with deposits (which should be not less than 5 per cent. of the amount of the share) may be received direct by the company or through a bank or banks with which previous arrangements have been made. For forms of such applications, see Forms 89 and 90 at pp. 1157-1158. Where a bank receives the applications, it daily sends them with a list to the company entering the amounts received on the company's pass-book which is from time to time checked with the applications. When it is seen that the amount of the minimum subscription as stated in the articles and the prospectus or the statement in lieu of prospectus has been received, the company proceeds to allotment.

Minimum subscription.

Following s. 39 and paragraph 5 in part I of the Fourth Schedule of the English Act of 1929 the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936 has made new provisions regarding the minimum subscription by amending s. 101. In sub-s. (1) it has been laid down that no allotment shall be made of any share capital offered for public subscription unless the amount stated in the prospectus as the minimum amount which in the opinion of the directors must be raised in order to provide the sums required to be provided in respect of the following matters, namely : (a) the purchase price of any property purchased or to be purchased which is to be defrayed in whole or in part out of the proceeds of the issue ; (b) any preliminary expenses including commissions for placing the shares ; (c) the repayment of any moneys borrowed by the company in respect of any of the foregoing matters ; and (d) the working capital. The amount so stated in the prospectus as the minimum subscription will be reckoned exclusively of any amount payable otherwise than in cash and at least 5 per cent. thereof must be received in cash by the company before going to allotment [see sub-ss. (1), (2) and (2A) of s. 101].

If the aforesaid conditions are not fulfilled within 180 days after the first issue of the prospectus, all moneys received from the applicants of shares must be repaid within 190 days after the issue of the prospectus, otherwise the directors will be jointly and severally liable to repay that money with interest at 7 per cent. per annum [see sub-s. (4) of s. 101]. Until such repayment or until the certificate for commencement of business is obtained, the money should be kept deposited in one of the scheduled banks a list of which is given at pp. 286-287 [see sub-s. (2B) of s. 101]. For the consequences of contravention of the last provision see sub-s. (2C) of s. 101.

An allotment made in contravention of s. 101 will be voidable at the instance of the applicant within 1 month after the statutory meeting, or where the company is not required to hold a statutory meeting as in the case of a private company, or where the allotment is made after the holding of the staturory meeting, within 1 month after the date of the allotment and not later, and will be voidable notwithstanding the company is in course of being wound up [see the amended sub-s. (1) of s. 102]. For the notice avoiding the allotment see Form 98 at p. 1164.

By the articles shares are generally placed at the disposal of the directors, the managing director or the managing agents. Where the power of allotment is vested in the directors, the secretary places the applications before the board meetings from time to time and resolutions for allotment are passed. Thereupon the secretary issues allotment letters (see Form 92 at p. 1160) entering the necessary particulars in the Application and Allotment Book (see Form 104 at p. 1167). The application on which allotment cannot be made owing to over-subscription of the issue or any other cause should be returned to the applicant with a letter of regret and a payment order for return of the deposit money (see Form 91 at p. 1159). For the forms of letter of allotment of preference shares and fully paid shares see Forms 93 and 94 at p. 1161.

After allotment the company should within one month file with the registrar a return of allotment in Form XV, pp. 827-828 (see s. 104). In the case of shares allotted as fully or partly paid up otherwise than in cash, duly stamped contracts showing the consideration must be produced for the inspection and examination of the registrar. At the same time copies thereof verified in the prescribed manner (see p. 812) should be filed with the registrar [see s. 104 and notes]. Where such a contract has not been reduced to writing, the company must within 1 month after the allotment file with the registrar the prescribed particulars (see Form XVI at pp. 829-830) of the contract duly stamped [see s. 104 (2) and App. L, p. 1192].

The return of allotment is generally filed once a month taking care that all allotments made within the month are included therein.

Commencement of Business.

A public company cannot commence business unless and until it gets the requisite certificate from the registrar of companies (s. 103). To obtain this the company shall have to file a duly verified declaration that (1) shares held subject to the payment of the whole amount in cash have been allotted to an amount not less than the minimum subscription as explained above ; (2) the directors have paid the application and allotment moneys on the shares taken or contracted to be taken by them ; and (3) where the company does not issue a prospectus a statement in lieu of prospectus has been filed with the registrar (see s. 103). As to the forms of the declaration and verification in the cases where a prospectus is issued and where a statement in lieu of prospectus is issued see forms XIII and XIV respectively at pp. 825-827.

All contracts made by the company before the date on which it is entitled to commence business are provisional only and not binding on the company until such date [see s. 103 (3) and notes at p. 297]. For consequences of commencing business or exercising borrowing powers in contravention of s. 103 see sub-s. (5) thereof.

S. 103 however does not apply to a private company or to a company registered before the commencement of Act VII of 1913 which does not issue a prospectus or to a company limited by guarantee and not having a share capital [s. 103 (6)].

Register of Members.

As soon as a company is registered the secretary should commence writing up the register of members beginning with the names of the subscribers to the memorandum and where the allotments are made he should enter therein the names of the allottees and other necessary particulars. For these particulars and penalty for default see s. 31. As to the method of keeping the register see notes at pp. 130-131. In large companies another book called the "share ledger" is used in which an account is kept of the shares of the particular members. Ordinarily one book will suffice and Form 105 (at p. 1168) for the purpose is recommended.

Reproducing s. 96 of the English Act of 1929, it has been provided by the new s. 31A that every company having more than 50 members must keep an index of the names of members and must within 14 days after any alteration is made in the register of members make the necessary alteration in the index. The index may be in the form of a card index and must contain a sufficient indication to enable the account of any member to be readily found. For the consequence of default in keeping the index see sub-s. (3) of s. 31A.

It should be remembered that no notice of any trust, expressed, implied or constructive shall be entered on the register of members, nor will the registrar of companies receive any such notice (see s. 33 and notes at pp. 136-137).

For the provisions relating to the keeping of a branch register in the United Kingdom called the British register see ss. 41 and 42. For Form of notice under s. 41 of the situation of the office where a British register is kept or any change in, or discontinuance of, any such office, see Form II, at p. 815.

The register of members is prima facie evidence of matters directed or authorized by the Act to be entered therein (see s. 40 and notes at pp. 147-148).

Rectification of the register of members.

Where a person has been induced to take shares by fraud or misrepresentation and where a person has ceased to be a member by transfer or otherwise and his name is kept on the register of members inspite of representation on his part, he may apply to the Court for rectification of the register. Similarly where a person has got a right to be on the register by taking transfer of shares or otherwise and the company refuses or makes unnecessary delay to place his name on the register of members, he can make such an application (see s. 38 and notes at pp. 143-149). As to the directors' power to rectify the register without intervention of the Court see notes at pp. 145-146.

When the Court makes an order for rectification of the register of members, it directs notice of the rectification to be filed with the registrar within a fortnight from the date of the completion of the order (see the amended s. 39).

All applications for leave to rectify the share register must be made on notice to the company, and in case of transfer of shares, to the transferor or the transferee as the case may be (see Rule 15 at p. 861).

Inspection &c. of the register of members.

The register of members commencing from the date of the registration of the company and the index of members should be kept at its registered office. It may be inspected by the members gratis and by any other person on payment of one rupee or such less sum as may be prescribed by thę articles for each inspection during the business hours ; any member or other person may also make extracts thereform [see the amended s. 36 (1)] ; and the company must cause any copy so required by any person to be sent to that person within 10 days from the date of the requisition [see the amended sub-s. (2) of s. 36]. As to the penalty for default see the new sub-s (3) of s. 36 where it has been provided that in case of default the Court may by order compel an immediate inspection of the register and index or direct that copies required shall be sent to th persons requiring them.

A company may on giving 7 days' previous notice by advertisement close the register of members for any time or times not exceeding in the whole 45 days in each year, but not exceeding 30 days at a time (see the amended s. 37). But no provision has been made for closing the index of members. The register of members is usually closed just before an ordinary general meeting.

Share Certificates and Stock Certificates.

From the application and allotment book and the register of members the secretary should take materials for writing up the share certificates (see From 96 at p. 1162). These should be signed and sealed in accordance with the provisions therefor in the articles of association and kept ready for delivery within three months after the allotment (s. 108). As soon as the share certificates are ready a notice to that effect (see Form 95 at p. 1161 should be sent to the shareholders whose certificates are thus ready. For penalty for default see s. 108 (2).

A statement as to the company's lien on the shares should not be entered on the share certificate (see p. 311). For other matters relating to the share certificate see notes on pp. 118 to 121 and p. 312. As to the "lien" clause in the articles see reg. 9, Table A and for waiver, priority and effect of assignment or death see pp. 668-670.

If a share certificate is defaced, lost or destroyed, it may be renewed by the company in accordance with the provisions thereof in the articles (see reg. 7 of Table A) upon furnishing the requisite evidence and indemnity bond (see Form 100, p. 1164). Before issuing a fresh certificate advertisement in a newspaper should be made in Form 99 (see p. 1164).

Where shares are converted into stock, share certificates should be called in and stock certificates issued in lieu thereof. For form of stock certificate see Form 97 at p. 1163.

Calls.

Calls are to be made by the authority named in the articles of association (see regs. 12 to 17 of Table A). Generally directors are empowered to make the calls. But sometimes the managing director or the managing agents are so empowered. In any case the proceeding by which the calls are made should be in writing and should be kept in a proceedings book if they are not made by the directors in which case the calls are made by resolutions passed at the board meeting. The amount and interval should tally with those mentioned in the prospectus. For notice of call to be sent to the shareholders see Form 101 at p. 1165). A register of calls should be kept in a form similar to Form 102 (see p. 1165). Provisions are generally made in the articles for interest at certain rates payable to the company for failure to pay call on the due date. For other informations in connection with this matter see notes at pp. 670-677.

Difference between Shareholders.

A company may, if so authorized by its articles, make arrangements for a difference between shareholders in the amounts and times of payment of calls, accept from a shareholder the whole or part of the share money yet unpaid, though the same has not been called up, and pay dividend in proportion to the amounts paid up on the shares (see s. 49 and notes).

Forfeiture.

Provisions are generally made in the articles for forfeiture of shares for non-payment of call money (see regs. 24 to 30 of Table A). Where the articles provide that a person whose shares have been forfeited shall, notwithstanding the forfeiture, remain liable to pay the call money with interest (see reg. 28 of Table A), such a provision is enforceable.

The regulations contained in the articles for forfeiture should be strictly followed, otherwise the Court may declare the forfeiture invalid. As to the notice of forfeiture see Form 103 at p. 1166. S. 104 does not apply to the issue and allotment of forfeited shares [see the new sub-s. (4) of s. 104].

For other matters relating to forfeiture of shares see pp. 685-692.

Alteration of Share Capital.

A company limited by shares may, if so authorized by its articles, (a) increase its share capital by the issue of new shares; (b) consolidate and divide all or any of its shares into those of larger amounts; (c) convert all or any of its paid up shares into stock and re-convert that stock into paid up shares of any denomination; (d) sub-divide its shares or any of them into shares of smaller amounts; and (e) cancel shares which have not been taken or agreed to be taken (s. 50). Such a cancellation of shares is not a reduction within the meaning of the Act [s. 50 (3)]. These powers must be exercised by the company in general meeting [see the amended sub-s. (2) of s. 50], and the company must file with the registrar notice of the exercise of any powers of sub-division or cancellation of shares [see the new sub-s. (4) of s. 50]. For form of such notice see Form III (pp. 815-816).

If the articles do not contain the requisite powers they may be taken by passing "special resolution" (see ss. 20 and 81 and notes to those sections).

(a) Increase of Share Capital.

In increasing the share capital the provisions in the articles, or if there is no such provision, those in the special resolution authorizing the increase, should be followed. Where they do not require an "extraordinary" or a "special resolution", an ordinary resolution will do. Formerly the company might empower the directors to make the increase but now a resolution of the general meeting is necessary [see the amended sub-s. (2) of s. 50].

Where the directors decide to increase the capital by the issue of further shares, they must offer them in the first instance to the members in proportion to the existing shares held by each member (irrespective of class), and such offer is to be made by notice specifying the number of shares to which the member is entitled and limiting a time within which the offer, if not accepted, will be deemed to be declined (see the new s. 105 C).

Where a company having a share capital consisting of shares or stock has increased the same beyond the registered capital, it must file with the registrar within fifteen days of the date of the resolution a notice of the increase (see s. 53, Form IV pp. 816-817 and Form 112 at p. 1171). Similarly where a company having no share capital has increased the number of its members, a notice of such increase should be sent to the registrar within fifteen days of the date of the resolution (see Form V at p. 817 and Form 113 at p. 1172). The notice must include particulars of the classes of shares affected and the conditions (if any) subject to which the new shares are to be issued [see the new sub-s. (2) of s. 53]. As to the penalty for omission to file the notice see sub-s. (3) of s. 53.

Subject to any restriction in the memorandum a company may create and issue new shares with such preferential or other special rights as may be deemed expedient and if the articles do not contain the power it may be taken by passing a special resolution.

(b) Consolidation of shares.

The observations made above in the case of increase of share capital apply generally as to the mode in which the shares may be consolidated and divided into shares of larger amount. For notice to the registrar see s. 51 and Form III at pp. 815-816 and Forms 110 & 111 at p. 1171.

(c) Conversion of shares into stock and re-conversion.

It should be noted that only paid up shares can be converted into stock. If anything remains unpaid on the shares, such shares cannot be converted into stock. For distinction between "share" and "stock" and the convenience of stock see notes at pp. 118 and 157.

A company cannot issue stock directly. For the form of stock certificate see Form 97 at p. 1163 and that of notice to the registrar on conversion of shares into stock see Form 111 at p. 1171.

The mode of converting shares into stock or re-conversion is the same as in the case of an increase of share capital.

Where the share capital has been converted into stock the provisions of the Act which are applicable to shares only will cease to apply in respect of the shares thus converted; and the register of members, and the list of members to be filed with the registrar, must show the amount of stock held by a member without any distinctive number (see s. 52).

A company may sub-divide its shares or any of them into shares of smaller amount provided that in the sub-division the proportion between the amount paid and the amount unpaid on each reduced share be the same as it was in the case of the share from which the reduced share is derived [s. 50 (1) (d)].

In the case of sub-division of shares the provision for notice to the registrar is similar to that in the case of increase of capital [see the new sub-s. (4) of s. 50].

A cancellation of shares made under s. 50 (1) (e) is not a reduction of capital [s. 50 (3)]. In this way that portion of the authorized capital which has not been taken or agreed to be taken may be diminished. But where the subscribed capital (whether the shares are paid up in part or whole) is sought to be reduced, strong safeguards have been provided in the Act (see ss. 55 to 65).

Re-organization of Share Capital.

A limited company, if necessary, can, by passing "special resolution" confirmed by the Court, reorganize its share capital (1) by consolidating shares of different classes, or (2) by dividing its shares into different classes. But if the effect of such re-organization is to affect the preference or special privileges of a particular class of shareholders, then the company must get a resolution passed by a majority in number of shareholders of that class holding three-fourths of the share capital of that class. See s. 54 and notes at pp. 159 to 162. For an illustration of re-organization see p. 160, 2nd paragraph.

A re-organization of share capital which can be done without altering the memorandum of association does not require the sanction of the Court.

Variation of shareholders' rights.

The English Act of 1929 repealed s. 45 of the Act of 1908 (corresponding to s. 54 of the present Indian Act) and enacted s. 61 regarding variation of the rights of different classes of shareholders. The Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936 has reproduced this section in the new s. 66A, retaining at the same time s. 54. So it is not improbable that in some cases the two sections may come into conflict.

It has been provided by this new section that if provision is made by the memorandum or articles for authorising the variation of rights. attached to any of the classes of shares subject to the consent of any specified proportion of the holders of the issued shares of that class or the sanction of a resolution passed at a separate meeting of the holders of those shares, and in pursuance of the said provision the rights attached to any class of shares are varied, then the holders of not less in the aggregate than 10 per cent. of the issued shares of that class, being persons who did not consent to vote in favour of the resolution for the variation, may apply to the Court to have the variation cancelled, and where any such application is made, the variation shall not have effect unless and until it is confirmed by the Court. As regards the procedure for the making and hearing of such application see sub-ss. (2) and (3) of s. 66A.

The company must, within 15 days after service on it the order of the Court, forward a copy of the order to the registrar. For the consequence of default see sub-s. (5) of s. 66A.

Reduction of Share Capital.

The new s. 54A provides that no limited company shall have power to buy its own shares or the shares of a public company of which it is a subsidiary company. But it can effect a reduction of capital by complying with the provisions of sections 55 to 65. If the power to reduce is contained in the articles, it can at once proceed to pass the necessary special resolution for reduction ; but if not, the company must first take the necessary power by altering the articles under s. 20, that is, by passing "special resolution" (see s. 81 and notes at pp. 199-203).

Sub-s. (2) of s. 54A provides that no company shall give, whether directly or indirectly, and whether by means of a loan, guarantee, the provision of security or otherwise, any financial assistance for the purpose of or in connection with a purchase made or to be made by any person of any shares in the company. For the consequences of contravention of these provisions see sub-s. (3) of s. 54A. These restrictions will not however apply to a private company not being a subsidiary company of a public company nor to the lending of money by a company in the ordinary course of its business where the lending of money is its ordinary business [see sub-s. (2) of s. 54A].

The company can by complying with ss. 55 to 65 extinguish or reduce the liability on any of its shares not paid up. As for instance, where Rs. 5 only has been paid on each of the shares of Rs. 10, the company can extinguish the further liability of Rs. 5 per share by reducing the Rs. 10 shares to Rs. 5 shares.

Where capital has been lost or is unrepresented by available assets, the company can cancel a portion of its paid up share capital. As for instance, where the company's share capital is one lac of rupees divided into 1000 shares of Rs. 100 each all paid up and has lost Rs. 25,000 in its business which is not represented by any available assets, it can write off that amount from its share capital and make each share one of Rs. 75 fully paid up.

Where the paid up share capital is in excess of the requirements of the company, it can return the excess amount to the shareholders. As for example, where the capital is Rs. 1,00,000 divided into 1000 shares of Rs. 100 each all paid up, if the company does not require more than Rs. 50,000 for its purposes, it may return Rs. 50 per share to the shareholders and make the shares of Rs. 50 each fully paid up. In such a case the capital may be returned also on the footing that it may be called up again when the company may think it necessary.

In all these cases the return should be an all round one, that is, the reduction should be made in respect of each share in the same proportion. But in a proper case the Court can confirm any kind of reduction notwithstanding that it affects the rights of a particular class of shareholders. See notes to s. 55 at pp. 164-169.

As to the procedure see ss. 56 to 65 and the new Calcutta High Court Rules in App. F at pp. 861-863.

On and from the passing of the resolution for reduction, or where the reduction does not involve diminution of any liability in respect of unpaid share capital or the payment to any shareholder of any paid up share capital, on and from the making of the order confirming the reduction, the company must add to its name the words "and reduced" until such date as the Court directs (s. 57). As to the registration of the Court's order and minute of reduction see s. 61. These should be embodied in every copy of the memorandum issued after its registration and in default the company will be liable to a penalty (s. 62).

A company limited by guarantee may, if it has a share capital and is so authorized by its articles, increase or reduce its share capital in the same manner (s. 66).

Reserve Liability.

A limited company may by "special resolution" determine that the uncalled portion of its capital shall not be called up except in the event and for the purposes of winding up (s. 69).

Transfer of Shares.

A share is a movable property transferable in manner provided by the articles of association (s. 28). Shares are transferable subject only to the restrictions that may be imposed by the articles. For discussion as to the right of transfer and the directors' power to refuse registration thereof see pp. 108-110 and 680-682. As to how transfers are effected, effects of non-compliance with the rules, effects of registration, forged transfers, certification and estoppel, transfer in blank, priority of title, purchase at Court sale &c. see pp. 111-118 and 677-683.

Unless a particular form is prescribed in the articles the transfer may be effected by any usual or common form (see reg. 18 of Table A). But it is required that the instrument of transfer is to be executed both by the transferor and the transferee [see sub-s. (3) of the new s. 34]. For forms of transfer see p. 680 and Form 114 at p. 1172 . The instrument of transfer together with the certificate of shares transferred is sent to the company, upon which the secretary gives a receipt (see Form 115 at p. 1173). If all the shares mentioned in the share certificate are transferred, an endorsement is generally made on the back of the share certificate to the effect that the shares are transferred to the transferee and the share certificate is returned to the latter. But where some of the shares only are transferred a "balance receipt" (see Form 116 at p. 1174) is given and two new share certificates are prepared—one is given to the transferor for the shares retained by him and the other to the transferee for the shares transferred to him.

When an instrument of transfer together with the share certificate is received in the company's office, the secretary should send a notice (see Form 117 at p. 1175) to the transferor to his registered address. But even this does not protect the company if the transfer is found to be forged (see p. 114). So it is the duty of the secretary to compare the signature of the transferor with his admitted signature kept in the office. For this purpose specimen signatures of all members should be called for and kept in a separate book in alphabetical order.

If the secretary does not hear from the transferor within a reasonable time or a communication admitting the transfer is received, the former places the transfer before the directors or other authority prescribed in the articles for orders for registration of the transfer, and this should be recorded in the register of transfers of shares (see Form 118 at p. 1175). The consequent changes in the register of members are also to be made, and a new folio should be opened in the name of the transferee.

After all this has been done, the transferee's name should be endorsed on the back of the share certificate or, if necessary, a new share certificate or certificates should be prepared taking care that the original certificate is cancelled and destroyed. For, if any one can get hold of the original certificate and he transfers the shares to a bona fide purchaser for value the company may be liable.

It is the transferee who usually makes the application for registration of the transfer; but the transferor has the same right to apply for registration (see s. 34 and notes at p. 138).

If the company improperly refuses to register the transfer, the remedy of the transferor and the transferee is to apply to the Court for rectification of the register (see s. 38 and notes at pp. 143-149).

New provisions relating to transfer of shares.

The new s. 34 provides that an application for registration of the transfer of shares may be made either by the transferor or the transferee, but if the application is made by the transferor of partly paid shares no registration shall be effected unless the company gives notice of the application to the transferee. The company may of course refuse to register the transfer if empowered to do so by its articles. Unless the directors decide to exercise this power of refusal, they must, if no objection is made by the transferee within 2 weeks of the receipt of the aforesaid notice, enter the name of the transferee in the same manner and subject to the same conditions as if the application for registration was made by the transferee.

For the manner in which the notice is to be served see sub-s. (2) of s. 34; and as to the execution of the instrument of transfer see sub-s. (3).

If the company refuses to register the transfer of any shares or debentures it must, within 2 months from the date on which the instrument of transfer was lodged, send to the transferee as well as the transferor notice of the refusal [see sub-s. (4) of s. 34]. For the consequences of default see sub-s (5).

Right of executors and administrators to transfer.

The legal representatives of a deceased member is entitled to transfer the shares standing in the name of the latter without being himself registered as a member (see s. 35 and notes at pp. 139-140).

Stamp.

For stamp on an instrument of transfer see App. L, p. 1198.

Transmission of Shares.

In regulation 21 of Table A it is provided that the executors or administrators of a deceased sole holder of a share shall be the only persons recognised by the company ; and in the case of share registered in the names of two or more holders, the survivors or survivor or the executors or administrators of the deceased survivor, shall be the only persons recognised.

This form of articles is hardly suitable to this country for the following reasons : first, in the case of small holdings, which is usual in a poor country like India, it is a great hardship to go to the expenses of letters of administration ; secondly letters of administration are not granted in the case of a member of a joint Mitakshara family ; thirdly where any property is held by two or more persons, other than the members of a Mitakshara jointly family, either originally or by succession as heirs, it generally descends, in case of death, to the heirs of the deceased and not to the survivor. So a different rule in the case of shares in companies causes hardship. These were pointed out by Judges (see p. 683 and also in representations to the Government. Still the authorities responsible for the new amending Act did not think the matter worthy of consideration. The words "or holders of a succession certificate" after the word "administrators" whold have mitigated the hairship to some extent.

In the case of a member's death, the articles usually provide as to who will be recognized by the company as having title to the shares (see regs. 21 to 23 of Table A and notes at pp. 683-685). Where it is provided that the executors or administrators of a member shall be the only persons recognized by the company, they may either get themselves registered as members on production to the company of the probate or letters of administration (for form of application in such a case see Form 119 at p. 1176), or they may transfer the shares to somebody else under the provisions of s. 35. As to the rights of the legal representatives see notes at pp. 139-140.

The company should keep a book for noting the contents of the probate, letters of administration and decrees of the Court directing the rectification of register of members under s. 38 or declaring the title of a particular person or persons to particular shares. Powers of attorneys sent to the company for noting their contents may also be noted in this book.

As to the rights of an insolvent member's trustee see regs. 22 and 23 of Table A and notes at p. 685.

Shares or stock registered in the name of a lunatic can be transferred only under order made in lunacy by the person named in the order (see notes at p. 139).

Share-warrants to Bearer.

A company limited by shares, if so authorized by the articles, may issue share warrants to bearers with respect to fully paid up shares or stock and provide by coupons or otherwise for the payment of dividends (see Form 109 at p. 1170). The advantages of a share-warrant are that it entitles the bearer to the shares or stock therein specified and they are transferable by delivery (ss. 43 and 44). S. 43 does not apply to a private company [see the new sub-s. (2)].

On the issue of a share-warrant the company should strike out of the register of members the name of the member and enter instead the particulars mentioned in s. 47, otherwise the company will incur the penalty provided in cl. (2) of s. 47. Upon the surrender of the share-warrant for cancellation the date of the surrender should be entered in the register of members (s. 48), and the bearer thereof will, subject to the articles, be entitled to have his name entered as a member in the register of members (s. 45). If the company enters in the register the name of a bearer of share-warrant without the same being surrendered and cancelled, it will be responsible for any loss incurred by any person for thus entering the name of the bearer.

Borrowing.

In order to carry out the objects of a company it is sometimes necessary for it to borrow money. In the case of a trading or a banking company the power to borrow money is implied (see notes at pp. 61 and 321-323 ; but in other cases the power should be taken in the memorandum or in the articles of association. Where power is given by the articles of association to raise money on the security of the company's uncalled share capital, and there is nothing in the memorandum to the contrary, the uncalled share capital may be effectually charged [Newton v. Debenture Holders of Anglo-Australian &c. Co. (1895) A. C. 244 P. C.]. Where there is a power to borrow, the company can give security for the money as incidental to the power of borrowing, and create a mortgage or charge on any property or undertaking of the company.

Mortgage and charge.

Where a company creates a mortgage or charge (a) for securing any issue of debentures, (b) on its uncalled share capital, (c) on any immovable property or interest therein, (d) on any book debts, (e) a mortgage or charge not being a pledge on any movable property except stock-in-trade, or (f) a floating charge on the undertaking or property of the company, every such mortgage or charge, so far as the security is concerned, shall be void against the liquidator and any creditor of the company, unless the prescribed particulars (see Form XVIII, p. 831) of the mortgage or charge together with the instrument or a copy thereof verified in the prescribed manner (see p. 812) are filed with the registrar for registration within 21 days of the creation thereof (see s. 109). S. 109 should be read carefully and for the meaning of the expressions used therein, e. g., "debenture", "charge," "fixed", "specific" and "floating" charges, "undertaking" &c. and for general commentary on the section see pp. 314-323.

Where any mortgage or charge on any property has been so registered, any person acquiring such property or any part thereof, or any share or interest therein, will be deemed to have notice of the said mortgage or charge as from the date of such registration [see the new sub-s. (2) of s. 109].

The aforesaid prescribed particulars should be filed with the registrar within 21 days as mentioned above. The registrar will enter the particulars in the register kept in Form XXI (see pp. 834-835). After making the entry the registrar will return the instrument or the verified copy, as the case may be. The register is open to inspection on payment of a fee not exceeding Re. 1 for each inspection (see s. 112). The registrar will also give a certificate of registration stating the amount secured and it will be conclusive evidence of compliance with ss. 109 to 112 (s. 114).

The new s. 109A provides that where after 15th January, 1937 a company registered in British India acquires any property which is subject to a charge of any kind as mentioned in s. 109, the company shall cause the prescribed particulars (see Form XX at p. 833) of the charge together with a copy [certified in the prescribed manner (see p. 812)] of the instrument, if any, by which the charge was created or evidenced, to be delivered to the registrar for registration within 21 days after the date on which the acquisition is completed, or in case the property is situate and the charge was created outside British India, within 21 days after the date on which the copy of the instrument could have been received in due course of post. For the consequence of default see sub-s. (2) of s. 109A.

Where a series of debentures is created by a company it must file with the registrar within 21 days after execution of the deed the particulars mentioned in s. 110. For form see Form XXII at p. 836. Where more than one issue is made of debentures in the series certain other particulars are to be filed with the registrar. See the proviso of s. 110 and Form XXIII at p. 837. As to the chronological index to register of mortgages and charges to be kept by the registrar see s. 113 and Form XXIV at p. 838.

The registration of the aforesaid particulars may also be effected on the application of any person interested therein, and in such case he will be entitled to recover from the company the fees properly paid by him for registration (s. 116).

Whenever the terms, conditions, extent or operation of any mortgage or charge so registered are modified, the company must send to the registrar the particulars of such modification for registration [see the new sub-s. (3) of s. 116 and Form XIX at p. 832], and such registration may also be effected on the application of any person interested therein (ibid).

A copy of every instrument creating a mortgage or charge requiring registration under s. 109 should be kept at the registered office of the company; but in the case of a series of uniform debentures a copy of one such debenture will be sufficient (s. 117).

Where there is an omission to register a mortgage or charge within 21 days as provided in s. 109 or there is omission or misstatement of any necessary particular or omission to give intimation to the registrar of the payment or satisfaction of a debt for which a charge or a mortgage was created, due to accident, inadvertence or some other sufficient cause, the Court may, on the application of the company or any interested person, extend the time for registration or order the omission or misstatement to be rectified (s. 120). Where the Court extends the time the order will not prejudice any rights acquired before the actual registration (s. 120).

The new s. 121 provides that a company must give intimation to the registrar of the payment or satisfaction of any mortgage or charge requiring registration under s. 109, within 21 days from the date of payment or satisfaction (see Form XXVIII at pp. 840-841). On receipt of this intimation the registrar will cause notice to be sent to the mortgagee calling upon him to show cause, within a time (not exceeding 14 days) to be fixed by such notice, why the payment or satisfaction should not be recorded ; and if no cause is shown, the rigistrar will order that a memorandum of satisfaction be entered on the register, and if required, will furnish the company with a copy thereof. If cause is shown, the registrar will record a note to that effect in the register, and will inform the company that he has done so.

As to the consequences for default in complying with any of the above provisions see the amended s. 122.

Every limited company should also keep a register of mortgages and floating charges [s. 123 (1)] and for this purpose Form XXI at pp. 834-835 may be used with necessary modifications. For penalty for omission to keep such a register and to enter therein the required particulars see s. 123 (2).

The copies of the instruments of mortgages and charges and the register of mortgages kept at the registered office of a company under ss. 117 and 123 respectively are open to inspection of any creditor or member of the company without fee, and the register of mortgages is open to inspection of any other person on payment of a fee not exceeding one rupee for each inspection as the company may prescribe (see s. 124). As to the penalty for default see sub-s. (2) of s. 124.

Debentures.

For the purpose of borrowing money or in payment for property purchased or for securing the repayment of money borrowed a company usually issues debentures or debenture-stock. For the meaning of these expressions see pp. 35, 36, and 314. As to the form of debenture see Form 143 at pp. 1187-1189.

Debentures may be for a fixed term of years, or repayable on notice or irredeemable (see s. 126 and notes at pp. 336-338). They can also be framed as payable to bearer (see notes at p. 35).

Debentures may or may not give security on the company's assets but generally mortgage debentures are issued creating a "fixed" charge on some or all the properties of the company or a "floating charge" on all the properties and assets of the company, present and future. As to the distinction between a "fixed" and a "floating charge" see notes at pp. 35-36 and pp. 314-316.

Debentures or debenture-stock are sometimes secured by a trust deed conveying the company's property to trustees for the debenture holders charging other property and containing provisions regulating the rights of the company and the debenture holders. The advantages of a trust deed are (1) that a legal estate is vested in the trustees ; (2) that they can look after the interests of all the debenture holders for whom it is sometimes difficult to take common action to protect their interest ; (3) the trustees can sell the property secured ; and (4) they can, if so empowered in the deed, appoint receivers to carry on the business.

Debentures are offered to the public for subscription by means of prospectus in the same way as shares. For form of a skeleton prospectus see Form 139 at pp. 1184-1185, for form of application see Form 140 at p. 1185 and for form of the letter of allotment see Form 141 at p. 1186.

Debentures to bearers may be transferred by delivery, but ordinarily transfer is made by an instrument in writing as in the case of shares (see Form 142 at p. 1187).

Where a series of debentures containing any charge to the benefit of which the debenture-holders of that series are entitled pari passu is created by a company, it will be sufficient for the purposes of s. 109, if there is filed with the registrar the particulars (see Form XXII, p. 836) mentioned in s. 110 within 21 days after the execution of the deed containing the charge, or, if there is no such deed, after the execution of any debentures of the series together with the deed or a copy thereof verified in the prescribed manner (see p. 812) or one of the series of debentures. Where more than one issue is made of debentures in the series, particulars of the date and amount of each issue are to be filed with the registrar (s. 110). See Form XXIII at p. 837.

Where any commission, allowance or discount is paid or made directly or indirectly in connection with the issue of any debentures, the particulars required to be filed for registration under ss. 109 and 110 should include particulars as to the amount or rate per cent. of such commissions &c. (s. 111). The company should also cause a copy of every certificate of registration given by the registrar under s. 114 to be endorsed on every debenture or certificate of debenture stock issued by the company and secured by the mortgage or charge so registered (s. 115).

A company should keep a register of debenture-holders (see Form 106 at p. 1168) which will, except when closed (not exceeding 30 days in a year), be open to the inspection of the registered holder of any such debentures and of every shareholder, and they may require a copy of the register or any part thereof on payment of 6 as. for every 100 words or fractional part thereof [s. 125 (1)]. Similarly every debenture holder may get a copy of any trust deed for securing any issue of debentures on payment of one rupee in the case of a printed trust deed, and in any other case on payment of 6 as. for every 100 words or fractional part thereof [s. 125 (2)]. For penalty for refusal of inspection or copy see s. 125 (3).

As to a company's power to re-issue redeemed debentures see s. 127.

A contract for taking debentures may be enforced by a decree for specific performance, while a contract for taking a mortgage cannot be so enforced.

As to the stamp duty on debentures and transfer of debentures see App. L pp. 1193 and 1198.

Interest.

When interest on a debenture is paid, income-tax is deducted by the company and a certificate under s. 18 (9) of the Income Tax Act, 1922 is granted to the debenture-holder. For form of such a certificate see Form 125 at p. 1179.

Receivers.

In a suit by a secured creditor the Court may appoint a receiver when it appears that the security is in danger or "jeopardy" (see p. 42).

A receiver may also be appointed by the debenture-holders under the powers contained in the debenture. In the latter case the power is fiduciary and must be exercised for the benefit of the debenture-holders generally. As to the appointment, position, powers and liability of a receiver see notes at p. 327-329.

When an order is obtained from the Court for the appointment of a receiver of the property of a company, or a receiver is appointed under the powers contained in an instrument, he must within 15 days from the date of the order or appointment file notice of the fact with the registrar (s. 118). For form of such notice see Form XXV at p. 839. For penalty for omission to file the aforesaid notice see s. 118 (2).

In the case of a receiver appointed under the powers contained in an instrument and where he has taken possession of the company's property, he must file half yearly accounts with the registrar so long as he remains in possession (see Form XXVI at pp. 839-840) and must also file, on ceasing to act as receiver, a notice to that effect (see Form XXVII at p. 840) with the registrar. The new sub-s. (2) of s. 119 provides that where a receiver has been appointed of a company's property, every invoice, order for goods, or business letter issued by or on behalf of the company or the receiver of the company, being a document on or in which the company's name appears, must contain a statement that a receiver has been appointed. As to the penalty for default in complying with any of the above provisions see sub-s. (3) of s. 119.

Where a receiver is appointed on behalf of the debenture-holders or possession is taken by or on behalf of those debenture-holders of any property of the company, then if the company is not at the time in course of being wound up, the debts mentioned in s. 230 must be paid forthwith out of the assets coming to the hands of the receiver or other person taking possession, in priority to any claim for principal or interest in respect of the debentures (see s. 129).

Statutory Meeting.

A company other than a private company must, within a period of not less than 1 month nor more than 6 months from the date at which it is entitled to commence business (see s. 103) hold a general meeting of the shareholders which is called the "statutory meeting" (see the new s. 77). For notice convening the meeting see Form 107 at p. 1169 and it should be remembered that the notice must state that it is to be the "statutory meeting."

At least 21 days before the meeting the directors should forward the "statutory report" to every member of the company and other persons entitled to receive it. The report should be in Form VII given at pp. 818-821 and it must be certified by not less than 2 directors or by the chairman of the directors if authorised by the directors. The shares allotted, the cash received in respect of such shares and the receipts and payments shown in the report must be signed by the auditors of the company. A copy of the statutory report certified by the directors as aforesaid is to be filed with the registrar forthwith after sending it to the members. For the consequences of default see sub-s. (10) of s. 77.

The members present at the statutory meeting are entitled to discuss any matter relating to the formation of the company or arising out of the statutory report; but if a resolution is desired to be passed, previous notice thereof must be given in accordance with the articles. The meeting may be adjourned from time to time and notice of a resolution may be given in accordance with the articles after the original meeting and before the adjourned meeting which has all the powers of the original meeting [s. 77 (8)]. For minutes of a statutory meeting see Form 108 at p. 1169.

If default is made in filing the statutory report or in holding the statutory meeting the company may be ordered to be wound up by the Court [s. 162 (ii)]. But if a petition is presented to the Court for winding up the company on this ground the Court may, instead of directing a winding up, give directions for the statutory report to be filed or the statutory meeting to be held or make such other order as may be just [s. 77 (9)].

Ordinary General Meeting.

A general meeting shall be held within 18 months from the date of incorporation of the company, and thereafter once at least in every calendar year and not more than 15 months after the holding of the last preceding general meeting (see the new s. 76). For the consequences of default see sub-s. (2) of s. 76. In case of default the Court may, on the application of any member, call or direct the calling of a general meeting [sub-s. (3) of s. 76]. See Rules 36 and 37 at p. 863.

At such an annual meeting a report of the directors regarding the working of the company is submitted, accounts and balance-sheets with profit and loss accounts with the auditor's report thereon are presented, dividends are declared and directors and auditors are elected. These are called "ordinary general meetings"; and all other general meetings whether called for special purposes by the directors or by the members under the provisions of s. 78 or otherwise are called "extraordinary general meetings."

Regulations are almost always made in the articles as to the proceedings at general meetings, notice of the meeting, its chairman, adjournment, votes of members, proxies, taking of polls, quorum and other necessary matters. But the provisions of clauses (a) to (e) of sub-s. (1) of the new s. 79 will have effect with respect to meetings of a company other than a private company not being a subsidiary company of a public company and the procedure thereat notwithstanding any provision made in the articles of the company in this behalf. So the above provisions have virtually been incorporated in the Act and have effects accordingly. The provisions of clauses (a) to (g) of sub-s. (2) of s. 79 will have effect in so far as the articles do not make other provisions in that behalf. The above provisions should be carefully read and in framing articles of association of a company care should be taken that the provisions of sub-s. (1) of s. 79 are incorporated therein.

In sub-s. (3) of s. 79 power has been given to the Court to order a meeting of the company to be called, held and conducted in such manner as the Court thinks fit, if for any reason it is impracticable to call a meeting of the company in any manner prescribed by the articles or the Act. So it appears that the Court is not bound in this respect to follow the provisions of the articles or even of the Act regarding the calling, holding or conducting a general meeting of the company. See Rules 36 and 37 at p. 863.

As to the notice calling an ordinary general meeting see Form 120 at p. 1176. The notice is generally printed together with the directors' report, balance-sheet and profit and loss account with the auditors' certificate thereon, and is to be sent to the members 14 days before the meeting.

Notice of an ordinary general meeting should be given to the auditors who are entitled to receive the same and to attend a general meeting at which any accounts examined and reported on by them are to be laid before the company and they may make any statement or explanation they desire with respect to the accounts [see the new sub-s. (4) of s. 145].

Balance-sheet and Reports of Directors and Auditors.

The directors of every company must at some date not later than 18 months after the incorporation of the company and subsequently once at least in every calendar year lay before the company in general meeting a balance-sheet and profit and loss account or in the case of a company not trading for profit an income and expenditure account for the period, in the case of the first account since the incorporation of the company and in any other case since the preceding account, made up to a date not earlier than the date of the meeting by more than 9 months or in the case of a company carrying on business or having interest outside British India by more than 12 months. The registrar may for special reason extend the period by a period not exceeding 3 months [see the new sub-s. (1) of s. 131].

The balance-sheet and the profit and loss account will have to be audited by the auditor of the company and his report attached thereto or a reference to the report made at the foot thereof. The secretary must read the auditors' report at the meeting and it will be open to inspection by the members [s. 131 (2)].

Every company, except a private company, must send a copy of the balance-sheet &c. so audited to the registered address of every member at least 14 days before the meeting at which it is to be laid before the members. A copy of the balance-sheet should also be kept at the registered office of the company for inspection of the members during the 14 days before the meeting [s. 131 (3)]. As to the penalty for default see s. 133 (3). The balance-sheet should be in the new Form F in the Third Schedule (see pp. 784-788) or as near thereto as circumstances admit (s. 132). As to what the profit & loss account should contain see the new sub-s. (3) of s. 132. As to the persons who should sign the balance-sheet see s. 133 and as to the consequence of its not being signed in accordance with that section see sub-s (3) thereof.

The new s. 131A lays down, what has hitherto been the practice, that the directors shall make out and attach to every balance-sheet their report regarding the state of the company's affairs, the amount, if any, which they recommend to be paid as dividend and the amount, if any, they propose to carry to the Reserve Fund &c. shown specifically on the balance sheet or to a Reserve Fund &c. to be shown specifically in a subsequent balance-sheet.

The new s. 132A requires the holding company to include in the balance-sheet particulars as to its subsidiary companies. For details in this respect read carefully s. 132A and s. 2 (2).

The new sub-s. (3) of s. 133 provides penalty for default in complying with the provisions of ss. 131, 132, 132A and 133.

After the balance-sheet and profit and loss account or the income and expenditure account has been laid before the company at the general meeting, three copies thereof signed by the manager or secretary are to be filed with the registrar at the same time as the copy of the annual list of members and summary prepared under s. 32 (see s. 134). For the consequences of default see sub-s (4) of s. 134.

If the general meeting does not adopt the balance-sheet, a statement of that fact and of the reasons therefor is to be annexed to the balance-sheet and the copies thereof required to be filed with the registrar [sub-s. (2) of s. 134].

A private company is not required to send to the registrar a copy of the balance-sheet [sub-s. (3) of s. 134].

Any member is entitled to be furnished with copies of the balance-sheet and the profit and loss account or the income and expenditure account and the auditor's report at a charge not exceeding 6 as. for every 100 words or fractional part thereof.

Holders of preference shares and debentures of a company have the same right to receive and inspect its balance-sheets and the directors' and auditor's reports as is possessed by the holders of ordinary shares. This provision does not apply to a private company, nor to a company registered before 1st April 1914 (s. 146), but applies to the trustees for holders of debentures of a public company whether registered before or after the said date [sub-s. (2) or s. 146].

Dividend and Reserve.

A company declares dividends in the ordinary general meetings; but the directors may pay such interim dividends as appear to them to be justified by the profits, if the articles so provide (see reg. 96, Table A).

No dividend can be paid out of capital and if the directors make such payment they may be personally liable. Reg. 97 of Table A provides that no dividend shall be paid otherwise than out of profits of the year or any other undistributed profits. It is sometimes very difficult to say what are profits. As to a general discussion on this point see the rather elaborate notes given at pp, 741-749.

Reg. 98 of Table A provides that subject to the rights of members with special rights as to dividends all dividends are to be paid according to the amounts paid on the shares. In the absence of such a provision in the articles members are entitled to dividend in proportion to their shares and not in proportion to the amounts paid thereon (see notes at pp. 750-753). As to who are entitled to the dividends and the rights of preference shareholders and others see notes at pp. 750-753.

After declaration of a dividend a notice and warrant is sent to each shareholder entitled to the dividend. For form of such notice and warrant see Form 123 at p. 1178.

In calculating dividend income-tax is deducted by the company from the amount due to each shareholder and a certificate of such deduction is given in the warrant itself. For form of such a dividend warrant with income-tax certificate see From 124 at pp. 1178-1179. As the income-tax is deducted at a certain rate in accordance with the Income-Tax Act, the shareholder on production of the income-tax certificate attached to his dividend warrant may get a refund from the income-tax authorities, if according to his income he is liable to pay income-tax at a lower rate.

Directors are not bound to distribute the whole profits of a year as dividends. The articles generally provide, as in Table A (see reg. 95 which has been now made compulsory), that no dividend shall exceed the amount recommended by the directors and that they may set apart certain amount as a reserve or reserves for particular purposes (see reg. 99 and notes thereto). Unless a sufficient reserve fund is built in this way the company is sure to come to grief in a succession of bad years or in the event of an unforeseen calamity.

A company may, if so authorized in the articles, capitalize its profits kept in a reserve or any othet account, and issue fully paid up shares or debentures to the members entitled to the same. For a detailed discussion see pp. 737-740.

Proceedings of ordinary general meetings.

Before the time of the meeting the secretary should have ready on the table typed agenda paper with spaces for the chairman's or the secretary's notes (see Form 121 at pp. 1176-1177), the original directors' report, balance-sheet and the auditor's report and a sufficient number of printed copies thereof, the register of members, minute-book of general meetings, index of members' addresses and specimen signatures (of members) book and proxies received with the date and time noted thereon. As each member enters the room his signature should be taken in a book kept for the purpose.

After election of the chairman or, if no election is necessary under the articles, after he has taken the chair, the chairman will conduct the proceedings in accordance with the articles and proceed with the items on the agenda paper, the secretary taking notes of the proceedings.

As to the form of the minutes of an ordinary general meeting see Form 122 at p. 1177, that of a demand for poll see Form 131 at p. 1182 and that of a list of members & votes &c. in the matter of taking poll see Form 132 at p. 1181.

Summary of share-capital and list of members.

Every company having a share capital must, within 18 months from its incorporation and thereafter once at least in every year, make a list and summary in accordance with s. 32 (see Form E at pp. 781-783) and complete it within 21 days after the day of the first or only general meeting in the year. This list and summary should be contained in a separate part of the register of members and a copy thereof signed by a director, manager or secretary with his certificate (see p. 783) should be immediately filed with the registrar (see the amended s. 32). As to the penalty for default see s. 32 (5). At the same time a copy of the balance-sheet (laid before the general meeting) signed by the manager or secretary should be filed with the registrar. If the general meeting did not adopt the balance-sheet, a statement of that fact and of the reasons thereof should be annexed to the balance-sheet and to the copies thereof required to the filed with the registrar (s. 134). For consequences of default see s. 134 (4).

A private company is not required to file with the registrar a copy of the balance-sheet but it must file the list and summary as provided by s. 32, as well as the certificate required under the new sub-s. (4) of s. 32 [see under the heading "private company" post].

Extraordinary General Meeting.

Where a special business requires it the directors may call an extraordinary general meeting. Where it is necessary to pass an "extraordinary resolution" or a "special resolution" (see s. 81) an extraordinary general meeting must be called. As to the notice of such a meeting see Form 127 at p. 1181.

Where a considerable number of members, dissatisfied with the management of the company or for any other valid reason, desire that an extraordinary general meeting should be called, a requisition, signed by the holders of not less than one-tenth of the issued share capital of the company upon which all calls or other sums due have been paid, may be served upon the directors (for form of the requisition see Form 133 at p. 1183) who should immediately proceed to call an extraordinary general meeting. The requisition should state the object of the meeting and may consist of several documents in like form each signed by one or more requisitionists and deposited at the registered office of the company. If the directors do not cause the meeting to be called within 21 days from the date of deposit of the requisition, the requisitionists or a majority of them in value may themselves call the meeting; but in either case the meeting so called should be held within 3 months from the date of deposit of the requisition (see s. 78). If a special resolution is sought to be passed, at least 21 days' notice specifying the intention to propose the resolution as a special resolution should be given [see the new sub-s. (2) of s. 81].

Any meeting called by the aforesaid requisitionists should be called in the same manner, as nearly as possible, as that in which meetings are to be called by the directors [s. 78 (4)]. The proceedings of the meeting should be conducted in accordance with the provisions in the articles.

The new sub-s. (5) of s. 78 provides that any reasonable expenses incurred by the requisitionists by reason of the failure of the directors duly to convene a meeting shall be repaid to the requisitionists by the company, and any sum so repaid shall be retained by the company out of any sums due or to become due from the company by way of fees or other remuneration to such of the directors as were in default. This provides a salutary check on the directors who may be inclined to ignore the requisition.

Extraordinary Resolution and Special Resolution.

For definitions of extraordinary and special resolutions see s. 81. It should be noted that for the purpose of passing an extraordinary resolution the notice calling the general meeting should specify the intention to propose the resolution as an extraordinary resolution. As to the form of such notice see Forms 128 (p. 1181) and 145 (pp. 1189-1190). The resolution must be passed by a majority of not less than three-fourths of such members entitled to vote as are present at the meeting in person or by proxy (where proxies are allowed). As to the members who are entitled to vote the provisions in this respect in the articles are to be looked into. Proxies cannot vote unless the articles allow them and then only on the conditions laid down there. As for instance, the articles generally provide that none but members of the company can be proxies or the proxy papers must be lodged at the company's office 72 hours before the meeting [see regulation 66 of Table A which has been made compulsory under the amended sub-s. (2) of s. 17]. As to the form of an extraordinary resolution see Form 135 at p. 1183.

A special resolution is passed in manner required for the passing of an extraordinary resolution at a general meeting of which at least 21 days' notice has been given specifying the intention to propose the resolution as a special resolution. As to the form of notice of the meeting see Form 129 at p. 1182 and Form 146 at p. 1190.

At any such meeting a declaration of the chairman on a show of hands that the resolution is carried will, unless a poll is demanded, be conclusive evidence of the fact. But a poll may be demanded by 5 persons entitled, according to the articles, to vote [see the new s. 79 (1) (c)]. The poll is to be taken by the chairman in accordance with the articles and in computing the majority on the poll reference is to be made to the number of votes to which each member is entitled according to the articles. Notices of the meetings are to be given and the proceedings conducted in manner provided by the articles. For other necessary informations see notes at pp. 200-203.

As to where extraordinary resolutions and where special resolutions are necesssary see pp. 199-200.

For forms of proxy, demand for poll and list of members in the matter of taking a poll see Forms 130 (p. 1182), 131 (p. 1182), and 132 (p. 1183) respectively.

As to the form of a special resolution see Form 136 at p. 1184, and a specimen of such a resolution is given in Form 137 at the same page.

In the case of an incorporated company it is not necessary that for voting on its behalf at a meeting of another company a proxy or power of attorney is to be given. It is sufficient if the former by a resolution of its directors authorize any person to act as its representative at any meeting of the latter company (s. 80).

A printed or type-written copy of an extraordinay or special resolution duly certified under the signature of an officer of the company is to be filed with the registrar within 15 days from the passing of the same [see the amended sub-s. (1) of s. 82]. See Form VIII at p. 822 and Form 138 at p. 1184.

Where articles have been registered a copy of special resolution the time being in force must be embodied in or annexed to every copy the articles issued after the date of the resolution. Where articles have not been registered a copy of every special resolution must be sent in print to any member at his request on payment of one rupee or such less sum as the company may direct [s. 82 (2) & (3)]. For default in complying with these provisions the company and its officers will be liable to the penalies provided in s. 82 (4), (5) and (6).

Minute Books.

All companies must keep in separate books minutes of the proceedings of general meetings and board meetings and every such minute should be signed by the chairman of the meeting or of the next meeting. If this is done, then a presumption arises as to the validity of calling, holding and proceedings of the meeting including all appointments of directors or liquidators [see sub-ss. (1) to (3) of s. 83].

The new sub-ss. (4) and (5) of s. 83 provide that the minute book of a general meeting held after 15th January, 1937 shall be kept at the registered office of the company and shall during business hours be open to inspection of any member without charge, and that any member shall at any time after 7 days from the meeting be entitled to be furnished within 7 days of his request with a copy of the minutes at a charge not exceeding 6 as. for every 100 words. For the penalty for not allowing such inspection or furnishing such copy see the new sub-s. (6) of s. 83, and the Court may by order compel an immediate inspection by, or direct that the copy be sent to, the member [see sub-s. (7) of s. 83].

Audit.

The first auditors of a company may be appointed by the directors before the statutory meeting, and if so appointed, will hold office until the first annual general meeting, unless previously removed by a resolution of the members in general meeting, in which case such members at that meeting may appoint auditors [s. 144 (7)]. The directors may fill any casual vacancy in the office of auditor, but while any such vacancy continues the surviving or continuing auditor or auditors (if any) may act. The directors may also fix the remuneration of the auditors thus appointed by them. In any other case the remuneration is to be fixed by the company in general meeting [s. 144 (8) & (9)].

Save as mentioned above every company must at each annual general meeting appoint an auditor or auditors to hold office until the next annual general meeting. But a person other than a retiring auditor cannot be appointed auditor at an annual general meeting unless notice of an intention to nominate him has been given by a member of the company to the company not less than 14 days before such annual general meeting, and the company is to send a copy of such notice to the retiring auditor, and to give notice thereof to the members by advertisement or any other mode allowed by the articles not less than 7 days before the annual general meeting [see s. 144, sub-s. (6) and proviso thereto]. An appointment of auditor made in contravention of these provisions is illegal. The appointment is to be made at each annual general meeting [sub-s. (3) of s. 144] and if an illegal appointment is made thereat, it is apprehended that the appointment of fresh auditors will have to be made by the Government under sub-s. (4).

No person can be appointed or act as auditor of any company other than a private company not being the subsidiary company of a public company unless he holds a certificate from the Central Government as provided by section 144 (read that section and notes at pp. 362-364).

If the appointment of an auditor is not made at an annual general meeting, the Government may, on the application of any member of the company, appoint an auditor for the current year, and fix his remuneration to be paid by the company [see s. 144 (4)].

In any case a director or officer of the company, a partner of such director or officer, any person indebted to the company and, except in the case of a private company not being a subsidiary company of a public company, any person in the employment of a director or officer, cannot be appointed auditor. If any auditor becomes indebted to the company his appointment will thereupon be terminated [see the amended sub-s. (5) of s. 144.]

As to the appointment of an auditor the position of a private company not being the subsidiary company of a public company is materially different from other companies. It appears that a private company can appoint any person as auditor, whether he holds a certificate from the Central Government or not, except a director or officer of the company or a partner of such director or officer. But there is no bar to the appointment of any person in the employment of such director or officer [see sub-s. (1) of s. 144 and cl. (iii) of sub-s. (5) thereof].

As to the powers and duties of auditors, what their reports and certificates should contain and whether they are officers of the company or not &c., &c. see s. 145 and notes at pp. 365-368.

For the purposes of ss. 235, 236 and 237 of the Act the word "officer" includes an auditor [see s. 2 (1) (11)]. Consequently an auditor may be liable for misfeasance mentioned in s. 235 (see notes at pp. 586 & 592). He may be liable to heavy punishment, if he destroys, mutilates, alters of falsifies or fraudulently secretes any books, papers or securities or makes or is privy to the making of any false or fraudulent entry in any register, book of account or document of the company with intent to defraud or deceive any person [see s. 236 and s. 2 (1) (11)]. As to s. 237 see under the next heading.

New provisions relating to auditors.

Sub-s. (4) of the new s. 77 provides that the statutory report shall, so far as relates to the shares allotted by the company and to the cash received in respect of such shares and to the receipts and payments of the company, be certified as correct by the auditors.

The new s. 86C provides that any provision made in the articles or a contract for indemnifying any person employed as an auditor by the company against any liability which by virtue of any rule of law would otherwise attach to him in respect of any negligence &c. shall be void. But the company may indemnify him against any liability incurred by him in defending any civil or criminal proceedings in which judgment is given in his favour or in which he is acquitted or if any relief is granted to him under s. 281 [see proviso (a) to s. 86C.]

Where a prospectus is issued by a company which has been carrying on business prior to the issue thereof, the prospectus must set out a report by the auditors with respect to the profits &c. of the company (including its subsidiary company, if any) mentioned in cl. (i) of the new sub-s. (1A) of s. 93.

The new s. 141A provides that if upon the report of inspectors appointed under s. 138 prosecutions are instituted against a person or persons, it will be the duty of the auditors of the company, past and present (other than the accused), to give to the Advocate General or the Public Prosecutor all assistance in connection with the prosecutions [see sub-ss. (2) & (3) of s. 141A.]

As to the obligation of the auditors regarding the balance-sheet and the profit and loss account see s. 145. The amended sub-s. (2) thereof requires that their report must state the following additional particulars: (1) whether or not in their opinion the balance-sheet and the profit and loss account are drawn up in conformity with the law, (2) whether in their opinion books of account have been kept by the company as required by s. 130.

The new sub-s. (2A) of s. 145 provides that where any of the matters referred to in sub-s. (2) is answered in the negative, or with a qualification, the report shall state the reason for such answer.

The new sub-s. (4) of that section provides that the auditors shall be entitled to receive notice of and attend any general meeting of the company at which any accounts examined or reported on by them are to be laid, and they may make any statement or explanation they desire with respect to the accounts.

The new sub-s. (5) of s. 145 lays down the penalty if the auditor's report does not comply with the requirements of that section.

In a voluntary winding up the declaration of solvency mentioned in sub-s. (1) of the new s. 207 must be supported by a report of the company's auditors [see sub-s. (2) of s. 207].

The new s. 237 has made detailed provisions for instituting criminal proceedings against past or present directors, managers or other officers [including auditors—see s. 2 (1) (11)] if it appears to the Court or the liquidator (in a voluntary winding up) in the course of a winding up of the company that any such person or persons have been guilty of any offence in relation to the company for which he is criminally liable. In such proceeding it shall be the duty of the auditor (if he is not an accused person), past or present, to give the Advocate General or the Public Prosecutor all assistance in connection with the prosecution [see sub-ss. (1), (2), (5), (6) and (7) of s. 237]. For the consequences of failure or neglect to give such assistance see sub-s. (8) of s. 237.

Under the new s. 281 the Court has power to give relief to persons employed as auditors of a company if in any proceeding for negligence, default &c., it appears to the Court that the auditors acted honestly and reasonably.

Registrar of Companies.

Under s. 6 the memorandum of association of a company must state the province in which its registered office is to be situate. The company must be registered at an office established in that province by the Government under s. 248.

Any person may inspect the documents kept by the registrar on payment of such fees, as may be fixed by the Government, not exceeding one rupee for each inspection ; and any person may get a certificate of incorporation of any company or a certified copy or extract of any other document or any part thereof on payment of such fees, as may be fixed by the Government, not exceeding Rs. 3 for a certificate of incorporation and not exceeding 6 as. for every 100 words or part thereof required to be copied (s. 248).

As to the presumption of correctness and relevancy of the documents certified by or filed with the registrar see notes at 615.

For fees to be paid to the registrar see pp. 760-762, p. 811 and p. 858.

Investigation by the registrar.

On perusal of any document submitted to him under the Act if the registrar is of opinion that any further information or explanation is necessary he may call for the same ; and all persons who are or have been officers or liquidators of the company are bound to give such information or explanation on pain of a fine not exceeding Rs. 50 in respect of each offence, and the Court may on the application of the registrar and upon notice to the company make an order on the company for production of such documents as in its opinion may reasonably be required by the registrar for his investigation and allow the registrar inspection thereof on such terms and conditions as it thinks fit. The information or explanation, if furnished, will be annexed to the original document and will be subject to the like provisions as to the inspection and taking of copies as the original document [see the amended s. 137 and the new sub-s. (7) thereof].

If the information or explanation is not furnished within the specified time or if it appears to the registrar to be unsatisfactory or if it discloses an unsatisfactory state of affairs, it will be the duty of the registrar to make a report to the Government [see s. 137].

If it is represented to the registrar in materials placed before him by any contributory or creditor that the business of the company is carried on in fraud of its creditors, or in fraud of persons dealing with the company or for a fraudulent purpose, the registrar may, after giving the company an opportunity of being heard, by written order call on the company for information or explanation on matters specified in the order. If upon investigation the registrar is satisfied that the representation upon which he has taken action is frivolous or vexatious, he must disclose the identity of the informant to the company [see the new sub-s. (6) of s. 137].

The amended s. 166 gives the registrar power to make an application to the Court for winding up a company with the previous sanction of the Government on the ground mentioned in cl. (i) of proviso (aa) of s. 166 (see s. 166).

The new s. 249A provides that if a company having made default in complying with any provision of the Act in respect of filing with, delivering or sending to, the registrar any return, account or other document or in giving notice to him of any matter, fails to make good the default within 14 days after notice to the company requiring it to do so, the Court may, on an application by any member or creditor of the company or by the registrar, make an order directing the company or any officer thereof to make good the default within such time as may be specified in the order. Any such order may provide that all costs of and incidental to the application shall be borne by the company or by any officer thereof responsible for the default.

Inspection and Institution of Prosecution.

Upon the report of the registrar under s. 137 or on the application, in the case of a banking company of members holding not less than one-fifth of the shares issued, and in the case of any other company having a share capital, of members holding not less than one-tenth of the shares issued or in the case of a company not having a share capital, on the application of one-fifth of the members, the Government may appoint one or more competent inspectors to investigate the affairs of the company in such manner as the Government may direct (s. 138). The members applying are to satisfy the Government of their bona fides and may be directed to give security for costs of the inquiry (s. 139). All persons who are or have been officers of the company are bound to produce to the inspectors all books and documents in their custody or power and the inspectors may examine any person on oath. As to the penalty for disobedience see s. 140 (3). The inspectors will report their opinion to the Government who will send a copy thereof to the registrar and another copy to the registered office of the company and a further copy to the applicants at their request. All expenses relating to the investigation will have to be borne by the applicants, but the Government may direct them to be paid by the company (see the amended s. 141).

Formerly there was no machinery for instituting prosecutions against delinquent persons upon the report of the inspectors. Now this defect has been cured by reproducing s. 136 of the English Companies Act of 1929 in the new s. 141A. It provides that if from any report made under s. 138 it appears to the Government that any person has been guilty of any offence in relation to the company for which he is criminally liable, the Government shall refer the matter to the Advocate General or the Public Prosecutor. If that officer considers that the case is one in which a prosecution ought to be instituted, he shall cause proceedings to be instituted and it shall be the duty of all officers and agents of the company, past and present (other than the accused), to give him all reasonable assistance. The word "agents" in this section includes bankers, legal advisers and auditors employed by the company.

If a director, manager or other officer is convicted as a result of such prosecution, he shall not, without leave of the Court, be a director of or in any way concerned in or take part in the management of a company for 5 years from the date of such conviction [sub-s. (4) of s. 141A].

A company may also by a special resolution appoint such inspectors and they will have idential powers except that instead of reporting to the Government they will report in such manner and to such persons as the company in general meeting may direct (s. 142).

A copy of the report of any inspector appointed under the Act, authenticated by the seal of the company will be admissible in evidence as evidence of the opinion of the inspector (s. 143).

Service and Authentication of Documents.

A document may be served on a company by leaving it at or by sending it by post to its registered office (s. 148) ; and a document may be served on the registrar by sending it to him by post or delivering it to him or by leaving it for him at his office (s. 149).

A document or proceeding requiring authentication by a company may be signed by a director, secretary or other authorized officer of the company and need not be under its common seal (s. 150).

Arbitration and Compromise.

A company can by written agreement refer an existing or a future dispute to arbitration under the Indian Arbitration Act, 1940. It can also delegate to the arbitrator power to settle any terms or to determine any matter which its directors or other managing body are entitled to settle or determine. In such arbitration the provisions of the Indian Arbitration Act, 1940 will apply (s. 152 and noted thereto).

It should be remembered in this connection that an award under the said Act is enforceable as a decree, and that no decree should be passed upon such an award, and if passed it would be without jurisdiction and a nullity (see pp. 372-373). As to the object of s. 152 and other matters see notes at pp. 370-373.

Carrying on Business with less than the Legal Minimum of Members.

A company must not carry on business for more than six months after the number of its members has been reduced to less than two in the case of a private company, and less than seven in the case of any other company. For the consequences of doing so see s. 147. It may also be wound up under s. 162 (iv).

Private Company.

A private company is almost on the same footing as a public company with the following differences :—

(1) For forming a private company only two persons are necessary to subscribe the memorandum of association (s. 5). As regards the memorandum of association there is no other difference between a public and a private campany.

(2) A private company must by its articles restrict the right to transfer its. shares [s. 2 (13) (i) (a)]. Restrictions are usually placed on transfer of shares without first obtaining the approval of the directors, or transfer to outsiders without first offering them to the existing members at a price to be determined in accordance with the provisions therefor in the articles. This serves the double purpose of first ensuring the continuance of the private character of the company, and secondly of preventing an increase in the numbers of members.

(3) It must limit the number of its members to fifty exclusive of persons in the employ of the company. Therefore it is necessary to frame the articles so that by transfer of shares or otherwise the number of its members does not exceed fifty. The joint holders of a share or shares will be considered as a single member.

(4) A private company must by its articles [s. (13)] prohibit any invitation to the public to subscribe for any shares or debentures of the company. Not only the shares but also the debentures of the company should never be offered to the public for subscription.

A private company must not allow the number of its members to fall bellow two [see ss. 147 and 162 (iv)].

If a private company fails to observe the above restrictions it will lose the privileges granted by the Act to these companies. For an enumeration of the privileges see pp. 38-40 and for commentary on s. 2 (13) see pp. 37-40.

On account of its special privileges and also of the advantages of its distinct legal personality apart from its component members and of a limited liability without the apprehension of losing the private character, a large number of firms have been and are being converted into private limited companies. As to the agreement for sale of a business to a new private company see Form 4 at pp. 1092-1093, and for agreement by partners to convert the partnership business into a private company see Form 5 at p. 1093. For the form of the articles of association of a private limited company intended to be managed by the Governing Director see Form 65 (pp. 1142-1146).

New provisions regarding private companies.

The amended s. 17 provides that the articles of association of a company shall in any event be deemed to contain regulations indential with or to the same effect as regulations 56, 66, 71, 78, 79, 80, 81, 82, 95, 97, 105, 107, 112, 113, 114, 115 and 116 contained in Table A. But regulations 78 to 82 both inclusive shall not be deemed to be included in the articles of a private company except one which is the subsidiary company of a public company.

A private company must send with the annual return, required by sub-s. (1) of s. 32, a certificate signed by a director or other officer of the company that the company has not, since the date of the last return or in the case of a first return, since the date of the incorporation of the company, issued any invitation to the public to subscribe for any shares or debentures of the company, and where the annual return discloses the fact that the number of members of the company exceeds 50, also a certificate so signed that the excess consists wholly of persons who under sub-clause (b) of clause (13) of sub-s. (1) of s. 2 are not to be included in reckoning the number of 50 [see the new sub-s. (4) of s. 32].

The new s. 154 following s. 27 of the English Act of 1929 provides that if a company being a private company alters its articles in such manner that they no longer include the provisions of s. 2 (1) (13) (b), the company shall, as on the date of the alteration, cease to be a private company and shall, within 14 days after the said date, file with the registrar a prospectus or a statement in lieu of prospectus in Form II in the Second Schedule (see pp. 766-770). For the consequences of default see sub-s. (2) of s. 154. As to the requirements of prospectus, if one is filed, see proviso to the new sub-s. (4) of s. 93.

Where the articles of a private company include the above provisions, but default is made in complying with any of those provisions, the company will cease to be entitled to the privileges and exemptions conferred by the Act on private companies, and thereupon the provisions of the Act will apply to the company as if it were not a private company [sub-s. (3) of s. 154]. Power has however been given to the Court for relieving a company from these consequences [see proviso to sub-s. (3) of s. 154].

The Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936 by introducing new provisions has made, as regards the privileges and exemptions, a distinction between private companies which are not, and those which are, subsidiary companies of public companies.

The following privileges and exemptions have been conferred on all private companies, whether subsidiary or not :—

(1) The provisions of s. 43 (issue of share-warrants to bearer) do not apply to a private company [s. 43 (2)].

(2) The provisions of s. 77 (holding statutory meeting and sending statutory report to members and the registrar) do not apply to a private company [s. 77 (11)]. It should be noted that under the old s. 77 the holding of a statutory meeting was obligatory though not the sending of the report to the registrar.

(3) The provision that notwithstanding anything contained in the articles not less than two-thirds of the whole number of directors shall be persons whose period of office is liable to determination at any time by retirement of directors in rotation does not apply to a private company [s. 83B (2)].

(4) S. 84 providing restrictions on appointment or advertisement of directors does not apply to a private company or a company which was a private company before becoming a public company [sub-s. (3) of s. 84]. For the definition of a public company see clause (13A) of sub-s. (1) of s. 2.

(5) The restriction put by s. 87-I on managing agents in the appointment by them of directors (more than one-third of the whole number of directors) does not apply to a private company.

The following privileges and exemptions have been conferred on those private companies only which are not subsidiary companies of public companies :—

(1) The new provisions of sub-s. (1) of s. 79 relating to general meetings and notices, proxies, polls and rights and liabilities of classes of shareholders relating thereto will not apply to such a company.

(2) The obligation to have at least 3 directors will not apply to such a company [s. 83A (2)].

(3) Prohibition of making loans or guaranteeing any loan to a director will not apply to such a company [s. 86D (3)].

(4) Restriction on the powers of directors regarding selling or disposing of the company's undertaking and remitting any debt due by a director will not apply to such a company (s. 86H).

(5) Limitation of the duration of a managing agent's office to 20 years will not apply to such a company [s. 87A (5)].

(6) Restrictions on the provisions for remuneration of a managing agent will not apply to such a company [s. 87C (4)].

(7) Prohibition of loans to managing agents and restrictions on their powers of contract for the sale, purchase &c. with the company will not apply to such a company [s. 87D (4)].

(8) Prohibition of voting by interested directors in respect of contracts or arrangements will not apply to such a company, [proviso to s. 91B (3)].

(9) Provisions regarding contracts by agents in which the company is the undisclosed principal made in s. 91D will not apply to such a company [s. 91D (1)].

(10) The obligation to have a certificated auditor and the prohibition of appointing as auditor a person who is in the employment of a director or officer of the company will not apply to such a company [s. 144 (1) & (5)].

In a word a private company which is the subsidiary company of a public company will not have the latter set of privileges and exemptions (1 to 10) but all other private companies will enjoy both the sets of privileges and exemptions mentioned above.

In drawing up the articles of association of a private company one should remember that in addition to the matters mentioned in clause (13) of sub-s. (1) of s. 2 provisions are to be made in respect of matters referred to in sub-s. (2) of s. 79, otherwise they will automatically apply to the company.

The advantage of conversion of a private company into a public company is that the company can get additional capital by issuing its shares to the public and by raising money by the issue of its debentures to the public.

Company Limited by Guarantee.

A company limited by guarantee may or may not have a share capital. In the latter case in addition to the required particulars (see s. 7) the memorandum must state that each member undertakes to contribute to the assets of the company, in the event of its being wound up while he is a member, or within one year afterwards, for payment of the debts and liabilities of the company contracted before he ceases to be a member, and of the costs, charges and expenses of winding up, and for adjustment of the rights of the contributories among themselves, such sum as may be required not exceeding a specified amount [s. 7(1) (v)].

If the company has a share capital, the memorandum must also state the amount of share capital with which the company proposes to be registered and the division thereof into shares of a fixed amount; no subscriber of the memorandum can take less than one share; and each subscriber must write opposite to his name the number of shares he takes.

Associations for mutual assurance and those mentioned in s. 26 are generally formed as companies limited by guarantee.

As to the form of the memorandum of association of a company limited by guarantee and having a share capital see Form C at pp. 778-779 and that of its articles see p. 779. For the memorandum of such a company not having a share capital see Form B at p. 774 and Form 11 at pp. 1100-1101; and for the form of the articles of association of such a company see pp. 774-778. As to the fees for registering a company limited by guarantee see pp. 760-761 and for stamp duty see App. L. As to such companies generally see s. 7 and notes at p. 72.

In the case of a company limited by guarantee and not having a share capital and registered after 1st April, 1914, the memorandum, the articles or a resolution of the company cannot give any person a right to participate in the divisible profits of the company otherwise than as a member. If the memorandum or articles or any resolution of a company limited by guarantee and registered after 1st April, 1914, purport to divide the undertaking of the company into shares or interests, this will be treated as a provision for a share capital, notwithstanding that the nominal amount or number of the shares or interests are not specified by such memorandum, articles or resolution (s. 27).

A company limited by guarantee must register with its memorandum articles of association signed by the subscribers to the memorandum and prescribing regulations for the company. If the company has not a share capital, the articles must also state the number of members with which the company proposes to be registered (s. 17).

As to the articles generally see notes at pp. 86-90; and as to the alteration of articles see s. 20 and notes at pp. 91-95.

A company limited by guarantee and registered after 1st April, 1914, may, if it has a share capital and is so authorized by its articles, increase or reduce its share capital in the same manner and subject to the same conditions in and subject to which a company limited by shares may increase or reduce its share capital under the provisions of the Act (s. 66).

Unlimited Companies.

As has been observed above [see p. (4)] unlimited companies are rarely formed now-a-days. For definition of an unlimited company see s. 5 (iii). As to the contents of the memorandum of such a company see s. 8. For the form of memorandum of an unlimited company having a share capital see Form D at p. 780 and for the form of its articles see pp. 780-781. See also notes at p. 73.

An unlimited company must register, with its memorandum, articles signed by the subscribers to the memorandum, and if the company has a share capital, the articles must state the amount of share capital with which the company proposes to be registered. If it has not a share capital the articles must also state the number of members with which the company proposes to be registered (s. 17).

As to the articles generally see notes at pp. 86-90 and as to the alteration of the articles see s. 20 and notes at pp. 91-95.

Any company registered as an unlimited company may register under the present Act as a limited company, but such registration will not affect any debts, liabilities, obligations or contracts incurred or entered into by, to, with or on behalf of the company before the registration and these debts &c. may be enforced in manner provided by Part VIII of the present Act (s. 67).

An unlimited company having a share capital may, by its resolution for registration as a limited company, (a) increase the nominal amount of its share capital subject to the condition laid down in s. 68 and (b) provide that a specified portion of its uncalled share capital shall not be capable of being called up except in the event and for the purpose of the company being wound up (s. 68).

Reserve Liability of Limited Company.

A limited company may by special resolution provide that any portion of its share capital not already called up shall not be capable of being called up, except in the event and for the purpose of the company being wound up (see s. 69 and notes thereto).

Existing Companies.

An "existing company" has been defined as a company formed and registered under the Indian Companies Act, 1866, or under any Act or Acts repealed thereby, or under the Indian Companies Act, 1882 [s. 2 (7)]. The present Act applies to such a company, with the exception of Table A. See ss. 250 to 252.

Subsidiary Company and Holding Company.

For the definition of a subsidiary company see the new sub-s. (2) of s. 2. Roughly speaking it is a company more than 50 per cent. of whose issued share capital or voting power is held by another company or the majority of whose directors can be appointed by another company which is called the holding company. A subsidiary company, it appears, may be a public company, a private company or may not be a company within the meaning of the Companies Act. Where the shares of such a company are held as security by a company the ordinary business of which is the lending of money or where the majority of directors can be appointed by a company by virtue of powers contained in a debenture trust-deed, the former company will not be deemed to be a subsidiary company of the latter.

Where a prospectus is issued by a company which has been carrying on business prior to issue thereof the report required under sub-s. (1A) of s. 93 must show the profits of a subsidiary company also.

Where a holding company holds shares, directly or through a nominee, in one or more subsidiary companies, there shall be annexed to the balance sheet of the holding company the last audited balance sheet, profit and loss account and auditors' report of the subsidiary company or companies, and a statement signed in pursuance of s. 133 stating how the profits and losses of the subsidiary company, or, where there are two or more subsidiary companies, the aggregate profits and losses of those companies have been dealt with in or for the purposes of the accounts of the holding company, and in particular how and to what extent—(a) provision has been made for the losses of a subsidiary company either in the accounts of that company or of the holding company or of both, and (b) losses of a subsidiary company have been taken into account by the directors of the holding company in arriving at the profits and losses of the company as disclosed in its accounts. For detailed provisions in this respect the new s. 132A should be carefully read.

The holding company may by a resolution authorize representatives named therein to inspect the books of account kept by a subsidiary company [sub-s. (5) of s. 132A].

The rights conferred by s. 138 upon members of a company may be exercised in respect of a subsidiary company by members of the holding company as if they were members of that subsidiary company [sub-s. (6) of s. 132A].

S. 277M provides that a banking company shall not form any subsidiary company except a subsidiary company formed for the purpose of undertaking and executing trusts, undertaking the administration of estates as executor, trustee or otherwise and such other purposes as set forth in s. 277F as are incidental to the business of accepting deposits of money on current account or otherwise. Save as aforesaid a banking company shall not hold shares in any company whether as pledgee, mortgagee or absolute owner of an amount exceeding forty per cent. of the issued share capital of that company [see sub-s. (2) of s. 277M]. As to the saving of shares held by a banking company before 15th January, 1937 see proviso to sub-s. (2) of s. 277M.

A subsidiary company which is a private company is not entitled to most of the privileges and exemptions enjoyed by ordinary private companies [see under the heading Private Companies, ante].

Companies Authorised to be Registered under the present Act.

As to the companies authorized to be registered under the present Act, requirements for and mode of such registration and the effect of such registration see ss. 253 to 269. For applications by an existing company for registration as a limited company and an unlimited company, see Forms XXX and XXXI respectively at pp. 842-844. In the case of registration of an existing company as a limited company, for filing with the registrar copy of resolutions assenting to registration with limited liability, see Form XXXII at p. 844. For the filing of a list of members under s. 255 in connection with registration of an existing company see Form XXXIII at pp. 844-845. For the filing of statement of nominal capital, its division into shares, the number of shares taken and the amount paid thereon, or the amount of stock of which it consists also of the name and registered office of the company under ss. 255 and 266, see Form XXXIV at pp. 845-846. For declaration verifying documents delivered to the registrar with application for registration, see Form XXXV at p. 846. When a company is registered under these provisions all suits and other proceedings against it instituted before such registration will be allowed to proceed, but a decree or order passed therein will not be capable of execution against any individual member of the company, and in the event of the property and effects of the company being insufficient to satisfy the decree or order, an order may be obtained for winding up the company (s. 265). The provisions of the present Act in respect of staying and restraining suits and legal proceedings upon the presentation of a winding up petition, and those in respect of commencement of and proceeding with suits and legal proceedings after the winding up order will apply to such a company.

Companies Established Outside British India.

Every company incorporated outside British India which has or establishes a place of business in British India is required to comply with the provisions of s. 277. The following Forms are to be used for the following purposes: for particulars of mortgages or charges, Form XVIII (p. 831); for particulars of modification of mortgage or charge, Form XIX (p. 832); for particulars of mortgage or charge subject to which property has been acquired on or after 15th January, 1937; Form XX (p. 833); for registration of series of debentures, Form XXII (p. 836); for registration when more than one series of debentures, Form XXIII (p. 837); for memorandum of satisfaction of mortgage or charge, Form XXVII (pp. 840-841); for filing charter &c., mentioned in cl. (a) of sub-s. (1) of s. 277, constituting or defining the constitution of the company, Form XXXVI (pp. 847-848); for notice of address of the registered or principal office of the company, Form XXXVII (p. 849); for lists of directors and managers required by s. 277, Form XXXVIII (pp. 849-850); for return of persons authorised to accept service under s. 277, Form XXXIX (p. 850); for notice of alteration in charter &c. under s. 277, Form XL (p. 851); for notice of alteration in the registered or principal office of the company under s. 277, Form XLI (pp. 851-852); for notice of situation of the principal place of business in British India or of any change therein, Form XLII (pp. 852-853); for notice of alteration of directors and managers, Form XLIII (p. 853); for notice of alteration in the names of (or ?) addresses of persons authorised to accept process, Form XLIV (p. 854); for statement of affairs under s. 277, Form XLV (p. 855).

New provisions.

With respect to the above companies a number of new provisions has been introduced by the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936 and the amending Act II of 1938.

The company is to file with the registrar the full address of that office in British India which is to be deemed the principal place of its business [see the new cl. (e) of sub-s. (1) of s. 277].

If the balance sheet (three copies of which are to be filed with the registrar) of such a company required to be filed under cl. (i) of sub-s. (3) of s. 277 does not contain all the information provided for in Form H in the Third Schedule (see pp. 792-794), such supplementary statements as will furnish such information will have to be filed every year with the registrar of the province in which the company has its principal place of business [see cl. (i) of sub-s. (3) of s. 277].

Every company incorporated outside British India shall, if the liability of its members is limited, cause notice of that fact to be stated in legible characters in every prospectus inviting subscriptions for its shares, and in all bill-heads and letter paper, notices, advertisements and other official publications of the company in British India, and to be affixed on every place where it carries on business [s. 277 (5)].

As to the restriction on sale and offer for sale of shares and debentures before the issue of a prospectus and as to the contents &c. of such prospectus see ss. 277A and 277B. For the consequences of cotravention of these sections see sub-s. (5) of s. 277A.

It shall not be lawful for any person to go from house to house offering shares of such a company for subscription or purchase (see s. 277C). For the consequences of contravention of this section see sub-s. (3) of this section.

As to the provision for registration of charges see the new s. 277D. The provisions of ss. 118 and 119 (registration and appointment of a receiver and filing his account) will mutatis mutandis apply to such companies. The provisions of s. 130 will apply to such companies to the extent of requiring them to keep at their principal place of business in British India books of account regarding money received and expended, sales and purchases made, and assets and liabilities in relation to their business in British India [see the new s. 277E]. The amendments made in ss. 277D and 277E by the amending Act II of 1938 have been shown within square brackets.

Compromise and Arrangement.

S. 153 of the Act provides that where a compromise or arrangement is proposed between a company and its creditors or any class of them or between the company and its members or any class of them, the Court may on the application of the company, or any creditor, member or liquidator of the company, order a meeting to be called, held and conducted in such manner as the Court directs. If a majority in number representing three-fourths in value of such creditots or members present in person or by proxy at the meeting agree to any compromise or arrangement, the same shall, if sanctioned by the Court, be binding on the creditors or members whose meeting was directed to be held and also on the company, and in the case of a company in the course of being wound up, on the liquidator and contributories.

This section is wide enough to include any reasonable compromise or arrangement and, as a matter of fact, advantage has been taken of this section to carry through schemes of the most varied character.

In this country, particularly in Bengal, on account of economic distress a large number of loan companies which took deposits of money on condition to repay at a notice of a week, 6 months, a year or at most 2 or 3 years and having no corresponding liquid assets, has been unable to meet the demands of the depositors. They have largely taken and are taking advantage of this section. Most of them having adequate securities in landed properties, hope to repay the depositors' money if they get sufficient time. For this purpose a scheme is prepared for sanction at a depositors' and creditors' meeting under which they agree not to demand their dues (whether under judgment or not) for a certain number of years in which time the company undertakes to pay them gradually and rateably as the company's dues from its debtors are realized. As regards management in the meantime, majority of the directors are elected under the scheme by the depositors and creditors and the directors again elect the managing directors and other executive authorities of the company and control them in the matter of realization and distribution of the moneys realized. The depositors and other creditors readily assent to the scheme as they have found by experience that they may get more in this way than by a compulsory liquidation, which, to say the least, is troublesome and expensive. It is not unlikely that in this country this alternative mode of liquidation will more and more appeal to the creditors of companies which cannot readily meet their obligations but can do so partly at least in course of a few years under the control of directors appointed by the creditors. It should be noted however that for this purpose sometimes it may be found necessary to alter the articles of association.

In this way within the time allotted in the scheme the assets of the company must be realized and distributed ; but on the expiration of the time mentioned above, the creditors will be at liberty to take whatever action they choose.

In England the commonest form of scheme is, as observed in Palmer's Company Law [13th edition at p. 463], that a new company is to be formed, that the debenture-holders of the existing company shall take in exchange debentures or preference shares of the new company and the unsecured creditors shall take a composition of so much in the pound payable partly in cash and partly in shares or debentures in the new company and that the shareholders receive only partly paid up shares in the new company.

As a matter of fact any scheme of reconstruction of a company, reorganization of its share capital or amalgamation with another company may be carried through under this section.

As to the principle on which the section is based, the Court's jurisdiction, what the Court will consider in sactioning a scheme, meeting, voting and proxy &c. see pp. 375-387.

As to the application for sanction of the scheme and the procedure in Court see Rules 40-47 at pp. 863-864.

New provisions.

An order made by the Court under sub-s. (2) of s. 153 sanctioning the scheme shall have no effect until a certified copy of the order has been filed with the registrar, and a copy of every such order must be annexed to every copy of memorandum of association issued after the order has been made [sub-s. (3) of s. 153]. For the consequences of default in complying with sub-s. (3) see sub-s. (4).

Power has been given to the Court to stay any suit or proceeding against the company pending an application under s. 153 [see sub-s. (5)]. A right of appeal has also been given from a decision of the Court [see sub-s. (7)].

For the purpose of this section unsecured creditors who may have filed suits or obtained decrees will be deemed to be of the same class as other unsecured creditors [see sub-s. (6)].

Reproducing ss. 154 and 155 of the English Act of 1929 the new ss. 153A and 153B have made detailed provisions for facilitating arrangements and reconstructions, amalgamations, compromises and arrangements and power has been given to acquire shares of dissenting shareholders in this connection. For form of notice to dissentient shareholders under s. 153B, see Form XXIX at pp. 841-842.

Defunct Companies.

There is a way in which a company's existence may inexpensively be brought to an end. S. 247 provides that if the registrar has reasonable cause to believe that a company is not carrying on business or in operation he may proceed under this section and after complying with the provisions thereof strike its name off the register, and on the publication in the local official Gazette of a notice to that effect, the company will be dissolved. But the liability of every director and member of the company will continue and may be enforced as if the company had not been dissolved.

If the company or any member or creditor thereof feel aggrieved by the company having been struck off the register, the Court may, on application, order the name of the company to be restored to the register. See s. 247 and notes at pp. 613-614.

When the directors or other authorities of a company find that on account of poor response of the investing public to take up its shares or for any other reason the company is unable to commence business, or on account of want of fund and inability to raise money it cannot carry on business and there are no assets of the company worth the name for distribution amongst the creditors and shareholders, all that they have to do is to inform the registrar that the company is not in operation or has ceased to carry on business and the registrar will take necessary action.

Court having Jurisdiction.

Cl. (3) of sub-s. (1) of s. 2 says that "the Court" means the Court having jurisdiction under the Act. S. 3 says that the Court having jurisdiction under the Act shall be the High Court having jurisdiction in the place at which the registered office is situate. For the purposes of jurisdiction to wind up companies the expression "registered office" means the place which has longest been the registered office of the company during the 6 months immediately preceding the presentation of the petition for winding up [see sub-s. (2) of s. 3 and notes at pp. 48-49]. Where the High Court makes an order for winding up a company, it may direct all subsequent proceedings to be had in a District Court [see s. 164]. The High Court has power to transfer winding up proceedings from one District Court to another [s. 165].

Under the proviso to sub-s. (1) of s. 3 the Local Government could however empower any District Court to exercise all or any of the jurisdictions conferred by the Act upon the High Court, and in that case such District Court was, as regards the jurisdiction so conferred, the Court in respect of all companies having their registered offices in the district.

By the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937 which came into force on 1st April of that year, the expression

"Central Government" in s. 3, as in many other sections, has been substituted for the words "Local Government". The effect is that from the aforesaid date the power referred to in the last paragraph is to be exercised by the Central Government. But with effect from 1st April, 1938 the Central Government has entrusted the Provincial Governments with its functions in respect of all the provisions of this Act other than sub-s. (3) of s. 11, sub-s. (5) of s. 107, sub-ss. (1), (2A) and (2B) of s. 144, s. 151, sub-s. (1) of s. 249, sub-s. (8) of s. 277 and sub-s. (2) of s. 277G (see Gazette of India dated 26th March, 1938, Part I, p. 440). In respect of companies whose objects are confined to a single province and which are not trading corporations within the meaning of s. 2A (see pp. 26 and 42) these powers are the powers of the Provincial Government (see s. 289A and notes at p. 660).

As a matter of fact various Local Governments conferred limited or full jurisdictions on selected District Courts in their provinces long ago (see notes under s. 3, pp. 44-45).

Winding up.

There are three modes of winding up a company, namely—(1) winding up by the Court otherwise called compulsory winding up, (2) voluntary winding up and (3) winding up subject to the supervision of the Court (s. 155). The voluntary winding up may be either the members' or the creditors' [see sub-s. (3) of s. 207].

Winding Up by the Court.

Grounds.

A company may be wound up by the Court for the following reasons :—

(1) If the company has passed a special resolution that the company be wound up by the Court. In such a case the directors are entitled to present the winding up petition in the name of the company. See s. 162 (i) and noties at p. 407. As to what is a special resolution see s. 81 and notes.

(2) If default is made in filing the statutory report or in holding the statutory meeting [s. 162 (ii)]. Such a petition cannot be presented by any person except a shareholder, nor before the expiration of 14 days after the last day on which the meeting ought to have been held [see s. 166, proviso (b)]. If a petition is presented on this ground the Court may, instead of directing that the company be wound up, give direction for the statutory report to be filed or the meeting to be held, or make such other order as may be just [s. 77 (9)].

(3) If the company does not commence its business within a year from its incorporation, or suspends its business for a whole year [see s. 162 (iii) and notes at p. 407]. It should be remembered that after allotment of shares a company is to apply to the registrar of companies for certificate for commencement of business on compliance with the requirements of s. 103 (1) and the statutory meeting is to be held within 6 months from the date at which the company is entitled to commence business. So if a company delays in applying for the certificate for commencement of business for more than a year, it cannot be proceeded against under clause (ii) of s. 162, but a petition for winding it up may be presented under clause (iii).

(4) If the number of members is reduced, in the case of a private company, below two or, in the case of any other company, below seven [see s. 162 (iv) and notes at p. 408].

(5) If the company is unable to pay its debts. A company will be deemed to be unable to pay its debts in the following cases :—

(a) If a creditor to whom the company is indebted in a sum exceeding Rs. 500 has served a demand on the company which has for 3 weeks thereafter neglected to pay the sum or to secure or compound for it to the reasonable satisfaction of the creditor [see s. 163 (1) (i) and for detailed notes see pp. 408-411]. As to the meanings of the words employed in s. 163 and notes thereto see pp. 418-421. It was held that a notice of demand signed by an Advocate or any other agent did not satisfy the requirements of s. 163 (see notes at p. 420). But the new sub-s. (2) of s. 163 provides that the demand will be deemed to have been duly made if it is signed by an agent or legal adviser duly authorized on behalf of the creditor, or in the case of a firm if it is signed by such agent or by a legal adviser or any one member of the firm on behalf of the firm.

(b) If execution or other process issued on a decree or order of any Court in favour of a creditor of the company is returned unsatisfied in whole or in part [see s. 163 (1) (ii)].

(c) If it is proved to the satisfaction of the Court that the company is unable to pay its debts which include the contingent and prospective liabilities of the company [see s. 163 (1) (iii)]. It should be remembered, as observed by Lord Wrenbury, that a company may be at the same time insolvent and wealthy (see notes at p 408). A company will be deemed to be unable to pay its debts within the meaning of s. 162 (v) if it is unable to meet its current demands, although the assets when realized may exceed its liabilites (see notes at pp. 408-411).

(6) If the Court is of opinion that it is just and equitable that the company should be wound up. See s. 162, cl. (vi) the terms of which are very wide. A company may be wound up under this clause where its substratum is gone, where it is a "bubble company", where there is a complete deadlock in its management, where it is formed to carry on an illegal business, where its object is fraudulent or where the particular circumstances of a case require it (see notes at pp. 412-417.

Contributorries.

The term "contributory" means every person liable to contribute to the assets of a company in the event of its being wound up (see s. 158).

The new sub-s. (1) of s. 159 provides that the liability of a contributory shall create a debt payable at the time specified in the calls made on him by the liquidator.

No claim on the liability of a contributory will be cognizable by any Court of Small Causes outside the towns of Calcutta, Madras and Bombay [sub-s. (2) of s. 159].

If a contributory dies, his legal representatives and heirs will be liable to the extent of the estate of the deceased coming into their hands [sub-ss. (1) and (2) of s. 160].

The new sub-s. (3) of s. 160 provides that for the purposes of that section the surviving co-parceners of a contributory who is a member of a Mitakshara joint Hindu family shall be deemed to be his legal representative.

Subject to the provisions of s. 156 in every winding up every present and past member of a company shall be liable to contribute to the assets of the company to an amount sufficient for the payment of its debts and liabilities and the costs, charges and expenses of the winding up, and for the adjustment of the rights of the contributories among themselves with the following qualifications :—

(1) A past member shall not be liable to contribute if he has ceased to be a member for 1 year or upwards before the commencement of the winding up (for the dates of commencement of different kinds of winding up see p. 428), nor in respect of debts or liabilities contracted after he had ceased to be a member. A past member will not also be made liable unless it appears to the Court that the existing members are unable to satisfy the contributions required to be made by them in pursuance of the Act. So it is apprehended that if all the required contributions are realised from all the present members, but they do not satisfy the debts, liabilities, &c. mentioned above, still the past members will not be liable [see clauses (i) to (iii) of sub-s. (1) of s. 156].

(2) Members, past or present, of companies limited by shares are liable to contribute only the amount unpaid on the shares and no more [see cl. (iv) of sub-s. (1) of s. 156].

(3) Members of a company limited by guarantee are liable to contribute only up to the amount of their guarantee and no more [see cl. (v) of sub-s. (1) and sub-s. (2) of s. 156].

As to the saving of any provision in a policy of insurance see cl. (vi) of sub-s. (1) of s. 156.

As to the set off of dividends &c. due to a member against the amount for which he is liable as a contributory see cl. (vii) of sub-s. (1) of s. 156.

For the liability of directors whose liability is unlimited see s. 157.

Petition for winding up.

A petition for winding up a company may be presented by the company itself, by any creditors or creditor including any contingent or prospective creditor, by any contributory or contributories, or by all or any of those parties, together or separately, or by the registrar (see the amended s. 166).

As to who are the contributories and their liabilities see ss. 156 to 161 and notes to those sections. A contributory is not entitled to present a winding up petition unless (i) the number of members of the company is reduced, in the case of a private company, below 2, or, in the case of any other company, below 7, or (ii) he is a registered holder of the share or shares for at least 6 months during the 18 months before the commencement of the winding up, or they have devolved on him through the death of a former holder (see s. 166 and notes at pp. 423-426). A winding up by the Court commences at the time of presentation of the petition (s. 168).

The registrar of companies will not be entitled to present a winding up petition—(1) except on the ground that from the financial condition of the company as disclosed in its balance sheet or from the report of the inspector appointed under s. 138 it appears that the company is unable to pay its debts, and (2) unless the previous sanction of the Government has been obtained therefor after the company has been afforded an opportunity of being heard [see proviso (aa) to s. 166].

A petition by a contingent or prospective creditor will not be heard until he has given security for costs and until a prima facie case for winding up has been established to the satisfaction of the Court [see s. 166 (c)]. As to which of the creditors can present a petition for winding up and which of them cannot, see notes at p. 423.

Different High Courts have made rules prescribing the mode of proceedings to be had for winding up a company in such Court and the Courts subordinate thereto (see s. 246). As to those made by the Calcutta High Court see App. F, pp. 859-918. For want of space the rules made by other High Courts could not be given in this book, but they are on the same lines as they are all presumably based upon the English Companies (Winding up) Rules.

As to the verification, advertisement and service of the petition &c. see Rules 51-57 at p. 865, and also the forms referred to there.

As to the attendance of creditors and contributories at proceedings in Court see Rules 48-50 at p. 864. For the mode of service of notice &c. upon creditors and contributories see Rules 250 and 251 at p. 882.

Injunction.

After the presentation of the winding up petition and before making an order for winding up the Court may, upon application of the company or of any creditor or contributory, restain further proceedings in any suit or proceeding against the company (s. 169).

Provisional liquidator.

At any time after the presentation of a petition and the making of an order for winding up, the Court may appoint a provisional liquidator but shall before making any such appointment give notice to the company [see the amended sub-s. (2) of s. 175]. On hearing the petition of the Court makes an order for winding up the company, it shall, except where a liquidator is appointed simultaneously, forthwith cause intimation thereof to be sent to the official receiver [see the new sub-s. (3) of s. 170]. As to the mode of application for such appointment, form of order &c. see Rules 72-75 at p. 867.

Hearing of the petition.

As to the procedure for hearing the petition see Rules 58-64 at pp. 865-866. On hearing the petition the Court may dismiss it with or without cost, adjourn the hearing, make any interim order or pass order for winding up the company (see s. 170 and notes). As to the form of the order and service and advertisement thereof see pp. 865 and 889. As to the summons for directions to be taken out by official liquidator see Rules 69 & 70 at p. 867.

When an order has been made for winding up a company, the petitioner or his attorney must forthwith file with the registrar of companies a notice and a copy of the order respectively (see the amended s. 172 and Rule 65 at p. 866).

As to the use of any affidavit in any proceeding taken in the winding up after the order see Rule 71 at p. 867.

Such order will be deemed to be notice of discharge to the servants of the company, except when its business in continued [s. 172 (3)].

A winding up order will operate in favour of all creditors and contributories of the company (s. 167).

As soon as a winding up order has been made, the official receiver automatically becomes the official liquidator of the company and will continue to act as such until his further continuance is terminated by an order of the Court [sub-s. (2) of the new s. 171A]. The official receiver shall as such liquidator forthwith take into his custody and control all the books, documents and assets of the company. He will receive such remuneration as the Court will fix [sub-ss. (3) & (4) of s. 171A]. For the meaning of the expression "official receiver" see sub-s (1) of s. 171A.

Transfer of winding up proceedings.

For the provision as to transfer of winding up proceedings from the High Court to a District Court or from one District Court to another District Court see ss. 164 and 165. As to the mode of application for such transfer see Rule 240 at p. 880.

Stay of suits &c. against the company.

Where a winding up order has been made or a provisional liquidator has been appointed, no suit or other legal proceeding against the company can be commenced or proceeded with except by the leave of the winding-up Court. See the amended s. 171 and notes at pp. 435-442. Before the amendment suits or other legal proceedings against the company were not automatically stayed before the winding up order. But now as soon as a provisional liquidator is appointed they are automatically stayed. In this connection see s. 232 where it has been provided that in the case of a winding-up by or subject to the supervision of the Court, any attachment, distress or execution put in force against or any sale held of the properties of the company without leave of the Court after the commencement of the winding up shall be void. But proceedings by the Government are saved.

After an order for winding up a company by or under the supervision of the Court has been passed, all suits and proceedings to which the company is or shall be a party then pending, or thereafter instituted in, or transferred to the High Court will be assigned to the Company Judge (see Rule 241 at pp. 880-881).

Stay of winding up proceedings.

At any time after an order for winding up, on the application of any creditor or contributory, the Court can stay the winding up proceedings altogether or for a limited time on such terms and conditions as the Court thinks fit. See s. 173 and notes at pp. 444-445.

Wishes of creditors and contributories.

In all matters relating to the winding up the Court will have regard to the wishes of the creditors and contributories as proved to it by sufficient evidence ; see s. 174 and notes at pp. 445-446. For this purpose the Court may direct meetings of the creditors or contributories to be called and conducted in such manner as the Court directs, and may appoint a person to act as chairman of the meeting and to report the result to the Court. In the case of creditors regard must be had to the value of each creditor's debt, and in the case of contributories regard is to be had to the number of votes each contributory is entitled to under the articles (see s. 239 and notes).

As to the meetings of creditors and contributories and proxies thereat see Rules 168 to 194 at pp. 875-877, and the forms referred to there.

As to the stamp on a proxy paper at a creditors' or contributories' meetings see App. L, p. 1197.

Official liquidator.

For the provisions for the appointment, resignation, removal &c., of an official liquidator and as to how he should be described see ss. 175 to 177 and notes thereto. As to the procedure for his appointment, security to be furnished by him and his duties see Rule 66 at p. 866 and Rules 76-92 at pp. 867-868. As to his remuneration see Rules 121 and 122 at p. 871. For the provisions for death, resignation &c. of the official liquidator see Rules 116 to 120 at p. 871.

The official liquidator, whether appointed provisionally or not, should take into his custody or under his control, all the property, effects &c., of the company (see the amended s. 178).

For the powers of an official liquidator with the sanction of the Court see ss. 179 and 180, and notes thereto. Subject to the control of the Court he can also exercise and perform the powers and duties of the Court in respect of—(a) holding and conducting meetings to ascertain the wishes of creditors and contributories, (b) settling lists of contributories and rectifying the register of members where required, and collecting and applying the assets, (c) requiring delivery of property or documents, (d) making calls, and (e) fixing time within which debts and claims must be proved. But the official liquidator must not, without the special leave of the Court, rectify the register of members or make any call [sub-s. (2) of s. 246]. As to the Rules regarding the official liquidator's duties, investments, books of account and records, statement of affairs, &c. see pp. 867-870. See also the amended s. 182.

The official liquidator may, with the sanction of the Court, appoint an advocate, attorney or pleader entitled to appear before the Court to assist him in the performance of his duties. But if he is himself an attorney, he cannot appoint his partner at a remuneration (s. 181).

In the administration and distribution of the assets of the company the official liquidator will have regard to any direction that may be given by resolutions of the creditors and contributories or by the committee of inspection, and any directions given by the creditors or contributories at any general meeting shall in case of conflict be deemed to override any directions given by the committee of inspection. The official liquidator may summon general meetings of creditors or contributories for ascertaining their wishes, but will be bound to do so when directed by their resolution or requested in writing by one-third in value of the creditors or contributories (see the amended s. 183). If any person is aggrieved by any act or decision of the official liquidator, he may apply to the Court for redress [s. 183 (5)]. The official liquidator may himself apply to the Court for directions [s. 183 (3)]. But this should be done sparingly.

For the rules relating to debts, claims and proofs see Rules 123 to 137 at pp. 871-872 ; those relating to collection and distribution of assets and preparation of list of contributories see Rules 138-146 at pp. 872-873 ; for making calls and compromise claims see Rules 147 to 154 at pp. 873-874. As to the provision for appeal against the liquidator's decision see s. 183 (5) and Rules 155 and 156 at p. 874. For Rules regarding sales of property and dividends see Rules 158-167 at pp. 874-875.

The Rules relating to the general meetings of creditors and contributories to be called and held by the official liquidator and the proceedings and proxies thereat are to be found in Rules 168 to 194 at pp. 875-877.

The official liquidator must keep proper minute books of his proceedings and any creditor or contributory may, subject to the control of the Court, inspect the same personally or by agent [sub-s. (1) of s. 182].

As to the banking account and investment by the offiicial liquidator see Rules 93-99 at p. 869 and as to his books of account and records see Rules 100-102 at p. 869. As to the disposal of books, papers and documents, during progress of the liquidation, by the official liquidator see rule 120 at p. 871.

New provisions regarding liquidators.

The obligation to furnish information and explanation relating to documents submitted to the registrar as provided in the amended s. 137 applies mutatis mutandis to all liquidators also [see sub-s. (7) of s. 137].

The new s. 177B provides that the official liquidator shall, as soon as practicable, submit a preliminary report to the Court as to matters mentioned in clauses (a) to (c) of sub-s. (1) of that section. The official liquidator may also make a further report or reports stating the manner in which the company was formed and whether in his opinion any fraud has been committed by any person in the promotion or formation, or by any director or other officer of the company since the formation thereof [see sub-s. (2) of s. 177B].

The official liquidator must at least twice in each year present to the Court an account of his receipts and payments in the form prescribed by the High Court [see the new sub-ss. (2) to (4) of s. 182].

Every liquidator of a company which is being wound up by the Court shall in such manner and at such times as may be prescribed by the High court, pay the money received by him into a scheduled bank as defined in clause (e) of s. 2 of the Reserve Bank of India Act, 1934 (for a list of the scheduled banks see pp. 286-287). As to the penalty for retaining by him more than Rs. 500 for more than 10 days see sub-s. (2) of the new s. 244A. Such a liquidator must open a special banking account and pay all sums received by him as liquidator into such account [sub-s. (3) of s. 244A].

Where a company is being wound up (by or under supervision of the Court, or voluntarily) if there are in the hands of the liquidator dividends or assets unclaimed or undistributed for six months, he must forthwith pay the same into the Reserve Bank of India to the credit of the Central Government in the Companies Liquidation Account. For detailed provisions see the new s. 244B introduced by Act XXXVI of 1940. For form of the said Account see p. 609.

Committee of Inspection.

Following ss. 198 and 199 of the English Act of 1929 the Companies (Amendment) Act of 1936 has made provisions for a committee of inspection, both in the winding up by the Court and creditors' voluntary winding up. See ss. 178A and 209C respectively.

By s. 178A it has been provided that the official liquidator must convene separate meetings of the creditors and the contributories for the purpose of determining whether a committee of inspection should be appointed to act with the liquidator and who are to be the members thereof. In the event of a disagreement between the resolution of the two meetings the matter will be decided by the Court [see sub-ss. (1), (2) and (3) of s. 178A]. As to the composition, rights, proceedings &c. of the committee of inspection see sub-ss. (4) to (12) of s. 178A. See also Rules 112-115 at pp. 870-871.

In the administration of the assets of the company and in the distribution thereof among the creditors the official liquidator shall have regard to the directions given by resolutions of the meetings of creditors or contributories, or by the committee of inspection and in case of conflict the directions given by the former will prevail [see the amended sub-s. (1) of s. 183].

Statement of affairs to the official liquidator.

A statement of affairs of the company verified by an affidavit and containing the particulars mentioned in clauses (a) to (d) of sub-s. (1) of s. 177A is to be submitted to the official liquidator by persons who are mentioned in sub-s. (2) of s. 177A. This is a very onerous duty cast upon the directors, managers and other officers, past or present, of the company in respect of which an order for winding up has been made, and should be carefully read. For the Rules relating to this matter see Rules 103-108 at pp. 869-870.

Report and further report of official liquidator.

After receipt of the above statement the official liquidator must within the period mentioned in sub-s. (1) of s. 177B submit a preliminary report to the Court as to the matters specified in clauses (a) to (c) of that sub-section. He may also make a further report or reports stating the manner in which the company was formed, and whether in his opinion any fraud has been committed by any person in its promotion or formation, or by any director or other officer of the company in relation to the company since the formation thereof, and any other matter which in the liquidator's opinion it is desirable to bring to the notice of the Court (see s. 177B and Rules 109 to 112 at p. 870).

Ordinary and Extraordinary Powers of Court.

As to the ordinary powers of the Court regarding settlement of list of contributories and application of assets of the company, delivery of property, payment of debts by contributories, calls, payment into bank, exclusion of creditors not proving in time, adjustment of rights of contributories, distribution of surplus assets, payment of costs and dissolution of the company see ss. 184 to 194 and notes to those sections.

Private and public examinations.

The Court has power for private examination to summon any officer of the company or any person known or suspected to have in his possession any property of the company, or supposed to be indebted to the company, or any person who is deemed capable of giving information concerning the trade, dealings, affairs or property of the company. The Court may also require him to produce any documents in his custody or power relating to the company. If any person so summoned refuses to appear, the Court may cause him to be apprehended and brought before the Court for such examination. See s. 195 and notes at pp. 496-499. The Court can proceed under this section of its own motion.

On the application of the official liquidator the Court may direct any person who has taken part in the promotion or formation of the company, or has been a director, manager or other officer of the company, to attend before the Court for public examination regarding the promotion, formation or conduct of the business of the company or as to his conduct and dealings as director, manager or other officer of the company. But the official liquidator must state in his application that in his opinion a fraud has been committed by any such person in the promotion or formation of the company or by any director or other officer of the company in relation to the company since its formation. See s. 196 and notes at pp. 500-501. As to the mode of application, who may attend the examination and the proceedings thereof &c. see Rules 195-208 at pp. 877-878.

The Court has the further power to cause an absconding contributory to be arrested and his books, papers and moveable properties to be seized (s. 197).

The above ordinary and extraordinary powers of the Court are in addition to any existing powers of instituting proceedings against any contributory or debtor of the company or his estate for the recovery of any call or other sum (s. 198).

As to the provisions for the liquidator's duty upon termination of winding up proceedings see Rules 235-239 at p. 880.

Enforcement of and Appeal from Orders.

As to the enforcement of the orders of the Court see ss. 199 to 201 and notes, and re-hearings of and appeals from any order or decision in the matter of winding up of a company by the Court see s. 202 and notes at pp. 504-508.

Service of Notice &c.

No service under the Rules made by the High Court will be deemed invalid by reason of any error or omission in names &c. (see Rule 251 at p. 882).

Costs.

For the rules regarding costs see Rules 252 to 255 at p. 882.

Voluntary Winding up.

A company may under s. 203 be wound up voluntarily in the following cases :—

(1) by an ordinary resolution of the company requiring it to be wound up voluntarily when, (a) the period fixed for the duration of the company expires, or (b) the event occurs on the occurrence of which the articles provide that the company is to be dissolved ;

(2) by a special resolution that the company be wound up voluntarily ;

(3) by an extraordinary resolution to the effect that the company cannot by reason of its liabilities continue its business and that it is advisable to wind it up.

As to what are extraordinary and special resolutions and how they are to be passed see the amended s. 81 and notes thereto.

As to the form of notice of a general meeting to pass extraordinary resolution to wind up voluntarily see Form 145 at pp. 1189-1190, and for the form of notice, of a meeting to pass a special resolution to wind up voluntarily see Form 146 at p. 1190.

A voluntary winding up is deemed to commence at the time of the passing of the resolution for voluntarily winding up (s. 204). The expression "resolution for voluntarily winding up" means a resolution passed under clauses (1), (2) or (3) of the amended s. 203. From that time the company must cease to carry on its business except so far as may be required for the beneficial winding up of the company. But notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the articles the corporate state and corporate powers of the company will continue until it is dissolved (s. 205).

Within 10 days of the passing of any special or extraordinary resolution for winding up voluntarily the company must advertize the notice of such resolution as provided in s. 206 (1). As to the penalty for default see s. 206 (2). The form of such notice has been given at p. 1190 (Form 147).

New provisions relating to voluntary winding up.

For the original sections 207 to 219, the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936 has reproduced ss. 230 to 252 and 254 and 255 of the English

Act of 1929 in the new ss. 207 to 218. Two kinds of voluntary winding up have been introduced—(1) a members' voluntary winding up and (2) a creditors' voluntary winding up.

Declaration of solvency.

Where the directors at a meeting held before the date on which the notices of the general meeting at which the resolution for winding up is to be proposed are sent out make a declaration verified by an affidavit to the effect that upon making a full enquiry into the affairs of the company they have formed the opinion that the company will be able to pay its debts in full within a period not exceeding 3 years from the date of the passing of the resolution for winding up the company voluntarily, the winding up will be a members' voluntary winding up. The declaration must be supported by a report of the company's auditors and be delivered to the registrar for registration. Where such a declaration is not made, the winding up will be a creditors' voluntary winding up [see the new s. 207]. For the form of declaration of solvency see Rule 248B at p. 881 and Form 69 at p. 916.

Members' voluntary winding up.

The company in general meeting shall appoint one or more liquidators and may fix their remuneration. On the appointment of a liquidator all the powers of the directors shall cease except so far as the company in general meeting or the liquidator sanctions the continuance thereof (s. 208A).

If a vacancy occurs in the office of liquidator the company in general meeting may, subject to any arrangement with the creditors, fill the vacancy (see s. 208B).

As to the power of the liquidator to accept shares &c. in consideration for the whole or part of the business or property of the company and the procedure for completing the transaction see s. 208C.

As to the duty of the liquidator to call a general meeting at the end of each year and of laying before the meeting an account of his acts and dealings and of the conduct of the winding up see sub-s. (1) of s. 208D (see Rule 248 at p. 881). For the consequences of default see sub-s. (2).

As soon as the affairs of the company are fully wound up, the liquidator shall make up an account of the winding up and call a general meeting for laying before it the account [sub-s. (1) of s. 208E]. The notice of the meeting should be given in accordance with sub-s. (2).

Within one week after the meeting the liquidator shall send to the registrar a copy of the account and shall make a return to him of the holding of the meeting and in default shall be liable to penalty [see. sub-s (3) of s. 208E and Rule 248A at p. 881].

On the expiration of 3 months from the registration of the return the company will be deemed to be dissolved ; but the Court may on the application of the liquidator or any interested person make an order deferring the date of dissolution [see sub-s. (4) of s. 208E]. The person, on whose application such an order is made, must within 21 days of the order deliver to the registrar a certified copy of the order and in default will be liable to a penalty [see sub-s. (5)].

Creditors' voluntary winding up.

In the case of a creditors' voluntary winding up the company is to cause a meeting of the creditors to be summoned and notices thereof sent and advertized at the time and in the manner mentioned in s. 209A. As to the statement &c. to be laid before the meeting and the procedure there-at see sub-ss. (3) and (4) of s. 209A. For the consequences of contravention of the provisions thereof see sub-s. (6).

As to the meetings of creditors and contributories in relation to creditors' voluntary winding up see rules 218 to 230 at pp. 879-880.

The creditors and the company at their respective meetings mentioned in s. 209A will nominate a person to be liquidator, and if they nominate different persons, the final decision will rest with the Court (s. 209B).

As to the appointment of a committee of inspection and the composition thereof see s. 209C.

The committee of inspection, or if there is no such committee, the creditors may fix the remuneration of the liquidator, and where the remuneration is not so fixed, it will be determined by the Court [sub-s. (1) of s. 209D].

On the appointment of a liquidator all the powers of the directors shall cease, except so far as the committee of inspection or the creditors sanction the continuance thereof [sub-s. (2) of s. 209D].

Any vacancy in the office of a liquidator other than a liquidator appointed by the Court may be filled by the creditors (s. 209E).

The power of liquidator to accept shares &c., in consideration for the whole or a part of the company's business or property mentioned in s. 208C shall not be exercised except with the sanction of the Court or the committee of inspection (s. 209F).

As to the duty of the liquidator to call meetings of the company and of the creditors at the end of each year and of laying before the meeting an account of the dealings and of the conduct of the winding up see s. 209G (see Rule 248 at p. 881). As to the consequences of default see sub-s. (2) thereof.

The provisions for the final meeting and dissolution are similar to those in a members' voluntary winding up mentioned above (see s. 209H and Rule 248A at p. 881).

Provisions applicable to either mode of winding up.

As to the distribution of the company's property see s. 211. For the powers and duties of a liquidator see s. 212.

If from any cause whatever there is no liquidator acting the Court may appoint one. The Court may on cause shown remove a liquidator and appoint another in his place (s. 213).

The liquidator must, within 21 days after his appointment, deliver to the registrar a notice of his appointment [see sub-s. (1) of s. 214]. As to the form of notice see Rule 249 at p. 882 and Forms 67A and 67B at p. 915. For the consequences of default see sub-s. (2) of s. 214.

Any arrangement between a company about to be or in the course of being wound up and its creditors shall, subject to the right of appeal under s. 215, be binding on the company if sanctioned by an extraordinary resolution, and on the company if acceded to by three-fourths in number and value of the creditors [sub-s. (1) of s. 215]. Any creditor or contributory may within 3 weeks from the completion of the arrangement appeal to the Court against it, and the Court may vary or confirm the arrangement [sub-s. (2) of s. 215]. As to the provision relating to appeal under s. 215 see Rule 157 (a) at p. 874.

As to the disposal of unclaimed funds and undistributed assets in the hands of a liquidator in a winding up see the new s. 244B and the Form given at p. 609 and that in a voluntary winding up see Rules 231-234 at p. 880.

Where a company finds it difficult to carry on its business on account of pressure from its creditors it may proceed under s. 153, s. 215, s. 208 C or s. 209F if any satisfactory arrangement is possible.

Power to apply to Court.

The voluntary liquidator or any creditor or contributory of the company has the right to apply to the Court to determine any question arising in the winding up, or to exercise, as respects the enforcing of calls or any other matters, all or any of the powers which the Court might exercise in a compulsory winding up (s. 216).

The liquidator or any contributory or creditor may apply for an order setting aside any attachment, distress or execution put into force against the estate or effects of the company after the commencement of the winding up, i. e., after the resolution for voluntary winding up is passed. Such application shall be made—(a) if the attachment &c. are put into force by a High Court, to such High Court ; (b) if the attachment &c. are put into force by any other Court, then to the Court having jurisdiction to wind up the company [see sub-s. (2) of s. 216].

Under the powers conferred by s. 216 the Court can stay suits and proceedings against the company and order delivery of books and examination of persons. In short it will exercise all the powers exercisable in a compulsory winding up if it thinks that such exercise of power will be just and beneficial (see s. 216 and notes at pp. 540-543).

For the mode of application and notice thereof see Rule 157 (b) at p. 874. For the application of the Rules printed in App. F in the case of a voluntary winding up see Rule 256 at p. 882.

Other provisions.

All costs, charges and expenses properly incurred in the voluntary winding up including the liquidator's remuneration are, subject to the rights of the secured creditors, if any, payable out of the assets in priority to all other claims. Next come the debts mentioned in s. 230. See s. 217 and notes at pp. 543-544.

As to the rights of creditors and contributories to have the company wound up by the Court (but the Court must be satisfied that the rights of the contributories will be prejudiced by a voluntary winding up) see s. 218 and notes thereto. Where such an order is made by the Court it may by the same or any subsequent order provide for the adoption of all or any of the proceedings in the voluntary winding up (s. 220).

Winding up subject to Supervision of Court.

When a company has by special or extraordinary resolution [and not under sub-s. (1) of s. 203] resolved to wind up voluntarily, the Court may make an order that the voluntary winding up shall continue, but subject to the supervision of the Court, and with such liberty for creditors, contributories or others to apply to the Court, and generally on such terms and conditions as the Court thinks just (s. 221). A petition therefor will, for the purpose of giving jurisdiction to the Court over suits, be deemed to be a petition for winding up by the Court (s. 222).

When an order for winding up under supervision of the Court has been made, the petitioner or his attorney must forthwith send to the registrar of companies a notice (see Rule 65 at p. 866).

In deciding between a winding up by the Court and that subject to its supervision, and in all matters, the Court may have regard to the wishes of the creditors or contributories as proved to it by any sufficient evidence (s. 223).

As to the appointment of a liquidator or an additional liquidator, the removal of a liquidator and the filling of vacancy see ss. 223, 224 and 226.

In a winding up under supervision of the Court the liquidator may, subject to any restrictions imposed by the Court, exercise all its powers, without the sanction or intervention of the Court, as if the company were being wound up altogether voluntarily [s. 225 (1)]. Otherwise and except for the purposes of a public examination under s. 196 order passed under s. 221 will, for all purposes including the staying of suits &c., be deemed to be an order of the Court for winding up the company by the Court. See s. 225 (2) and (3).

General Provisions in All Modes of Winding up.

In the case of a winding-up by or subject to the supervision of the Court every disposition of property (including actionable claims) of the company, and every transfer of shares or alteration in the status of the members made after the commencement of the winding up shall, unless the Court otherwise orders, be void. But in the case of a voluntary winding up only the latter, that is, the transfer of shares except with the sanction of the liquidator and every alteration of status of the members shall be void (s. 227). In a winding up all debts and claims, present or future, certain or contingent, will be admissible to proof (see s. 228 and notes). But in the case of an insolvent company the law of insolvency and rules thereunder will apply. See s. 229 and notes at pp. 555-565.

As to the debts which are payable in priority to all other debts see s. 230 and notes at pp. 567-570. By the addition of the new clauses (d), (e) and (f) in sub-s. (1) of s. 230 it has been provided that the compensation payable to an employee of the company under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1923, sums due to an employee from a provident, pension or gratuity fund &c., and the expenses of any investigation under s. 138 shall also be paid in priority to all other debts. As to fraudulent preference by any transfer, delivery of goods, payment, execution &c. see s. 231 and notes at pp. 573-576.

Where any company is being wound up by or subject to the supervision of the Court any attachment, distress or execution put in force or any sale of properties held without leave of the Court in respect of the estate or effects of the company after the commencement of the winding up will be void. But this will not affect any proceedings by the Government. See the amended s. 232 and notes.

As to the effect of the commencement of winding up of a company upon a floating charge created by it within 3 months see s. 233 and notes.

Reproducing s. 267 of the English Act of 1929 it has been provided in the new s. 230A that the liquidator will be able with the leave of the Court to disclaim any property of the company burdened with onerous covenants notwithstanding that he has endeavoured to sell or has taken possession of the same or exercised any act of ownership in respect thereto. For the detailed provisions read s. 230A. As to the application under this section, its hearing, procedure &c. see Rules 212-217 at pp. 878-879.

Compromise and arrangement.

Subject to the control of the Court the liquidator may, with the sanction of the Court when the company is being wound up by or subject to the supervision of the Court, and with the sanction of an extraordinary resolution of the company in the case of a voluntary winding up, (i) pay any classes of creditors in full ; (ii) make any compromise or arrangements with the creditors ; and (iii) compromise all calls, liabilities to calls, debts &c. in such terms as may be agreed (see s. 234 and notes at pp. 580-583.

Misfeasance proceedings.

Where in the course of winding up of a company it appears that any promoter or any past or present director, manager, liquidator or officer of the company has misapplied or retained or become liable or accountable for any money or property of the company, or been guilty of any misfeasance or breach of trust, the Court may, on the application of the liquidator, or of any creditor or contributory, examine into the conduct of the aforesaid persons and compel them to repay or restore the money or property with interest or to contribute such sum by way of compensation as the Court thinks fit. See s. 235 and notes at pp. 584-596.

As to the mode of application, directions for hearing and who may appear in such proceedings see Rules 209-211 at p. 878.

An application for misfeasance is to be made within 3 years from the date of the first appointment of a liquidator, or of the misapplication &c. mentioned in the section, whichever is longer [see the amended sub-s. (1) of s. 235].

Prosecution for falsification of books &c. giving false evidence and other offences.

If any director, manager, officer or contributory of a company which is being wound up, destroys, mutilates, alters or falsifies or fraudulently secretes any books, papers or securities, or makes, or is privy to the making of any false or fraudulent entry in any register, book or document of the company with intent to defraud or deceive any person, he will be liable to inprisonment for a term which may extend to 7 years and will also be liable to fine (s. 236).

Following s. 277 of the English Act of 1929, a new machinery has been provided in the new s. 237 for the prosecution of directors, managers or other officers or members (past or present) of a company, if it appears to the Court in a winding up or to a voluntary liquidator that the aforesaid persons have been guilty of any offence in relation to the company for which they are criminally liable. For details of the procedure see s. 237. As to the mode of application under sub-s. (1) of s. 237 see Rule 244 at p. 881.

For the penalty for giving false evidence in deposition or solemn affirmation &c. see s. 238.

Following s. 271 of the English Act of 1929 a large number of new offences have been created by the new s. 238A and heavy punishments have been provided therefor. If any person being a past or present director, managing agent, manager or other officer of a company which at the time of the commission of the alleged offences is being wound up in any of the modes or is subsequently so wound up does or fails to do any of the acts mentioned in clauses (a) to (p) of sub-s. (1) of s. 238A, he shall be punishable. Where any person pawns or pledges or disposes of any property in circumstances which amount to an offence under cl. (o) of the sub-section referred to above, every person who takes in pawn or pledge or otherwise receives the property knowing it to be pawned in such circumstances as mentioned in cl. (o) shall be punishable with imprisonment for a term not exceeding 3 years [sub-s (2) of s. 238A]. For details read s. 238A.

Evidence, inspection and disposal of documents.

In a winding up all documents of the company and of the liquidators are prima facie evidence between the contributories (s. 240).

After an order for a winding up by or subject to the supervision of the Court, the Court may make orders for inspection by creditors and contributories only of the documents of the company (s. 241). As to Rules for inspection of statements filed under s. 177A or s. 244 see Rule 246 at p. 881. As to the disposal of the documents of a company which has been wound up see s. 242. After 3 years from the date of dissolution of a company no responsibility will rest on the company or the liquidator or any person to whom the custody of any document has been committed by reason of the same not being forthcoming [sub-s. (2) of s. 242].

For the power of the Court to declare within 2 years the dissolution of a company to be void see s. 243. The person on whose application such an order is made must within 21 days of the order file with the registrar a certified copy of the order. For the consequence of default see sub-s. (2) of s. 243.

If the winding up of a company is not concluded within one year, the liquidator should file in Court or with the registrar once in each year and at intervals of not more than 12 months a statement in the prescribed form in respect of the proceedings in and position of the liquidation. See the amended s. 244 and Rules 245-247 at p. 881. For the penalty for default see s. 244 (3). The new sub-s. (4) thereof provides that when the statement is filed in Court a copy shall simultaneously be filed with the registrar.

Affidavit.

As to the Court or person before whom an affidavit for the purposes of winding up proceedings may be sworn see s. 245.

As to the saving of winding up already commenced before 15th January, 1937 see the new provisions in s. 284.

Winding up of Unregistered Companies.

An unregistered company may be wound up under the present Act. All the provisions of this Act with respect to winding up will apply to an unregistered company with certain exceptions and additions mentioned in ss. 271 to 276 (see notes to these sections).

For the meaning of the expression "unregistered company" see s. 270 and notes at p. 628. Any partnership, association or company consisting of more than 7 members may be wound up under the provisions of Chapter IX.

It has been provided by the new sub-s. (3) of s. 271 that where a company incorporated outside British India ceases to carry on business in British India, it may be wound up as an unregistered company under Part IX, notwithstanding that it has been dissolved or otherwise ceased to exist as a company under or by virtue of the laws of the country under which it was incorporated (see notes at p. 631).

Banking Companies.

By the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936 a new Part, namely, Part XA has been introduced making provisions regarding the banking companies.

A banking company has been defined as a company which carries on as its principal business the accepting of deposits of money on current account or otherwise, subject to withdrawal by cheque, draft or order, notwithstanding that it engages in addition, in any one or more of the forms of business mentioned in clauses (1) to (17) of s. 277F.

After the commencement of the aforesaid Act, that is after 15th January, 1937 no company formed for the purpose of carrying on business as a banking company or which uses as part of its name the word "bank", "banker" or "banking" shall be registered unless the memorandum limits the objects of the company to the carrying on the business of a banking company as defined above [see sub-s. (1) of s. 277G].

No banking company whether incorporated in or outside British India shall after two years from 15th January, 1937 carry on any form of business other than those specified in s. 277F [see sub-s. (2) of s. 277G].

No banking company shall after 15th January, 1939 employ or be managed by a managing agent other than a banking company for the management of the company (s. 277H).

No banking company shall, after 15th January, 1937 commence business unless shares have been allotted to an amount sufficient to yield at least Rs. 50,000 as working capital and unless a declaration, verified by an affidavit signed by the directors and the manager, that Rs. 50,000 at least has been received by way of paid up capital, has been filed with the registrar (s. 277-I). For form of this additional declaration see Form XLVI at pp. 856-857.

No banking company shall create any charge upon its unpaid capital, and any such charge will be invalid.

As to the provision for maintaining a reserve fund and the mode of its investment see s. 277K.

Every banking company must maintain, by way of cash reserve, in cash a sum equal to at least 1½ per cent. of its time liabilities and 5 per cent. of its demand liabilities and must file with the registrar before the 10th day of every month three copies of a statement of the amount so held on the Friday of each week of the preceding month with particulars of the time and demand liabilities of each such day (see s. 277L). But these provisions will not apply to a scheduled bank as defined in cl. (e) of s. 2 of the Reserve Bank Act, 1934 [see sub-s. (3) of s. 277L]. For form of this monthly statement, see Form XLVII at pp. 857-858.

For the consequences of default in complying with the requirements of ss. 277G, 277H, 277J, 277K, 277L and 277M (infra) see sub-s. (4) of s. 277L.

A banking company shall not form any subsidiary company [for definition see sub-s. (2) of s. 2] except a subsidiary company formed for undertaking and executing trusts &c. and such other purposes set forth in s. 277F (see s. 277M). Note the amendment (shown within square brackets) made in s. 277M by the amending Act II of 1938.

As to the power given to the Court for staying suits and proceedings against a banking company which is temporarily unable to meet its obligations, and the procedure for obtaining relief including the interim relief see s. 277N and Rule 242 at p. 881.

Supplemental.

Legal proceedings and offences.

No Court inferior to that of a Presidency Magistrate or a Magistrate of the first class can try any offence against the Act [s. 278 (1)]. All offences against the Act are non-cognizable. As to the power of summary conviction by a Presidency Magistrate see s. 278 (2); and as to the application of the fines under the Act see s. 279.

Power to require security for costs from a limited company.

Where a limited company is plaintiff or petitioner in a suit or other legal proceeding, any Court having jurisdiction in the matter may require the company to give security for costs and may stay all proceedings until the security is given. See s. 280 and notes thereto.

Power of Court to grant relief to directors and others.

If in any proceeding against a director, manager, managing agent, auditor or officer of a company in any Court for negligence, default, breach of duty or breach of trust, it appears to such Court that such a person acted honestly and reasonably, the Court may relieve him wholly or partly. See the new s. 281 and notes. Where such a person has reason to apprehend that any claim will or might be made against him in respect of such negligence &c., he may apply to the Court for relief and the Court, that is, the Court having jurisdiction under s. 3, shall have the same power to relieve him as the Court before whom any such suit or proceeding may be brought [sub-s. (2) of s. 281]. As to the mode of application see Rule 243 at p. 881.

Penalties for false statements and improper use of "Limited."

As to the penalty for wilful false statements in any return, report, certificate, balance sheet or other documents see s. 282 and notes at pp. 653-655; and as to the penalty for improper use of the word "Limited" by any person or persons see s. 283.

Penalty for wrongful withholding of property.

By the new s. 282A severe punishment has been provided for wrongful withholding or misapplication of a company's property by any director, managing agent, manager or other officer or employee of the company and a more severe punishment for failing to deliver up or refund the same within a time to be fixed by the Court trying the offence.

Penalty for misapplication of the employees' securities &c.

All moneys or securities deposited with a company by its employees in pursuance of their contracts of service shall be kept or deposited by the company in a special account in a scheduled bank [sub-s. (1) of s. 282B].

Where a provident fund has been constituted by a company for its employees all moneys contributed to such fund (whether by the company or by the employees) including interest &c. shall, after 15th January, 1937, be invested in securities mentioned or referred to in clauses (a) to (e) of s. 20 of the Indian Trusts Act, 1882. An employee will be entitled on request to see the bank's receipt for any money or security referred to in sub-ss. (1) & (2) of s. 282B. For the consequences of contravention of these provisions see sub-s. (5) of s. 282B.

Table A.

In the case of a company limited by shares, if articles are not registered or if articles are registered, in so far as they do not exclude or modify the regulations in Table A, those regulations shall, so far as applicable, be the regulations of the company (see s. 18).

The Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936 has, by amending sub-s. (2) of s. 17, provided that the articles of a company shall be deemed to contain regulations 56, 66, 71, 78, 79, 80, 81, 82, 95, 97, 105, 107, 112, 113, 114, 115 and 116. Thus these regulations have been made compulsory.

The regulations 78 to 82 both inclusive shall not be deemed to be included in the articles of a private company except one which is the subsidiary company of a public company. Regulation 107 shall be deemed to require that a statement of the reasons why of the whole amount of any item of expenditure, which may in fairness be distributed over several years, only a portion thereof is charged against the income of the year, shall be shown in the profit and loss account, unless the company in general meeting shall determine otherwise [see the proviso to sub-s. (2) of s. 17].

As to other compulsory provisions in the articles of a company see s. 79.

By the Companies (Amendment) Act the following regulations of Table A have been amended, namely, regulations 3, 4, 8, 20, 41, 44, 46, 49, 51, 60, 65, 77, 83, 97 and 107. By the same Act the new regulation 44A has been introduced and the new regulations 103, 104 and 106 have been substituted for the old ones. By the amending Act II of 1938 amendments have been made in regulations 56, 77, 106, 109 and 116. ACT NO. VII OF 1913.

[PASSED BY THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL OF INDIA IN COUNCIL.]

(Received the assent of the Governor-General on 27th March, 1913).

An Act to consolidate and amend the law relating to Trading Companies and other Associations.

For statement of Objects and Reasons, see Gazette of India, 1912, Pt. V, p. 151; for Report of the Select Committee, see ibid, 1913, Pt. V, p. 45; and for Proceedings in Council, see ibid, 1912, Pt. VI, p. 586, and ibid, 1913, Pt. VI, pp. 106 and 300.

History of company law in England.

In England the formation of joint-stock companies for trading and other purposes dates back several centuries[1]. The East India Company was formed in 1600 in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, but up to 1844 companies were incorporated either by Royal Charter or by special Acts of Parliament, and the privilege of limited liability was not granted till 1855. In 1856 a codifying law was passed followed by an amending Act in 1857. The law was again codified in 1862. This was a comprehensive Act and a large number of important decisions in English Courts were passed under this Act. Between that year and 1908 several amending Acts were passed. They were consolidated by the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908 which will be referred to in the following pages as the English Act of 1908. The last English Act (19 & 20 Geo. 5, c. 23) was passed in 1929 which consolidated all the amending Acts passed between 1908 and 1928. This Act came into operation on the 1st of November, 1929.

History of company law in India.

In India following the English Companies Act of 1844 (7 and 8 Vict. c. 110) an Act for "Registration of Joint-Stock Companies" was, for the first time, enacted in the year 1850[2]. Every unincorporated company of partners associated under a deed containing a provision that the shares in the stock or business of the said company were transferable without the consent of all the partners, and also every company established for some literary, scientific or charitable purpose, which did not carry on any business for the pecuniary benefit of any of the proprietors or shareholders, were entitled to registration under this Act. The Supreme Courts of Calcutta, Madras and Bombay were authorized to order such registration.

Salient features of earliest company legislation.

Although in this Act the privilege of limited liability was not conferred on the members, several important provisions relating to the management of joint-stock companies were, for the first time, enacted: i. e., provisions relating to—holding of one or more general meetings every year; holding of extraordinary general meetings upon the requisition of seven or more members; prohibition as to purchase by the company of its own shares or grant of loan to any person on the securiry of such shares; prohibition of and restriction to granting loans to the directors and officers of the company or their becoming security or guarantee for any loan; half-yearly audit and report by auditors on balance-sheet and profit and loss account. There were provisions regarding transfer of shares. Trusts were not recognized. Suits by or against a company registered under the Act[1] were allowed to be instituted in its registered name. The company was permitted to sue, and be sued by, its shareholders and thus its distinct entity was recognized. Unpaid capital was a debt to the company. In the case of insolvent companies there were provisions like the winding up proceedings, and the directors might be examined on oath as provided in the present Act. Reteable contributions were to be realized from the shareholders for payment of the company's debts. Liability of past members was indicated; and finally, the company was to be dissolved. Thus the Act of 1850[1] may be said to be the nucleus about which subsequent Companies Acts developed, though strictly speaking they were all enacted on the lines of English Companies Acts.

Indian Acts between 1857 and 1913.

In 1857 an "Act[2] for the incorporation and regulation of Joint-Stock Companies and other Associations either with or without limited liability of the members thereof" was passed; but under this Act the privilege of limited liability was not extended to any company formed for the purpose of banking or insurance[3]. This disability was removed by Act VII of 1860 passed on the lines of the English Act of 1857. Then following the English Act of 1862 a comprehensive Act[4] was passed in India in 1866 for consolidating and amending "the laws relating to the incorporation, regulation and winding up of Trading Companies and other Associations." This Act was recast in 1882[5] embodying the amendments that were made in the company law in England up to that time.

Between the years 1882 and 1913 the following amending Acts were passed in India.

Act VI of 1887—providing for priority of debts in the winding up of a company.

Act XII of 1891—making some verbal corrections and introducing the word "hundi" after the word 'bill' in s. 144 cl. (f) of Act VI of 1882.

Act XII of 1895—giving power to companies to alter their objects or forms of constitution subject to confirmation by the High Court.

Act IV of 1900—authorizing certain companies to keep branch register of members in the United Kingdom.

Act IV of 1910—authorizing payment of interest out of capital and re-issue of redeemed debentures.

Act VII of 1913.

Then following the English Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908 the present Companies Act[6], was passed in India in 1913 which is, as were the previous Acts, almost a verbatim reproduction of the English Act[7]. Some minor amendments[8] were later on effected to the Indian Act which will be mentioned in their proper places.

Act XXII of 1936.

The most extensive amendments, chiefly on the lines of the new provisions introduced in the English Companies Act of 1929, have been made by the Indian Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936 which received the assent of the Governor-General on 27th October, 1936 and came into operation on 15th January, 1937 (vide Gazette of India dated 28th November, 1936, Part I, p. 1492). The provisions of this amending Act have been incorporated in this work and have been shown in italics.

Preamble.

In the preamble of Act VI of 1882 after the words "law relating to" there occurred the words "the incorporation, regulation and winding up of" which have been omitted in the present Act. In the English Act there is no such preamble. No doubt a preamble can be looked at when the section is ambiguous and it supplies a key to the mind of the legislature and indicates what its intention was, but where the language of the section is clear, a preamble cannot control its provisions [1]. A preamble cannot be taken to have cut down the express provisions of a statute [2].

It is not open to the Courts to question the right of the legislature to go beyond what was stated in the preamble as the reason for the legislation, for the legislature may very well have done actually a little more than what it started to do [3].

Construction of a consolidating Act.

A consolidating Act should be construed, not with reference to the circumstances existing at the time of the preceding Acts, but in relation to those existing at the time of the consolidating Act. The first step taken should be to interpret the language of the statute, and an appeal to earlier decisions can only be justified on some special ground [4]. Lord Halsbury (Lord Chancellor) observed : "It seems to me that, construing the statute by adding to it words which are neither found therein nor for which authority could be found in the language of the statute itself, is to sin against one of the most familiar rules of construction, and I am wholly unable to adopt the view that where a statute is expressly said to codify the law, you are at liberty to go outside the code so created, because before the existence of that code another law prevailed" [5]. "The question is not what may be supposed to have been intended, but what has been said" [6].

Reference to previous legislation.

The positive enactment in a statute cannot be qualified or neutralized by indications of intention gathered from previous legislations upon the same subject [7]. Their Lordships of the Judicial Committee observed: "The respondent maintained this singular proposition that in dealing with a consolidating statute, each enactment must be traced to its original source and, when that is discovered, must be construed according to the state of circumstances which existed when it first became law. The proposition has neither law nor reason to recommend it. The very object of consolidation is to collect the statutory law bearing upon a particular subject and to bring it down to date in order that it may form a useful code applicable to the circumstances existing at the time when the consolidating Act is passed"[1]. In a subsequent case [2] their Lordships indicated a modification of this principle in the following words: "It is a sound rule of interpretation to take the words of a statute as they stand and to interpret them ordinarily without any reference to the previous state of the law on the subject or the English law upon which it may be founded; but when it is contended that the legislature intended by any particular amendment to make substantial changes in the pre-existing law, it is impossible to arrive at a conclusion without considering what the law was previously to the particular enactment and to see whether the words used in the statute can be taken to effect the change that is suggested as intended."

Reference to proceedings of the legislature.

The practice of referring to the proceedings of the legislature has been disapproved in the following passage [3]: "Their Lordships observed that the learned Judges who constituted the majority in the appellate Court, although they do not base their judgment upon them, refer to the proceedings of the legislature.........Their Lordships think it right to express their dissent from that proposition. The same reasons which exclude these considerations when the clauses of an Act of the British legislature are under construction, are equally cogent in the case of an Indian statute." Reference to the report of the select committee and proceedings in the legislature is not permissible in aid of the interpretation of a statutory provision [4].

Reference to reports of Indian Law Commissioners.

A reference to the reports of the Indian Law Commissioners have, however, been held to be permissible, though reference to proceedings of the Legislative Council, report of the select committee thereof, draft stages of a bill and statements of objects and reasons are not permissible [5].

Statement of objects and reasons.

The statement of objects and reasons is not part of an Act, and is not to be referred to by the Courts in its interpretation. What the Courts have to interpret is the Act as it has finally emerged from the legislature. What the authors of the bill hoped that the Act might achieve is a different matter [6].

Decisions passed under previous Acts.

When a clause in an Act has received a judicial interpretation and is re-enacted in the same terms, the legislature is deemed to have adopted that interpretation [7]. In this view the decisions passed under the previous Companies Acts, especially under Act VI of 1882, Act X of 1866 and the English Act of 1862 are still valuable so far as the same language has been repeated in the present Act [8]. The Court, however, is not bound to adopt a constructiom erroneously placed on the former Acts [9]. But the application of a decision may be excluded by a change in the language of the new Act 1. The Companies Act should be construed fairly and not narrowly 2.

Amending Act—interpretation.

On account of the extensive amendments made by the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936, it is necessary to consider the effect of the amendments on the existing rights and obligations of companies as well as other persons. In general it may be said that repeal or amendment of an Act does not affect a right already in existence, unless a contrary intention is made out expressly or by implication 3. "The application of an Act is when the parties begin to move under it" 4.

Retrospective operation.

"Unless there be something", said Lord Cranworth, "in the language, context or objects of an Act of Parliament showing contrary intentions, the duty and practice of Courts of Justice is to presume, in conformity with the adage of Lord Coke, that the legislature enacts prospectively and not retrospectively" 5. "No rule of construction is more firmly established than this: that a retrospective operation is not to be given to a statute so far as to impair an existing right or obligation otherwise than as regards procedure, unless that effect cannot be avoided without doing violence to the language of the enactment. If the enactment is expressed in language which is fairly capable of either interpretation, it ought to be construed as prospectively only" 6. It would be most dangerous construction to give a retrospective effect to a statute by implication 7. A statute is not to be construed to have a greater retrospective operation than its language render necessary 8. "When you are construing an Act which makes changes in the law....you will not construe the words, unless they are clearly to that effect, so as to upset vested rights and liabilities which have been complete in themselves" 9.

No doubt the general principle is that Acts of the legislature are not given retrospective effect, unless the language makes it clear that such was the intention ; but in applying that principle one must have regard to the general character of the Act in question, and when construing an Act introduced for the purpose of applying an equitable doctrine to certain transactions considered ex hypothesi to be lacking in equity, one should not assume that the legislature intended that the Act should not have retrospective effect, but wished to reserve rights acquired in such transactions 10.

But as regards procedure, no person has a vested right in any course of procedure 11. The general principle is that alteration in procedure is always retrospective, unless there be some good reason against it [1]. "The principle which their Lordships must apply in dealing with this matter has been authoritatively enunciated by the Board in Colonial Sugar Refining Co. v. Irving [2], where it is in effect laid down that, while provisions of a statute dealing merely with matters of procedure may properly, unless that construction be textually inadmissible, have retrospective effect attributed to them, provisions which touch a right in existence at the passing of the statute are not to be applied retrospectively in the absence of express enactment or necessary intendment" [3].

Even where a section finds a place in a procedure code, but imposes in essence a serious restriction upon the title of a person, retrospective effect will not be given to its words [4].

Pending action.

In general when the law is altered during pendency of an action, the rights of the parties are decided according to the law as it existed when the action was begun, unless the new statute shows a clear intention to vary such rights [5].

Right of appeal.

So far as the right of appeal is concerned alteration of a statute does not either give it or take it away. Where a right of appeal to the Privy Council was given by an amending Act, their Lordships of the Judicial Committee held that the amending Act had no retrospective operation: "Their Lordships can have no doubt that provisions which, if applied retrospectively, would deprive of their existing finality orders, which, when the statute came into force, were final, are provisions which touch existing rights" [6]. On the other hand in Colonial Sugar Refining Co. v. Irving [7] their Lordships said: "To deprive a suitor in a pending action of an appeal to a superior tribunal which belonged to him as of right is a very different thing from regulating procedure. In principle their Lordships see no difference between abolishing an appeal altogether and transferring the appeal to a new tribunal. In either case there is an interference with existing rights contrary to the well-known general principle that statutes are not to be held to act retrospectively unless a clear intention to that effect is manifested."

General rule of construction.

In determining either the general object of the legislature or the meaning of its language in any particular passage, it is obvious that the intention which appears to be most in accord with convenience, reason, justice and legal principles would, in all cases of doubtful significance, be presumed to be the true one [8]. If there is ambiguity as to the meaning of a disabling section, e. g., provisions for registration of business names, the construction which is in favour of the freedom of the individual should be given effect to [9]. A meaning cannot be attributed to a section based on the reading of a repealed section. The section must be interpreted as it stands on the relevant date 1. Where an Act does not expressly purport to supersede an earlier one, it should be interpreted so as to avoid conflict with the latter if possible 2. "The court cannot", observed their Lordships of the Judicial Committee, "put into the Act words which are not expressed, and which cannot reasonably be implied on any recognized principles of construction. That would be a work of legislature, not of construction, and outside the province of the Court" 3.

"The golden rule is", observed Lord Simon L. C., "that the words of a statute must prima facie be given their ordinary meaning. We must not shrink from an interpretation which will reverse the previous law, for the purpose of a large part of our statute law is to make lawful that which would not be lawful without the statute, or, conversely, to prohibit results which would otherwise follow. Judges are not called upon to apply their opinion of sound policy so as to modify the plain meaning of statutory words, but where, in construing general words, the meaning of which is not entirely plain, there are adequate reasons for doubting whether the Legislature could have been intending so wide an interpretation as would disregard fundamental principles, then we may be justified in adopting a narrower construction. At the same time, if the choice is between two interpretations, the narrower of which would fail to achieve the manifest purpose of the legislation, we should avoid a construction which would reduce the legislation to futility and should rather accept the bolder construction based on the view that Parliament would legislate only for the purpose of bringing about an effective result" 4.

"One of those presumptions is, that the Legislature does not intend to make any substantial alteration in the law beyond what it explicitly declares, either in express terms or by clear implication, or, in other words, beyond the immediate scope and object of the statute. In all general matters outside those limits, the law remains undisturbed. It is in the last degree improbable that the Legislature would overthrow fundamental principles, infringing rights, or depart from the general system of law, without expressing its intention with irresistible clearness, and to give any such effect to general words, simply because they have a meaning that would lead thereto when used in their widest, their usual or their natural sense, would be to give them a meaning other than that which was actually intended. General words and phrases, therefore, however wide and comprehensive they may be in their literal sense, must usually be construed as being limited to the actual objects of the Act. The general words of the Act are not to be so construed as to alter the previous policy of the law" 5.

"Decisions under other statutes," observe their Lordships of the Judicial Committee, "have been cited. But it is always dangerous to seek to construe one statute by reference to the words of another" 6.

rights, it must logically follow that it was the clear intention of the legislature that such remedies should be enforced only in the manner and by following the procedure indicated. But the Indian Companies Act must be regarded as an Act merely legislating for or regulating certain rights recognized under the Common Law of England 1.

Reference to English decisions.

In considering the construction of a section in an Indian Act which is professedly based on an English enactment and which it reproduces, almost word for word, the language of the English enactment, and which relates to a branch of the law which is entirely English law, the Courts of India are in practice, if not in theory, bound by the decisions of the English Court of Appeal 2.

Where the language of the sections of the English and the Indian Acts are identical, Indian Courts would very much hesitate to depart from the view expressed by eminent Judges in England who have had great experience of company law, unless there is something internal in the section itself which would justify its interpretation in a different way 3. But because a section of an Indian Act is copied from an English Act, it should not be interpreted contrary to the statute law of India as contained in another Act, e. g., the Provincial Insolvency Act 4. Now that the Indian legislature is gradually evolving an independent system of its own, even in respect of the company law, as is evidenced by the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936, the following caution of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee should be borne in mind in interpreting the company law: "It has often been pointed out by this Board that where there is a positive enactment of the Indian legislature, the proper course is to examine the language of that statute and to ascertain its proper meaning, uninfluenced by any consideration derived from the previous state of the law—or of the English law upon which it may have been founded" 5.

Whereas it is expedient to consolidate and amend the law relating to Trading Companies and other Associations; It is hereby enacted as follows:—

PART I.

PRELIMINARY.

Short title, commencement and extent.

1. (1) This Act may be called the Indian Companies Act, 1913.

(2) It shall come into force on the first day of April 1914; and

(3) It extends to the whole of British India including British Baluchistan and the Santhal Parganas.

Headings.

Headings prefixed to sections are considered as preambles to those sections. They constitute an important part of the Act itself and afford a better key to the construction of sections which follow them than preambles to the Act 6.

"These various headings," observed Baron Channell, "are not to be treated as if they were marginal notes, or were introduced into the Act merely for the purpose of classifying the enactments. They constitute an important part of the Act itself. They may be read, I think, not only as explaining the sections which immediately follow them, as a preamble to a statute may be looked to to explain the enactments, but as affording, as it appears to me, a better key to the constructions of the sections which follow them than might be afforded by a mere preamble" 1.

"It is now settled law that headings prefixed to the bill passed by the legislature have the force of words used in the preamble of an act and may be used as 'a key to open the minds of the makers of the Act,' and in this respect are unlike marginal headings which have no force for the purpose of interpretation" 2. A heading to a group of sections cannot, however, be pressed into a constructive limitation upon the exercise of powers given by the express words of the Act 3.

Marginal notes.

Marginal notes are no part of the sections. They are merely abstracts of the clauses intended to catch the eye and to make the task of reference easier and more expeditious 4. In Balraj v. Jagat Pal 5 their Lordships of the Judicial Committee laid down the law in the following words: "It is well settled that marginal notes to the sections of an Act of Parliament cannot be referred to for the purpose of construing the Act." The contrary opinion originated in a mistake and it has been exploded long ago. There seems to be no reason for giving the marginal notes in an Indian statute any greater authority than the marginal notes in an English Act of Parliament 5.

Punctuation.

"Their Lordships think," observed the Judicial Committee, "that it is an error to rely on punctuation in construing Acts of the legislature" 6. "The soundness of this principle", said Strachey, C. J., "is well illustrated in the present instance by the fact that in the original edition of the Indian Divorce Act there is not a colon at the end of the fourth paragraph of S. 17, but a full stop" 7. Scott, C. J., in the undermentioned case 8, distinguished the above decision on the ground that an old Regulation of Bengal was under the consideration of the Judicial Committee in the above Privy Council decision and that their Lordships' opinion was not applicable to Acts of the regular legislatures since established. The decision of Scott. C. J., however, appears to be wrong as the Privy Council have recently re-iterated their opinion that a Court of law is bound to read a section without the commas inserted in the print 9.

Effect of interpretation clause.

Where a term has been defined in a statute, it must be given that meaning throughout the statute, unless some provision makes it clear that for certain purpose the term must be given another meaning 1. The word "include" in the interpretation clause is intended to be enumerative and not exhaustive. It has an extending force and does not limit the meaning of the term to the substance of the definition. When it is intended to exhaust the signification of the word interpreted, the word "means" is used 2.

"In coming to a determination", observed their Lordships of the Privy Council, "as to the meaning of a particular word in a particular Act of Parliament it is permissible to consider two points, viz., (i) the external evidence derived from extraneous circumstances such as previous legislation and decided cases; (ii) internal evidence derived from the Act itself......As was said by the Lord Chancellor in Brophy v. A. G. of Manitoba 3, the question is not what may be supposed to have been intended but what has been said" 4.

"It is a sound rule of construction", said Cleasby, B., "to give the same meaning to the same words occurring in different parts of an Act of Parliament" 5. "We disclaim altogether", observed Lord Denman, "the assumption of any right to assign different meanings to the same words in an Act of Parliament on the ground of a supposed general intention" 6.

(1) "Articles."—As to articles of association generally see s. 19 and notes. They may be altered 1 by special resolution 2 ; see notes to ss. 17-22.

(2) "Company."—An existing company has been defined in cl. (7), sub-s. (1) of this section.

Distinction between incorporated company and partnership.

One of the leading differences between a company and an ordinary partnership is that in the former a member can, and in the latter he cannot, sell his shares without the consent of all other members 3. An un-incorporated company, as distinguished from a partnership, means some association of members, the shares of which are transferable 4. In the case of an incorporated company besides the transferability of its shares there are other important distinctions, e.g., while in an ordinary partnership each partner is personally liable for all debts contracted or all wrongs committed by the firm 5, in an incorporated company the members have no individual liability in these matters and their personal liability is satisfied as soon as they paid the calls 6. There are other fundamental differences between a company incorporated under this Act and a partnership. For example, in a partnership one partner cannot transfer his share without the consent of the other partners, while in a limited company no such consent is necessary, and they are freely transferable, except so far as is restricted by the articles of association 7. In a partnership each partner is an agent of the firm to make contracts 8, while the members of a limited company are not its agents for any purpose whatsoever. Again the liability of each partner for the debts of the firm is unlimited, while that of each shareholder in a limited company may be limited by shares or guarantee. A limited company cannot buy its own shares 9.

A company is a distinct legal persona.

A company formed or registered under the Act is a distinct legal entity 10. It can own and deal with property, sue and be sued in its own name, contract on its own behalf and the members are not personally entitled to the benefits or liable for the burdens arising therefrom. Once the company is incorporated, it must be treated like any other independent person, and the motives of those who promoted it are irrelevant 11. It is altogether a different person from the subscribers to the memorandum of association even if they consist of a family, only one of whom holds all the shares, the others holding one share each 12 (see notes to s. 23). But it does not necessarily follow that every alleged transaction between such individual and the company would be valid, or that it would represent a real transaction 13.

Domicile.

The domicile of a corporation is the place considered by law to be the centre of its affairs, which (1) in the case of a trading corporation is its principal place of business, i.e., the place where the administrative business of the corporation is carried on ; (2) in the case of any other corporation is the place where its functions are discharged. The registration of the company is not for all purposes of itself decisive. The question in each case is where is it that the real business of the company is carried on ? According to the answer to that question, the company's domicile must in the main be determined. The domicile of a corporation is therefore the place where "the brain which controls the operations of the company is situate" 1. "A joint stock company resides", observed Kelly, C.B., "where its place of incorporation is, where the meetings of the whole company or those who represent it are held and where its governing body meets in bodily presence for the purposes of the company and exercises the powers conferred upon it by statute and by the articles of association" 2. In a recent case it has been held in England by Macnaghten J. that a limited company is capable of having a domicil. Its domicil is the place of its registration and that domicil clings to it throughout its existence 3. See notes to sub-s (2) of s. 3 post.

Suits by or against a company.

In order to redress a wrong done to a company or to recover moneys or damages by the company, the action should be brought by the company itself 4, except where the persons against whom the relief is sought themselves hold and control the majority of the shares and will not permit an action to be brought in the name of the company 5. In that case the Court allows the shareholders complaining to bring an action in their own names 6. But this indulgence is confined to those cases in which the acts complained of are of a fraudulent character or ultra vires 7. It is not necessary, as a matter of law, formally to ascertain the views of the majority before proceeding, but nevertheless, if no reason is given for the corporation not being consulted before litigation is undertaken, it must be clearly alleged and made to appear that the transaction is fraudulent or ultra vires, or the majority have abused their powers and are depriving the minority of their rights 8. No mere informality which can be remedied by the majority will entitle the minority to sue, if the act, when done regularly, would be within the powers of the company 9. "Where fraud is alleged", observed Marten, C. J., "and where consequently it is alleged that the suit is one of the recognized exceptions to the principles laid down in Foss v. Harbottle 9, it will, I think, generally be found that the case is allowed to go to trial to ascertain the facts before it is finally determined whether action of the majority can in fact bind the minority. This is because until the facts are ascertained with some directness, it is difficult to say what is the precise action of the majority and whether it only amounts on the one hand to those matters of internal management where the majority of the shareholders can rightly impose their will upon the minority, or whether on the other hand it is one of those cases in which the assets of the company are being improperly distributed by an attempt to pay them into the pockets of the majority of shareholders of the company or their friends at the expense of the minority" 1.

In cases of "fraud upon the minority", if the wrong-doer has the balance of power, and therefore the company does not take action, there are two courses open:

Remedy in cases of fraud upon minority.

The minority may take the risk and boldly use the company's name. The other course, which is the better course where the wrongful act is supported by the majority, is for the minority shareholders to sue in their own names or, as a matter of convenience, for a shareholder to sue on behalf of himself and all other shareholders. If however the wrong-doers are also shareholders, these shareholders, as a matter of course, must be excluded from the category of the plaintiffs: hence the phrase "except those who are defendants" 2.

Pleadings and parties.

In such cases the primary fraud must be clearly indicated. It is the gist of the action, although no doubt the pleading or the particulars may be so framed as to trace the dominance of the majority and the effectuation of the fraud through that dominance. Where a decision of the directors is attacked on the ground that it is injurious to the company, the directors should be parties. Where that act of the directors so impeached has been confirmed and is still impeached on the basis that the directors have got that confirmation by controlling the majority, still those directors should be parties 2.

Even where a minority of shareholders are alleged to have been overborne by the vote of the majority, the former cannot complain of acts which are valid if done with the approval of the majority or are capable of being confirmed by the majority, mere irregularity or informality which can be remedied by the majority being insufficient 3. Generally speaking, a person cannot charge a majority with wrong in adding to the voting power of the directors. There is nothing inherent wrong in that. A majority can increase its own majority, unless there is an element ef expropriation or coercion 2.

Where an action is brought by shareholders, the plaintiffs should distinctly allege the illegality of the act complained of and the impossibility of getting the company to impeach its validity. Mere irregularities committed by the directors cannot give a cause of action to shareholders and entitle them to challenge the validity of the resolutions passed, and the aggrieved shareholder must appeal to the company. The supremacy of the majority of shareholders is subject to certain exceptions, viz, (a) where the act complained of is ultra vires the company, (b) where the act complained of is a fraud on the minority and (c) where there is absolute necessity to waive the rule in order that there may not be a denial of justice 3.

3. Bhajekar v. Shinkar (supra) following Foss v. Harbottle (supra).

The Court does not interfere for the purpose of forcing companies to conduct their business according to the strictest rules, where the irregularity complained of could be set right at any moment 1. In the last cited case the suit was a sequel to a resolution passed by the board and an extraordinary resolution passed in a general meeting and confirmed as a special resolution. In pursuance of the last two resolutions an agreement was executed by another company the effect of which was to appoint the latter as managing agent of the former company. The plaintiffs who were some of the directors brought this suit for challenging the said resolution and the respective meetings in which they were passed and for a declaration that the said resolutions were invalid and for an injunction restraining the latter company from action on the agreement.

Interference by Court.

The above are the general rules strictly adhered to, but there may be exceptions where justice of the case requires it 2. But in a case where the company ought to be the plaintiff, the shareholder must exhaust all reasonable means to get the suit instituted by the company, before he brings the suit himself 3. In a case in which the ground of action is the fraud of the majority, it is not necessary that a meeting of shareholders should first be called 4.

Who ought to be plaintiff.

In a case of urgency the intending plaintiff may use the company's name, but at his peril. In such an action the Court may give interlocutory relief, taking care that a general meeting be called as early as possible to determine whether the action has really the support of the majority 5. If it appears that the company's name has been used improperly, the suit will be struck out 6, and either the solicitor 7 or the person who instructed him 8, will have to pay the company's costs as between party and party 9.

A single shareholder may sue the company to enforce any individual right of his own. e.g., his right to have his vote recorded 10, or his right as a director to restrain his co-directors from excluding him from the board 11.

When the company is in liquidation, the only persons to whom the Court has any jurisdiction to give leave to use the company's name are the creditors and the contributories 12.

As soon as the company goes into liquidation, "the minority shareholders are no longer at the mercy of the majority wrongly retaining the property of the company by the strength of their votes. If the liquidator, acting at the behest of the majority, refuses, when requested, to take action in the name of the company against them, it is open to any contributory to apply to the Court" and under s. 215 (now s. 216), "it is open to the Court on cause shown, either to direct the liquidator to proceed in the company's name, or on proper terms as to indemnity and otherwise to give to the applicant leave to use the company's name as plaintiff in any action necessary to be brought for the vindication of the company's rights. Nor is the contributory confined to that form of procedure. It would be open to him, so far as the directors are concerned, without leave from any one and by motion or summons in the winding up jurisdiction himself to bring the directors before the Court and obtain relief on the company's account" 1.

Suit by secretary.

Where a chief officer of the company had power under its articles of association to appoint a secretary for the purposes of management of the affairs of the company and he gave to the secretary, so appointed, the power for filing and defending suits for and on behalf of the company, a suit filed by the secretary as such is properly instituted 2.

In a suit by or against a company, for subscription and verification of pleadings, for service on the company and for the Court's power to require personal attendance of officers of the company, see order XXIX of the Code of Civil Procedure, Act V of 1908.

Costs.

Where one of the parties to a proceeding under s. 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898 consisted of some managers of a limited company which was the real contestant and costs were awarded to the successful party, such costs could be realized either from the managers or from the company 3.

See notes to s. 23 post.

Ultra vires acts.

Where a dissentient minority seek redress against the action of the majority, the former must show that the action of the majority is ultra vires or that the majority have abused the powers and are depriving the minority of their rights 4.

If an act, not ultra vires the corporation and which, therefore, might be done with the approval of a majority, be done irregularly and without such approval, then the majority are the only persons who can complain 5, and the Court will not entertain the complaint except at the instance of the majority and in a proceeding in which the corporation is the plaintiff 6.

A single shareholder suing on behalf of himself and others or suing alone 7, may make the company a defendant and may restrain the company and the directors from doing an act which is illegal 8, or criminal 9, or ultra vires the corporation and which the majority are consequently incompetent to affirm 10. "If one individual having an interest complains of an act of the whole company or the executive of the whole company as being illegal, there is, as a general rule, no necessity for any other shareholders being present" 11.

A stranger having sustained no special damage cannot sue the company 1, nor a shareholder who has with knowledge recovered and retains part of the proceeds of the ultra vires act 2, except to restrain future ultra vires dealings 3.

If the act complained of is not ultra vires, but is of a fraudulent character or in the nature of a wrong done to the company, and the wrong-doers are in the majority, then a single shareholder may bring the action on behalf of himself and others 4, making one of the majority a party defendant 5.

See notes to ss. 6 and 23.

Matters ultra vires and intra vires.

Where there is no suggestion of fraud, the company is bound in a matter intra vires by the unanimous agreement of its members, even at a directors' meeting where all the members were present 6. But where the matter is ultra vires, it is otherwise, as held by Lord Justice Lindley: Individual assents given separately may preclude those who give them from complaining of what they have sanctioned; but for the purpose of binding a company in its corporate capacity, individual assents given separately are not equivalent to the assent of a meeting 7.

Notice.

Outsiders are bound to know the "external position of the company" 8; but they have a right to assume that all matters of internal management have been compiled with 9. For fuller exposition of the principle see notes to ss. 17 and 23. Persons dealing with a company are deemed to have notice of its registered documents 10. A limited company can speak and act only through agents duly authorized in that behalf in accordance with its constitution, and if such company by special resolution authorizes any body of officers to draw cheques, sign, accept or endorse bills of exchange, promissory notes, cheques, orders of payment or other commercial papers, and such resolution has been communicated to the bank with which the company deals, the bank will be liable if it does not act in accordance with that resolution, even if it is misled by the fraudulent misrepresentation of an officer of the company who on previous occasions has dealt with the bank as an officer of the company; the bank is bound to be vigilant 11.

Knowledge.

If it is established by evidence that the duty of investigating and ascertaining facts has been delegated in the ordinary course of a company's business to a subordinate official, the company will in law be bound by his knowledge in the same way as it is affected by the knowledge of the board of directors. "It is true that in the Houghton's case, [1928 A.C. 1, 18] Lord Sumner points out that 'the mind, so to speak, of a company is not reached or affected by information merely possessed by its clerks.' And again, 'the knowledge which is relevant is that of directors themselves, since it is their board that deals with the company's rights.' But it must depend upon the facts of each case, where the matter is not especially determined by the articles, by what particular means of information and in what circumstances a company may properly be said to acquire knowledge, or have knowledge thrust upon them" 1.

In Newsholme Bros. v. Road Transport & General Insurance Co. [(1929) 2 K. B. 356 (374)] Scrutton L. J., quoting Lord Sumner says: "The knowledge of a person who acquires it in a breach of duty, and is guilty of a breach of duty in respect to it, is not to be imputed to a company to whom from the hypothesis he would be very unlikely to disclose it in fact."

Where one person is an officer of two companies, his personal knowledge is not necessarily the knowledge of both the companies. The knowledge which he has acquired as officer of one company will not be imputed to the other company, unless he has some duty imposed on him to communicate his knowledge to the company sought to be affected by the notice, and some duty imposed on him by that company to receive the notice; and if the common officer has been guilty of fraud or even irregularity, the Court will not draw the inference that he has fulfilled those duties 2.

As to the knowledge of directors see notes to s. 83A, post.

Acquiescence and estoppel.

As regards acquiescence and estoppel the position of a company seems to be somewhat different from that of an individual. "In the case of a natural person if information is intelligibly conveyed to and received by him its source, whether as servant or a stranger, whether he is high or low, matters little, if at all. With the artificial incorporated person, it must be necessarily otherwise, for an incorporated company cannot read or hear, except by the eyes and ears of others who are to be the organs by which it receives knowledge so as to affect its right" 3. In the last cited case Lord Dunedin observed as follows: "There can obviously be no acquiescence without knowledge of the fact as to which acquiescence is said to have taken place. The person who is sought to be estopped is here a company, an abstract conception, not a being who has eyes and ears. The knowledge of the company can only be the knowledge of persons who are entitled to represent the company. The knowledge of a mere official like the secretary would only be the knowledge of the company, if the thing of which knowledge is predicated was the thing within the ordinary domain of the secretary's duties. But what if the knowledge of the directors is knowledge of a director, who is himself particeps criminis, that is, if the knowledge of an infringement of the rights of the company is only brought home to the man who himself was the artificer of such infringement? Common sense suggests the answer, but authority is not wanting" 4. Then he cites the cases noted below 5. Effective ratification necessarily involves knowledge of all the material facts on the part of him who ratifies. Neglect of duty does not cease by repetition to be neglect of duty, and if there be any doctrine of "lulling to sleep," it must depend upon and can only be another way of expressing estoppel or ratification 6. "A limited company," observed Lord Tomlin, "cannot have a view except so far as the views of the agents by which it acts are to be deemed the views of the company" 7.

What punishment may be inflicted on company.

A company may be fined for contempt of Court[1]; but it cannot be convicted under a section which inflicts imprisonment or whipping only as punishment[2], nor can it be committed for trial on an indictment[3]. A company in liquidation, as distinct from individual liquidator, is incapable of committing an act of maintenance[4].

Company a person.

An incorporated company is a person within the meaning of the Acts of Parliament, unless the context shows that only a natural person is intended[5]. A company may be "a respectable and responsible person" within the meaning of a lease[6].

For other cases see notes to ss. 5 and 23.

(3) "The Court."—See s. 3 and notes thereto.

Debenture.

(4) "Debenture."—A Debenture means a document which either creates or acknowledges a debt[7]. It is usually associated with a corporation of some kind. Debentures are usually bonds issued by a company for sums of Rs. 10 or Rs. 100 or their multiples and are offered to the public by means of a prospectus in the same manner as shares.

Debentures may be for a fixed term of years or repayable on notice, or irredeemable[8]. They can be framed as payable to bearer. The custom to treat debentures to bearer as negotiable by delivery is recognized to take effect under the law merchant[9], and the Court will take judicial notice thereof[10].

"Fixed" and "floating" charges.

If the debenture gives no security on the assets of the company, the debenture-holder's position is no better than that of an unsecured creditor[11]. But generally mortgage debentures are issued which usually contain a charge upon the undertaking of the company and all its property, present and future, and may or may not give a charge upon uncalled capital. The charge may either be "fixed" or "floating." When the charge is "fixed" it affects the title to the property and the company can only deal with the property affected subject to the charge. But when the charge is a "floating" one, the company may, in the ordinary course of business, deal with the property covered by the charge, mortgaging, selling, disposing of it or using it up as the business requires, at any time before the charge attaches[12]. It remains dormant until the undertaking charged ceases to be a going concern, or until the person in whose favour the charge is created intervenes[13]. In Illingworth v. Houldsworth[14] Lord Macnaghten said: "A specific charge is one that without more fastens on ascertained or definite property capable of being ascertained and defined, whereas a floating charge is ambulatory and shifting in its nature, hovering over and, so to speak, floating with the property which it is intended to affect until some event occurs or some act is done which causes it to settle and fasten on the subject of the charge within its reach and grasp." As pointed out by Buckley L. J., "a floating security ; is not a future security ; it is a present security, which presently affects all the assets of the company expressed to be included in it. On the other hand, it is not a specific security ; the holder cannot affirm that the assets are specifically mortgaged to him. The assets are mortgaged in such a way that the mortgagor can deal with them without the concurrence of the mortgagee. A floating security is not a specific mortgage of the assets plus a license to the mortgagor to dispose of them in the course of his business, but is a floating mortgage applying to every item comprised in the security, but not specifically taffecting any item until some event occurs or some act on the part of the mortgagee is done which causes it to crystalize into a fixed security" 1. The terms "floating security" and "floating charge" are synonymous 2. See notes to ss. 109, 126 and 129, post.

Debenture stock.

Debenture stock is of the same nature as ordinary debentures 3 except that instead of each bond securing a definite amount, the whole sum secured is treated as a single stock, and certificates are issued declaring the holder to be entitled to a definite sum, part of the stock. The debenture stock may be repayable on a fixed date or may be irredeemable.

Director.

(5) "Director."—Director includes any person occupying the position of a director 4. So it seems that a secretary or a manager occupying the position of a director is included within the term.

The true position of directors seems to be that of agents for the company with the powers and duties of carrying on the whole of its business, subject however to the restrictions imposed by the articles of association and the statutory provisions 5. But the directors are not agents for the shareholders 6, nor are they trustees for the creditors of the company 7, nor are they trustees in whom the property of the company is vested in trust for any specific purpose within the meaning of s. 10, Limitation Act 8.

As agents of the company they cannot make secret profits. "No man can in this Court," said Lord Cairns, L. C., "acting as an agent, be allowed to put himself into a position in which his interest and his duty will be in conflict" 9.

For the powers, duties and liabilities of directors see notes to ss. 83-A and 100 and Reg. 71 of Table A.

Manager.

(9) "Manager."—This new definition of "manager" has been substituted by the Amending Act No. XXII of 1936. The old definition was no definition at all. The new definition follows the decision in Basant v. Emp. 10, in which it was held that unless a person is in charge of the entire business of a company, he cannot be deemed to be the manager thereof. The English Act does not contain the definitions of the words "manager" and "officer."

The old cl. (9) ran as follows :—

(9) "Manager" includes any person occupying the position of a manager by whatever name called, and whether under a contract of service or not :

(9-A) "Managing agent."—This definition is new and has been inserted by the amending Act (XXII) of 1936 on account of importance of the functions of managing agents in India. The distinction between "manager" and "managing agent" appears to be first, while the manager must be a person, the managing agent may be a person, firm or company ; secondly, the latter is entitled, as of right, to the management of the company by virtue of an agreement with the company, while the manager is the person who has actually the management of the company whether under an agreement or not. A director who actually manages a company without an agreement with the company for that purpose may be a manager, but not a managing agent. By contrast between clauses (9) and (9-A) a manager cannot, it seems, be a firm or company. The General Clauses Act however says that the word "person" shall include any company, association or body of individuals, whether incorporated or not. For the new provisions relating to managing agents see Introduction.

The Explanation to this clause makes it clear that if a person is called by any other designation but actually occupies the position of a managing agent he will be regarded as a managing agent for the purposes of this Act.

(11) "Officer."—After the word "director" the words "managing agent" have been inserted by the amending Act (XXII) of 1936. The word "officer" has not been defined in the English Act of 1929.

Private company.

(13) "Private company."—This definition has been substituted for the old one by the amending Act (XXII) of 1936, following the definition given in the English Act of 1929 with some modifications (compare s. 26 of the English Act of 1929 printed in the Appendix). In England it was held in 1912 that a company whose articles contained the restrictions, limitations and prohibitions mentioned in sub-clauses (a), (b) and (c) remained a private company even though they were not complied with 1. In 1913 an amending Act was passed by which it was provided that if a private company failed to comply with any of the foregoing provisions, it ceased to be entitled to the privileges of a private company : but the Court might grant relief if the default was due to accident, inadvertence or other sufficient cause 2. This was reiterated in ss. 26 and 27 of the English Act of 1929. In the Indian Act it was provided in sub-clause (ii) that a company which did not continue to observe the restrictions, limitations and prohibitions mentioned in sub-clause (i) would not be a private company. The Court had not been given the power to grant relief as in England. This has now been remedied by substituting the new s. 154 (s. 27 of the English Act of 1929) for the old one. The position of a private company is in most respects the same as that of a public company 3. If one member practically holds all the shares, the company is still a distinct "person" 4. As to the possibility of a private company being a partnership in guise of a company see the case noted below 5. In the case noted below their Lordships of the Privy Council have condemned the view, too widely current, that a private company need not be regarded as a corporation distinct from the persons composing it and that irregularities in connection with its liquidation, which in the case of a public company would be most serious, are venial and perhaps even permissible. "It is necessary, in their Lordships' opinion, that this view should be once for all dispelled"[1].

In estimating the number of members of a private company the secretary may be, but a director or managing director may not be, counted as one "in the employ" of the company[2].

In the articles of private companies provisions are sometimes made for compelling a shareholder at any time to transfer his shares to particular persons at a particular price. They are not void as being repugnant to absolute ownership or as tending to perpetuity[3].

Transfer of shares.

In the articles of association of a private company provisions are sometimes made to the following effect: any member desiring to sell any of his shares must notify the board of directors of the number of shares, the price and the name of the proposed transferee, and the board must offer to the other shareholders the number of shares offered at the price, and if the offer is accepted, the shares shall be transferred to the acceptors, and if the shares or any of them are not so accepted, the holder may sell or transfer them or any of them at the same or higher price to third parties approved by the board. For construction of such articles see Ocean Coal Co. v. Powell Duffryn Steam Coal Co.[4].

Where the articles of a private limited company provided that a member could not transfer his shares until he had given notice to the secretary offering to sell the shares at a price to be fixed by the auditor and until the secretary had offered them to the other members, one director having a right of pre-emption, it was held by the House of Lords that there was no effective sale of the shares, as the restrictions imposed by the articles had not been observed[5], and that the shareholder was not estopped from claiming rectification of the register of members, as the bankers to whom the shares had been assigned were well aware and had been informed by the former of all the restrictions upon the sale of the shares[5]. "I do not think", observed Lord Hailsham, L. C. at p. 248 in the last cited case, "that the disregard of article 17 rendered the transaction ultra vires the company, or that it could not have been regularized by the assent of all the shareholders; but that assent was never obtained."

Private and subsidiary private company—distinction.

In the provisions introduced by the amending Act (XXII) of 1936 distinction has been made between an ordinary private company and a private company which is subsidiary to a public company [for the definition of a subsidiary company see sub-sec. (2) of s. 2 supra]. As regards this distinction see s. 17 (2) proviso, s. 83-A (2), s. 86-D (3), s. 86-H, s. 87-A (5), s. 87-C (4), s. 87-D (4), s. 91-B (3) proviso, s. 91-D (1) and s. 144 (1) and (5) (iii).

Special privileges.

The following are the special privileges of a private company:—

(1). It may consist of two members only (s. 5).

(2). It is not necessary to hold a statutory meeting, to forward the "statutory report" to the members or file it with the registrar (s. 77). Under the old s. 77 the company had to hold a statutory meeting[6].

(5). Shares may be allotted before the minimum or whole amount of the share capital has been subscribed (s. 101).

(6). It may commence business or excercise borrowing powers as soon as it is incorporated (s. 103).

(7). Holders of preference shares or debentures have not the same right to receive and inspect the balance-sheet &c., as is possessed by the holders of ordinary shares (s. 146).

(8). It is not required to send a copy of the balance-sheet to the registrar (s. 134) or to the members (s. 131); but a private company must file with the registrar the annual list of members and summary under s. 32.

(9). In the case of a private company not being a subsidiary company of a public company it is not necessary that the auditor should hold a certificate from the Central Government (s. 144). Such a company can appoint a person as its auditor who is in the employment of a director or officer of the company [s. 144 (5) (iii)].

(10). Provisions regarding the appointment of directors (ss. 83-A and 83-B) and restrictions on appointment or advertisement of directors (s. 84), do not apply to a private company.

Privileges under amending Act. With regard to the provisions introduced by the amending Act XXII of 1936, the following privileges have been accorded to a private company which is not a subsidiary company of a public company:—

(1). Provisions of s. 54-A (2) relating to financial assistance for purchase of shares shall not apply [s. 54-A (2)].

(2). Regulations 78, 79, 80, 81 and 82 of Table A shall not apply [s. 17 (2)].

(9). S. 91-B regarding prohibition of voting by interested director shall not apply [s. 91-B (3), proviso].

(10). S. 91-D regarding contracts by agents in which the company is undisclosed principal shall not apply [s. 91-D (1)].

(11). S. 144 regarding qualifications and appointment of auditors [s. 144 (1)].

The provisions of s. 87-I, relating to the limit on the number of directors appointed by managing agents, shall not apply to any private company, subsidiary or not.

In the case of a private company if not more than seven members are personally present at a general meeting, one member, and if more than seven members are personally present, two members shall be entitled to demand a poll [s. 79 (1)(c)]. In any case two members personally present shall be a quorum [s. 79 (2)(b)], if the articles do not otherwise provide.

New obligations.

A private company must send with the annual return required by sub-s. (1) of s. 32 the certificates mentioned in sub-s. (4) thereof. If a private company alters its articles so that they no longer include the provisions of cl. (13) of sub-s. (1), s. 2 the company must file with the registrar a prospectus or a statement in lieu of prospectus as provided by s. 154 (1). A private company is not entitled to issue share-warrants to bearer [s. 43 (2)].

The old cl. (13) ran thus:—

(13) "private company" means a company which

(i) by its articles—

(a) restricts the right to transfer its shares: and

(b) limits the number of its members (exclusive of persons who are in the employ of the company) to fifty: and

(c) prohibits any invitation to the public to subscribe for any shares or debentures of the company: and

(ii) continues to observe such restrictions, limitations and prohibitions:

Provided that where two or more persons hold one or more shares in a company jointly they shall, for the purposes of this definition, be considered as a single member:

Conversion of private into public company.

A private company may turn itself into a public company by complying with the provisions of s. 154. Even before such conversion the position of a private company is, in most respects, similar to that of a public company. Neither the Indian Act nor the English Act of 1929 makes any provision for conversion of a public company into a private company. But in Palmer's Company Law, 13th ed. (1929) at p. 392 occurs the following passage [1]: "Many existing public companies, which can conveniently be worked as private companies, have in like manner altered their regulations by special resolution." The new amending Act XXII of 1936, following s. 27 of the English Act of 1929, though it recasts the provision regarding conversion of private companies into public companies, does not make any provision for converting a public company into a private company.

For the consequences of reduction in the number of members below two, see s. 147.

(13-A) Public company.—This definition is new. It has been inserted by the Companies (Amendment) Act XXII of 1936.

What is a "prospectus."

(14) "Prospectus."—The words in italics have been inserted by the amending Act XXII of 1936. The word "prospectus" means that document by which capital is offered to the public and upon the basis of which the applicant has actually subscribed [2].

The Calcutta High Court has held that an advertisement in a newspaper offering shares to the public for sale is a prospectus within the meaning of this clause, although the advertisement specially refers to a prospectus a copy of which is available on application and a copy of which has been duly filed with the registrar [3].

[3] Pramatha v. Kalikumar [1925] 52 Cal. 440, 29 C. W. N. 523.

In the last cited case Mr. Justice Manmatha Nath Mukherji observed as follows:—"Our attention has been drawn to a passage in Stiebel's Company Law and Precedents, 2nd ed. Vol. I, p. 258, foot-note, which is in these words:—'Sometimes one sees in newspaper advertisements issued by companies which propose to issue shares, which do not contain the statutory requirements and state that the publication is for information only and that the applicants must apply to the company for the full prospectus; such advertisements should never contain an application form, but they do not appear to be contrary to the Act.' No authority is cited in favour of this proposition; and in any case the present prospectus does not fall within that category, for it does not state that the publication is for information only, nor does it say that the applicants must apply to the company for the full prospectus, but only that the prospectus may be obtained on application."

"Public."

The word "public" has not been defined in the Act. It appears that the word does not include existing members and debenture-holders[1]. " 'The public' in the definition", observed Lord Sumner, "is of course a general word. No particular numbers are prescribed. Anything from two to infinity may serve: perhaps even one, if he is intended to be the first of a series of subscribers but makes further proceedings needless by himself subscribing the whole. The point is that the offer is such as to be open to any one who brings his money and applies in due form whether the prospectus was addressed to him on behalf of the company or not. A private communication is not thus open"[2].

"Offer to the public."

What is an offer to the public depends upon the circumstances of each particular case. It appears that an offer to the public means an offer by the company to any one who chooses to come in and take shares[3].

An offer of shares limited to the members of an existing company appears to be not an offer to the public[4]; nor does circulation by directors amongst their own friends a number of documents in the form of an ordinary prospectus and headed "strictly private and confidential" amount to an offer to the public[5]. An offer to the public by the liquidators of a company is not equivalent to the issue of a prospectus by the company[4].

In the under-noted case[6] Lord Justice Scrutton observed as follows: "In re South of England Natural Gas Co.[7], where some 3000 copies of a prospectus marked 'for private circulation only' were printed and issued to shareholders of gas companies in which the promoter was interested, Swinfen Eady J. held that the prospectus was issued to the public. On the other hand in Sherwell v. Combined I. M. Syndicate[3] where some of the directors without the authority of the company sent a prospectus marked 'strictly private and confidential, not for publication' to some of their friends, Warrington J. said that no action lay against the company, but also said that 'whether or not capital has been offered to the public was a pure question of fact..............It meant an offer of shares to any one who should choose to come in.' I agree with this." The decision in the case, namely, Lynde v. Nash[6] was reversed in the House of Lords which held that a prospectus is not "issued", if it is shown to one person privately and not as a member of the public[2].

The word 'debenture' includes debenture stock [see cl. (4) ante]. For statement in lieu of prospectus see s. 98.

Meaning of "share."

(16) "Share."—A share in a company cannot properly be likened to a sum of money settled upon, and subject to, executory limitations to arise in the future; it is rather to be regarded as the interest of the shareholder in the company measured, for the purpose of liability and dividend, by a sum of money, but consisting of a series of mutual covenants entered into by all the shareholders inter se in accordance with the provisions of the Companies Act and made up of various rights and liabilities contained in the contract including the right to a certain some of money 1.

A share in such a company as a manufacturing company carrying on its business in a foreign country resembles a chose in action in this respect only that it is assignable, and the assignee would be entitled to sue upon it to obtain his appropriate share of the net profits, just as the original holders would be 2.

See s. 28 and notes thereto, as well as notes to regulation 18, Table A. As to different classes of shares see notes to regs. 3 and 98 of Table A.

(17) "Trading corporation."—This definition has been inserted by the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937 which came into operation on 1st April, 1937.

Item No. 33 in List I (Federal Legislative List) in the Seventh Schedule to the Government of India Act, 1935 is a follows; "Corporation, that is to say, the incorporation, regulation and winding up of trading corporations including banking, insurance and financial corporations, but not including corporations owned or controlled by a Federated State and carrying on business only within that State or co-operative societies, and of corporations, whether trading or not, with objects not confined to one unit."

The effect of this definition is that a "trading corporation" includes not only trading corporations as such but also banking, insurance and financial corporations, but it does not include corporations owned or controlled by a Federated State and carrying on business only within that State or co-operative societies.

Sub-s. (2) "Subsidiary company".—Sub-s. (2) reproduces s. 127 of the English Act of 1929. This definition has been inserted by the Companies (Amendment) Act XXII of 1936. As to the provisions relating to subsidiary companies introduced into the Act by the above amending Act see Introduction.

Income-tax on subsidiary & holding companies.

Where on the winding up of certain subsidiary companies their assets and undertakings were transferred to the holding company, the latter was properly assessed to income-tax as a successor to that part of its trade previously carried on by the subsidiary companies 3.

Unregistered company	s. 270
Vendor	s. 94

The Companies (Amendment) Act XXII of 1936 has introduced two more definitions: (1) An "investment company" has been defined as a company whose principal business is the acquisition and holding of shares, stocks, debentures or other securities [s. 87-F and s. 132-A (1), second proviso]. (2) A "banking company" means a company which carries on as its principal business the accepting of deposits of money on current account or otherwise, subject to withdrawal by cheque, draft or order, notwithstanding that it engages in addition in any one or more of the forms of business mentioned in s. 277-F [see s. 277-F].

Provisions as to companies registered in Burma or Aden before separation from India.

[2-A. Notwithstanding anything in the last preceding section, a company which was immediately before the separation of Burma and Aden from India a company as defined by the said section, being a company the registered office whereof is in Burma or Aden,—

(a) shall be deemed for the purposes of this Act to be a company registered and incorporated outside British India, and

(b) shall not, unless the subject matter or context so requires, be included in the expressions 'company', 'existing company', 'public company', and 'private company'.

Provided that—

(i) for the purposes of section 277 of this Act such a company shall, for a period of six months from the separation, be deemed to be a company incorporated and registered in British India ;

(ii) the separation of Burma and Aden from India shall not render valid any mortgage or charge which, immediately before that date, was void against the liquidator or creditors of such a company."]

This new section has been inserted by the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937 which came into operation on 1st April, 1937.

Jurisdiction of the Courts.

3. (1) The Court having jurisdiction under this Act shall be the High Court having jurisdiction in the place at which the registered office of the company is situate :

Provided that the [Central Government] may, by notification in the [Official Gazette] and subject to such restrictions and conditions as it thinks fit, empower any District Court to exercise all or any of the jurisdiction by this act conferred upon the Court, and in that case such District Court shall, as regards the jurisdiction so conferred, be the Court in respect of all companies having their registered offices in the district.

(2) For the purposes of jurisdiction to wind up companies, the expression 'registered office' means the place which has longest been the registered office of the company during the six months immediately preceding the presentation of the petition for winding up.

(3) Nothing in this section shall invalidate a proceeding by reason of its being taken in a wrong Court.

Alteration.

In the proviso the words "Central Government" and "Official Gazette" were substituted for the words "Local Government" and "local official Gazettte" respectively by the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order 1937, which came into operation on 1st April, 1937. The effect of the alteration was that the powers under the proviso could no longer be exercised by the Local, i. e., Provincial Government. But with effect from 1st April, 1938 the Central Government has entrusted the Provincial Governments with its functions under the proviso (vide Gazette of India dated 26th March, 1938, Part I, p. 440).

As a matter of fact, various Local Governments conferred limited or full jurisdictions on selected District Courts in their provinces long ago. But Bengal was bracketted with the North-West Frontier Province, Burma and Bihar and Orissa for the unenviable distinction of being considered as having no District Courts in the province competent to administer the company law. The Government of Bengal was at last roused to take some belated but very cautious and restricted action [after perhaps the proceeding in the Central Legislature during the passage of the new Companies (Amendment) Act] in November, 1936. So now the position is as follows :—

Bengal—jurisdiction has been conferred on all District Courts under ss. 38, 76, 104, 120 and 124 in respect of companies having a subscribed capital of not exceeding Rs. 50,000—Vide Notification No. 7288 Com. dated 2nd November, 1936, published in the Calcutta Gazette of the 5th November, 1936, Part I, p. 2553.

Assam—jurisdiction has been conferred on the District Courts of (1) Assam Valley and (2) Sylhet & Cachar in respect of companies having a subscribed capital of not exceeding Rs. 50,000.

Bombay—jurisdiction has been conferred upon the District Courts of Ahmedabad, Broach, Kaira, Poona, Satara, Sholapur and Surat in all matters under the Act.

Madras—jurisdiction has been conferred upon all District Courts under s. 104 only.

United Provinces—jurisdiction has been conferred upon the District Court at Cawnpore in respect of all matters under the Act, and upon that of Lucknow in respect of companies whose subscribed capital does not exceed Rs. 25,000.

Central Provinces and Berar—jurisdiction has been conferred upon all District Courts in respect of all matters under the Act.

The aforesaid orders conferring jurisdiction on District Courts in the provinces by the respective Local Governments, it is apprehended, lapsed on 1st April 1937 on which date the amendments (mentioned above) made by the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937 came into operation. Unless and until fresh Notifications are issued in this respect after 1st April 1938 by Provincial Governments, it is doubtful whether the above mentioned District Courts have jurisdiction under this Act.

"Court."

Under Act VI of 1882 the word 'Court' included the principal Civil Court of original jurisdiction in a district 1. The jurisdiction of the District Courts was taken away by this section, but under the proviso to this section full or modified jurisdiction might be re-conferred by the Local Government on any District Court. In that case the inferior Court would be able to decide matters of administration and dispute arising in winding up 2. Sub-s. (3), provides that a proceeding taken in a wrong Court shall not be invalidated for that reason. But it has no application when the objection to jurisdiction is taken at the very commencement of the proceeding and at the proper time 3.

High Court.

Sub-s. (1). The expression 'High Court' as used in this section is the High Court as a whole including the appellate and the original sides. Therefore under the Rules framed by the High Court all applications relating to companies, even those doing business in the maffasil, should be made on the original side of the High Court 4.

The expression High Court has been defined in the General Clauses Act 5, as the highest Court of appeal (not including the Federal Court) in that part of British India in which the Act or Regulation containing the expression operates. So the Chief Commissioner of Ajmer and Merwara is the High Court for the purposes of the Companies Act for places within its jurisdiction and not the Allahabad High Court 6.

The jurisdiction conferred on the High Court in company matters is the jurisdiction to deal with matters provided for by the Act, and it is very doubtful whether an application to rectify the register of the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies, for which no provision is made in the Act, can properly be brought before the Judge who is dealing with company matters 7.

The High Court has jurisdiction to transfer winding up proceedings from the High Court to any Court which has jurisdiction to wind up companies [1].

Proviso.—A District Judge, who has been empowered by the Provincial Government under this proviso, has extensive original jurisdiction; but it in no way ousts the revisional jurisdiction possessed by the High Court under s. 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure [2].

Where the registered office of a company is situated within the jurisdiction of the District Judge empowered under this proviso, he is the Judge who has jurisdiction to pass orders for payment of any amount that may be due from the contributories on account of the arrears in calls under s. 186; and if there is any dispute between the parties, he can adjudicate on it under s. 215 (now s. 216). The fact that certain contributories reside outside British India is immaterial, as by their agreeing to become members of the company they are amenable to his jurisdiction [3].

For definition of "District Court", see cl. (6), sub-s. (1) of s. 2 ante.

It has been held in England that under s. 165 of the English Act of 1929 the High Court has jurisdiction to transfer to the County Court proceedings for winding-up, no matter what the amount of the company's capital is [4].

Interference by Court.

"It is an elementary principle of the law relating to joint stock companies that the Court will not interfere with the internal management of companies acting within their powers, and in fact has no jurisdiction to do so" [5]. But the Court will interfere—to prevent a fraudulent sale by promoters to the company; to prevent fraud on a minority of shareholders; where directors are witholding payment of calls on their own shares while making calls on those of other members; where the company is existing only for being wound up and gratuities are voted to its servants and directors; where an arrangement is being carried out which is beneficial only to the majority of shareholders; where it is proposed to issue shares in satisfaction of dividends; where resolutions have been passed purporting to divide, on winding up, the assets in fraud of a class of shareholders; where the chairman of a meeting improperly rejected votes; where a proper notice of the purpose of a meeting involving payment to directors has not been given; where shares are being issued to secure a majority of votes; where the majority of directors exclude the minority from meeting of the board or a committee of it; or where the company is conducting its businees in an illegal way [6]. See notes under s. 2 (supra).

The Courts have inherent jurisdiction to compel due observance of the mandatory provisions of the Act. It is a fundamental principle of legal administration that where the law requires something to be done, there must be in existence a Court that can directly order it to be done. It is well understood in all systems of civilized jurisprudence that where there is a right, there is a remedy [7].

Doctrine of "internal management."

People dealing with a company are fixed with notice of any limitations of the powers of the company contained in the statute under which it is incorporated or in the memorandum or articles of association; but if it is shown that a particular act was ostensibly authorized by them, persons dealing with the company are not concerned to see that the company has put itself into a position to exercise its powers properly. Outside parties are not concerned with the internal management of the company. They are not concerned to see that there was a proper quorum of directors present, or that persons who are apparently directors had in fact been validly appointed. Those are matters of internal management. If the disability of a director to vote upon a contract in which he was personally interested were imposed by the articles, the question whether he was personally interested in, and entitled to vote upon, a particular contract, would be regarded as matters of internal management with which persons dealing with the company would not be concerned 1. Where the main point involved is the interpretation of a certain clause in the memorandum of association relating to the application of the assets of the company, it is not a mere matter of internal management; a single member can therefore maintain a suit against the company for a declaration as to the true construction of the clause in question and the company can not be excused from being impleaded in such an action 2. As regards the future conduct of directors, the Court will not interfere in the management of the company's internal affairs 2. "If the majority of shareholders consider that a particular contract of employment should be terminated, the Court would not, as a rule, consider the matter at the instance of a minority" 3.

It has however been held in England that the doctrine of "internal management" may be pushed too far and it will place limited companies at the mercy of any servant or agent who may purport to contract on their behalf. Thus not only a director of a company with articles founded on Table A, but a secretary or any subordinate officer may be treated by a third party acting in good faith as capable of binding the company by any sort of contract, however exceptional, on the ground that a power of making such a contract might conceivably have been entrusted to him 4.

Where the majority of a company propose to benefit themselvs at the expense of the minority, the Court may interfere to protect the minority 5.

The High Court has jurisdiction to wind up a registered unlimited company which has no capital 6, or a guarantee company having no share capital 7.

As to the Court having jurisdiction for winding up unregistered companies see s. 271 (1) (i).

Registered office & domicil.

Sub-s. (2). The position of the company's registered office is an important factor in determining where its residence is 1; but the question of residence is entirely distinct from domicile which is often independent of actual residence 2. Irrespective of the Act, for the purposes of winding up, the domicile of a company is fixed by the situation of its principal place of business 3, that is to say, its chief office where the central management and control are actually to be found 4. See p. 29 ante.

Residence and jurisdiction.

A registered company can have more than one residence for the purposes of income-tax 5. To constitute residence by a British company in a foreign State or to render the company subject to the jurisdiction of the Courts of that State, the company must, to some extent, carry on business in that State at a definite and reasonably permanent place 6. A question often arises where a company is incorporated in a foreign State but the central office of its business is in British India, whether the British Indian Court has jurisdiction. In such a case the latter Court has jurisdiction 7. In the last cited case an order for winding up of the company was passed by the Court in Travancore State where the company had been incorporated, and similar proceedings were also pending in the Madras High Court. An application under s. 153 for getting a scheme of compromise sanctioned was made in the Madras High Court which held that the application was maintainable. "One knows", observed Vaughan William J., "that where there is a liquidition of one concern, the general principle is—ascertain what is the domicile of the company in liquidation, let the Court of the country of domicile act as the principal Court to govern the liquidation, and let the other Courts act as ancillary, as far as they can, to the principal liquidation. But although that is so, it has always been held that the desire to assist in the liquidation —the desire to act as ancillary to the Court where the main liquidation is going on— will not ever make the Court give up the forensic rules which govern the conduct of its own liquidation" 8. An order for winding up passed by the Court of the place of incorporation, in which the principal liquidation is going on, does not bind a foreign creditor, the special forum of whose debt was not the place of incorporation 9.

Where the directors of a company made some payments more than a month after a petition for winding up the company was presented and an application was made under s. 235 against the directors some of whom were residing in England and one was residing in British India but in a different province, it was held that the High Court had no jurisdiction over persons residing in England, but had jurisdiction over the person residing in British India, though in a different province [1]. It is a principle of international law that a Court should not serve its processes on persons outside its own jurisdiction and upon persons against whom the order, if passed, cannot be enforced. The power to serve outside jurisdiction is entirely a question of statute without which there is no such power [1].

PART II.

CONSTITUTION AND INCORPORATION.

Prohibition of partnerships exceeding certain number.

4. (1) No company association or partnership consisting of more than ten persons shall be formed for the purpose of carrying on the business of banking unless it is registered as a company under this Act, or is formed in pursuance of an Act of Parliament or some other [Indian law], or of Royal Charter or Letters Patent.

(2) No company, association or partnership consisting of more than twenty persons shall be formed for the purpose of carrying on any other business that has for its object the acquisition of gain by the company, association or partnership, or by the individual members thereof, unless it is registered as a company under this Act, or is formed in pursuance of an Act of Parliament or some other [Indian law] or of Royal Charter or Letters Patent.

(3) This section shall not apply to a joint family carrying on joint family trade or business and where two or more such joint families form a partnership, in computing the number of persons for the purposes of this section, minor members of such families shall be excluded.

(4) Every member of a company, association or partnership carrying on business in contravention of this section shall be personally liable for all liabilities incurred in such business.

(5) Any person who is a member of a company, association or partnership formed in contravention of this section shall be punishable with fine not exceeding one thousand rupees.

In sub-sections (1) and (2) the words "Indian Law" within square brackets have been substituted for the words "Act of the Governor General in Council" by the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937. Sub-sections (3), (4) and (5) have been added by the Companies (Amendment) Act XXII of 1936. Sub-s. (3) excludes individual joint families from the operation of this section. But it seems that where two or more joint families carrying on joint family trade or business form a partnership and the total number of members of such joint families, excluding their minor members, exceed twenty,these joint families will come within the mischief of this section. The argument that individual members of a joint family are to be considered as sub-partners and the joint family consisting of these members should be reckoned as one person does not appear to be sound.

Sub-s. (4) provides for personal liability of each member who would come within the mischief of the section.

Sub-s. (5) provides that such member shall also be liable to a heavy fine.

Native State.

As the Act (of its own force) does not apply to a Native State, the transactions in such a State of an association consisting of more than twenty members are not illegal 1.

Object.

"The object of the Act" says Lord Justice James, "was to prevent the mischief arising from large trading undertakings being carried on by large fluctuating bodies so that persons dealing with them did not know with whom they were contracting and so might be put to great expenses, which was a public mischief to be repressed" 2.

Where the proprietors of a Zemindary are numerous, the formation of a limited company by them is beneficial not only to themselves, but to those who have dealings with them 3.

Maximum and minimum number of members.

The maximum number of members who can carry on business for gain without registration as a company is ten in the case of banking companies, and twenty in the case of any other company. But the minimum number required for the formation of a company is two in the case of a private company and seven in the case of any other company (see s. 5). The company may be wound up by the Court, if the number of members fall below this minimum 4. For consequences of carrying on business when the number of members falls below the minimum see s. 147. Although the number of members of a partnership does not at its inception exceed the above maximum, the company nevertheless becomes illegal, if subsequently that number is exceeded 5.

Illegal association.

An association consisting of more than the maximum number of members stated above and formed for the purpose of carrying on business with a view to gain is an illegal association 6. Such an association cannot sue on any contract made by it 7 and its members will be individually liable for the contract, unless the person suing was aware of the illegality at the time of entering into the contract 1. The members of a partnership or company hit by this section can however have beneficial interest in the property 2.

If the association of the individuals was a partnership, on each of such occasions when a death occurred and the heirs of a deceased partner were taken in, a new partnership would, in the eye of law, be formed, and this would clearly come within the words of sub-s. (2); for this section governs not only the first formation of the company, association or partnership, but rules its continuance. An association formed for trading may be perfectly legal at its formation, but if the number of persons increases later on and exceeds the maximum allowable under this section, the association becomes an illegal one 3.

Where four firms entered into a partnership and the aggregate of the number of members of all the firms exceeded twenty, it was an illegal association under this section and could not maintain a suit 4.

The illegality of a company does not protect its members from being sued by a stranger who was not aware of all the facts which made it an illegal association. Unless the person dealing with such an association is particepes criminis, there can be no turpis causa to bring him within the operation of the rule ex turpis causa non oritur actio 5. In the case of an illegal association a suit can be brought against some members of the association as the liability is joint and several under s. 43 of the Contract Act 5. Such an association cannot be wound up at the instance of the association or any of its creditors or members 6.

Such an association, however, need not be registered if it does not carry on business with a view to gain, either by the individual members or by the association as a whole 7.

Where a partnership consists of more than twenty members, it is an illegal association and partition suit by one partner against the remaining partners is not maintainable 8. Illegality in the mode of formation of a partnership is not the same thing as an illegality in regard to the consideration or object of the agreement. It is doubtful if a partnership agreement which has not been registered, though so required by this section, is void under s. 23 of the Contract Act 9. In the undernoted case the Allahabad High Court refused to make a declaration under s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act that such an association was unlawful 10.

Where a firm consisting of less than twenty partners is subsequently converted into a joint stock company with additional partners so as to consist of more than twenty partners, it must be registered. If it is not registered no suit can be maintained in respect of that partnership. But when a person who was a partner in the firm and was, as such, entitled to a share of the profits when the membership of the firm was below twenty, is not allotted any share in the newly formed company he, being totally unaware of the increase in the number of members and of the conversion, cannot be made to lose his right to a share of the profits. A suit by him for a declaration that there has been a dissolution of that partnership, and for accounts, cannot be dismissed on the ground of non-registration under sub-s. (2) 1.

What is an association.

To constitute an "association" within the meaning of this section, the existence of a legal relation between more than the maximum number giving rise to rights or obligations or mutual rights and duties is absolutely necessary 2. All the members of the association must be directly interested in the management of the concern either personally or through their constituted agent 3. If the substantial purpose of an association is not to carry on a business for gain, the fact that gain may accrue incidentally or may arise from merely subsidiary provisions does not make registration necessary 4. The proprietors of some wool factories entered into a pooling contract by virtue of which they agreed to work on factories in a certain manner and to share the total profits in certain proportions. The contract was for a period of 5 years. The defendant No. 1 was to work his factory for the first 2½ years and defendant No. 3 for the next 2½ years; plaintiff and defendant No. 2 had the option of working their factories or not as they pleased, but if they worked them they were bound to share profits with the other parties to the contract according to the terms thereof. It was held that the contract did not constitute a partnership or association, and that the proprietors were not carrying on any business jointly within the meaning of this section 5.

A trading association which is synonymous with the term "a trading company" or "a trading society", to be within this section, must also be one formed on the basis of contract between its members 6.

"Partnership."

The use of the word "partner" or "partnership" in the agreement does not necessarily show that there was a partnership. The parties may call themselves partners, but if it appears that one party is to do nothing more than advance money to the other and is to be repaid by a share of profits, they must be treated as creditor and debtor 7.

Effect of non-registration.

Where an association is compulsorily registrable under this section, but is not registered, one member of the association cannot sue another member in respect of any matter connected with the association 8, nor can a member or outsider maintain a suit against the association, for it cannot contract any debt 9, or enter into any contract 10. One of the members of such a company cannot sue for partition of the existing assets, or for any other relief 11. An association which is illegal cannot be wound up under the Act at the instance either of the association, a creditor or a shareholder 12. So too, an action by an illegal association, whether against a member or any other person, will fail as soon as the illegality is disclosed 1. Such an association being an illegal body, its existence will not be recognised by law, and although a suit by a third party against the members of such an association is maintainable in certain circumstances, it would not be maintainable if the plaintiff was particeps criminis 2. It has been held by the Rangoon High Court that members of such an illegal association can bring a suit for declaring the respective shares of their association and directing that they be repaid their shares after recovering the buildings and other property of the association into which the subscription money is changed, into cash and after payment of debts and liabilities 3. Such a suit is governed by Art. 120 and not Art. 62 of the Limitation Act 3.

Where an association is illegal as being an unregistered association of more than twenty persons carrying on a business having for its object the acquisition of gain 4, the Court is not debarred from affording relief to the members asking for return of the money paid into the hands of agents, by granting an account 5. The cause of action for the return of money paid in order to form a society or business prohibited by this section accrues as soon as the money is paid, and there is no continuing cause of action in such a suit 6.

An association which ought to have been, but is not, registered under this section, is however liable to assessment to income tax on its profits 7.

"Carrying on business."

The expression "carrying on business" implies some continuous control of the business by the association 8. "Carrying on business" only exists where there is a joint relation of more than twenty persons for the common purpose of performing jointly succession of acts and not where the relation exists for a purpose which is to be completed by the performance of a single act 9. Where a business is carried on by trustees less than twenty in number, but the beneficiaries are more than twenty, the association is not illegal 9. Unregistered land companies have been held to be not illegal on the ground that they were formed merely for acquiring and dividing land between the members and not for carrying on any business of land-jobbing or trafficking in land 10. As to the meaning of the expression see Okura & Co. v. Forsbacka 11.

"Business."

"Business" is a wider term than "trade" and may include hiring land and employing a manager to farm it 12. Where an association or partnership is formed for purposes of carrying on a business, what the Court has to see is whether each of the members will be liable individually upon contracts made and whether each would have rights accruing to him upon such contracts 13. A single venture, where a single article or a number of articles on a single contract are purchased and sold, may not amount to a business, but where a number of bales are purchased at one time, sales are to go on, profits are to be realized and these profits are to be divided among the partners, it is not a single venture and amounts to a partnership within this section [1]. "Business" does not include the case of an association of persons who contribute sums to be applied in relieving its members in the case of sickness, the balance being distributable at the end of each year [2].

Person. The word "person" denotes an individual and does not include bodies of individuals whether corporate or not, since any such extended definition would be repugnant to the subject and context of the section [3]. So an association of several persons, consisting of more than twenty persons, formed with the object of acquiring commercial gain, is essentially within the purview of this section [3]. But it has been held by the Allahabad High Court that a person, who holds shares in a company personally as a trustee for a number of beneficiaries or as a guardian for a minor, is to be counted as one individual person, on the ground that the word "person" in this section can be used to include a collection of people, e. g., an association of individuals known as a joint Hindu family, or beneficiaries interested beneficially in property vested in a trustee [4]. If the various individual members of one or more joint Hindu families form an agreement of partnership among themselves, then each individual member must be reckoned a person for the purpose of this section. If, however, there is merely a family partnership created by operation law, so that the individual members are governed by the principles of Hindu law and not by the Contract Act, then the individual members are merely sub-partners in any agreement made on behalf of the family, and the joint family consisting of these members should be reckoned as one person for the purposes of this section [5]. Sub-partners are not members of a firm and the existence of sub-partners would not affect the number of members of a firm for the purposes of this section [6]. But where persons exceeding twenty calling themselves as partners of four different unregistered firms, enter into a partnership to carry on business, and each person is individually entitled to the benefit of the contracts, the partnership is illegal under this section [7].

On the question whether a company registered under this Act is a "person" within the meaning of this section, King, C.J. and Ziul Hasan, J. observed: "We are doubtful whether registered companies cannot be held to be "persons" within the meaning of s. 4, as a registered company is a corporation and for most legal purposes can be held to be a person" [8]. In England under the Solicitors Act, 1932 [Law Society v. United Service Bureau (1934) 1 K. B. 343], the Dentists Act, 1878, the Veterinary Surgeons Act, 1881 and the Pharmacy Act, 1868 [Pharmaceutical Society v. London & Provincial Supply Assn. [1880] 5 App. Cas. 857] a "person" meant a natural person and not a body corporate.

"Gain." "Gain" is not limited to pecuniary gain or commercial profit only; and a company is formed for the acquisition of gain when it is formed to acquire something as distinguished from a company formed for spending something[1]. If one of the objects of a company be the acquisition of gain, the mere fact that the members either singly or jointly propose to dispose of the gain on some charitable object will not exclude the company from the purview of this section[2]. The primary object of the association is to be looked into and no regard should be paid to the circumstances that develop later on[2].

Foreign companies. A limited company incorporated under the laws of another country may trade in this country without being incorporated according to our law[3]. The word "formed" in this section must mean "formed in this country"[4]. If however a company incorporated in the foreign country established a place of business here, it must comply with the provisions of s. 277[4]. A foreign company cannot be registered as an existing company under the Companies Act[5], and cannot, unless it has an office in this country, be wound up here[6].

Other companies. The expression "or is formed in pursuance of some other Act" probably means formed and having existence recognized by another statute[7]. An unregistered company consisting of nine shareholders only does not require registration for its valid existence[8]. Mutual assurance associations are within the section[9].

Even before the new sub-s. (3) came into operation, it has been held, a joint family business concern, which by its nature descends from father to son, in which interests are acquired by succeeding generations, not by an act of parties but by the law of inheritance, was not an association of persons in this sense and did not therefore come within the scope of this section[10].

Sub-s. (5). It is true that offences under sub-s. (5) and s. 283 post are non-cognizable and cannot be investigated by the police under Chap. XIV of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898. But the mere fact that the offences were wrongly investigated and sent up by the police is not an obstacle to their being tried by a Magistrate[11].

Memorandum of Association.

Mode of forming incorporated company. 5. company, with or without limited liability (that is to say), either—

(i) a company having the liability of its members limited by the memorandum to the amount, if any, unpaid on the shares respectively held by them (in this Act termed a company limited by shares) ; or

(ii) a company having the liability of its members limited by the memorandum to such amount as the members may respectively thereby undertake to contribute to the assets of the company in the event of its being wound up (in this Act termed a company limited by guarantee) ; or

(iii) a company not having any limit on the liability of its members (in this Act termed an unlimited company).

As to the meaning and privileges of a private company see notes to s. 2, sub-s. (1), cl. (13).

"Persons." The word "persons" includes a married woman, a bankrupt and a foreigner residing abroad 1, but not an infant, as under the Indian Contract Act a minor is incompetent to contract, and a contract made by him is void 2. A firm is not a person, and the individual partners must subscribe 3. If a firm name is, with the authority of the firm, subscribed to a memorandum of association and is accepted by the registrar, the partners will be joint holders of the shares subscribed for 4, provided the partner subscribing had special authority from his co-partners to accept the shares 5. The registrar's certificate of incorporation is conclusive 6 ; but it will not make the illegal objects legal 7, nor does it obviate the objection that the memorandum was not signed by seven persons 8.

"Lawful purpose." The purpose for which a company is proposed to be established must be lawful. It must not be in contravention of the general law of the country, e.g., to run a lottery. Where a scheme purports to grant interest-bearing loans on personal security to persons chosen by lot, it falls within s. 294-A of the Penal Code and as such is illegal 9. Where the main object of a company is the conduct of a lottery, the mere fact that some of its objects were philanthropic will not save the company from being unlawful. The purpose would still be illegal even where the illegal business is merely annexed to the real one which is philanthropic 10.

Signatories to memo. In the absence of special regulation requiring the signatories to the memorandum to pay for their shares, they are not liable to do so, until a call has regularly been made upon them 1. A subscriber to the memorandum cannot, however, obtain rescission of his contract to take the shares subscribed on the ground of misrepresentation 2. He remains a member until such time as either the company which being authorized by its articles accepts a surrender of the shares for valid reasons, or the subscriber himself pays for the shares and validly transfers them to somebody else 3.

Members. Members are deemed to be aware of the contents of the memorandum and the articles of association 4. In fact it is the duty of a person taking shares in a company to use reasonable diligence in making himself acquainted with the provisions of these documents and he must take the consequences of his neglect 5.

Third persons. The memorandum of association does not constitute a contract between the company and a third party who may be named therein 6, but third persons who have dealings with a company are also affected with notice of the provisions contained in the memorandum and the articles 7; but they are not bound to make further inquiries, and they may assume that the internal management of the company has been regular 8. When an agreement on behalf of a company is entered into with a stranger by one of the directors then, if it was possible under the articles of association for authority of all the directors to be delegated to one, and the stranger is aware of no facts to the contrary, the agreement will bind the company irrespective of whether such delegation has in fact taken place or not 9.

"One man company." Where a company was incorporated according to law and six of the subscribers held only one share each and the seventh held the balance of the twenty thousand shares issued, the House of Lords held that the Court could not inquire whether or not such a "one man" company was intended by the legislature when passing the Companies Act 10. But in a later case Philimore, J. held that a limited company may be a mere alias of the principal members in a case where fraud is shown 11 and a sale to such a company may turn out to be fraudulent 12. How a company is ended.

A company once bruught into existence by incorporation cannot be got rid of unless by winding up, even if the incorporation was an abuse of, or fraud upon, the Act of the legislature[1]. The registrar may however under s. 247 strike the name of a defunct company off the register and declare it dissolved. See s. 247 and notes.

Infant's signature.

In England the contract of an infant being voidable and not void, his signature to the memorandum of association is the signature of 'a person', and subsequent avoidance of the infant's contract does not invalidate the registration or any intermediate acts affecting rights of third persons[2].

Subscribers.

The subscribers to the memorandum need not be beneficially interested in the shares for which they have subscribed[3]. The memorandum of association has the effect of prescribing as well as limiting the liability of the members[4].

Limitation of liability.

The limitation of liability in respect of shares held is distinct from an obligation collaterally imposed upon a member, in certain events, to take up further shares which will themselves, when taken up, be entitled to similar limitations of liability. There is nothing in such collateral obligation which is ultra vires or repugnant to the system of limited liability[5].

Subject to certain restrictions there would appear to be no limitation upon the purpose for which a company may be formed under the Act[6].

6. In the case of a company limited by shares—

Memorandum of company limited by shares.

(1) the memorandum shall state—

(i) the name of the company, with "Limited" as the last word in its name ;

(ii) the province in which the registered office of the company is to be situate ;

(iii) the objects of the company ; [and, except in the case of trading corporations, the territories to which they extend] ;

(iv) that the liability of the members is limited ;

(v) the amount of share capital with which the company proposes to be registered, and the division thereof into shares of a fixed amount :

(2) no subscriber of the memorandum shall take less than one share :

(3) each subscriber shall write opposite to his name the number of shares he takes.

Alteration. In para (iii) of sub-s. (1) of this section after "the objects of the company" the words within square brackets have been inserted by the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937 which came into operation on 1st April, 1937.

Sub-s. (1). For the form of memorandum of association see form A in the Third Schedule of the Act.

"Limited." Sub-s. (1), cl. (i). In the memorandum of association of a company limited by share or guarantee, the company should be described as "Limited", unless it is formed for one of the objects specified in s. 26 and a license of the Provincial Government is obtained. When making a contract, an abbreviation such as "Ltd." or "Ld." may be used [1]. For the consequences of omission of the word or its abbreviation see notes to s. 73.

The name of a company may be changed by a "special resolution" and subject to the approval of the Central Government [2].

Cl. (ii). Every company must have a registered office the situation of which and any change thereof must be notified to the registrar [3]. See notes to s. 3 (3) and s. 72.

This clause provides that the memorandum must state the province in which the office of the proposed company must be situate; but once that province has been declared, there is no valid reason why the company should not fix its office anywhere it likes within the province and change it from time to time on giving notice [4].

Cl. (iii). This amended clause further requires that the memorandum must state, except in the case of trading corporations, the territories to which the objects extend. For definition of a "trading corporation" see s. 2 (1) (17), p. 26, ante.

Objects of company. The objects of a company should be clearly set forth in the memorandum, for a company can do only what is within, or incidental to, the objects stated therein [5]. The objects as stated in the memorandum cannot be departed from except so far as permitted by s. 12 of the Act. The memorandum is the charter of the company [6]. Consequently a contract made by the directors upon a matter not included in the memorandum is ultra vires and it cannot be made binding on the company by being expressly assented to at a meeting of shareholders, even by the whole body of them [7].

It is not enough to state the object to be to carry on any business which the company may think profitable, for this defines nothing [5]. The memorandum should specifically enumerate all the businesses the company is likely to undertake, as the words "to do all such other things as may be deemed incidental or conductive to the attainment of the above objects or any of them" will only cover operations of a nature similar to the businesses previously mentioned [8].

Wide powers.

Wide powers taken in general words will be construed as merely ancillary to the specific objects mentioned in the earlier clause 1. A mining company should take powers to construct railways, tramways, canals, roads &c., and also to acquire lands and to dispose of them. Similarly, a bank or a loan company should take powers to develop, turn to account or improve land that may come into its possession.

Where the memorandum of a company in its final clause took power "generally to transact any business of merchant or capitalist either as principal or agent," this wide power was cut down by the Court to conform with the main objects of the company 2.

Construction of objects clauses.

Courts are not disposed to construe even the widest powers in such a way as to enable a company to go outside the main objects for which it was formed 3. The powers of a company, however, should not be construed strictly, and the company may do anything that is fairly incidental to the powers specified 4. In Egyptian Salt & Soda Co. v. Port Said Salt Association 5 their Lordships of the Judicial Committee observed as follows: "The learned Judge says that 'the memorandum is to be construed strictly.' If by this he meant merely that the memorandum must be construed in accordance with the accepted principles applicable to the interpretation of all legal documents, no exception need be taken to his statement, but if he meant that a specially rigid canon of construction is to be applied to the memorandum of association of limited companies, their Lordships do not agree. A memorandum of association like any other document must be read fairly and its import derived from a reasonable interpretation of the language which it employs." In the case noted below, the Court of Appeal in England strongly commented upon the practice of enumerating every possible operation as an object of the company in a string of clauses with a statement that each clause is independent of and not ancillary to any other clause 6. But it has also been held in this case that if a company state in the memorandum all the possible things the company may desire to do as independent main objects, and if this is the clear intention of the document, the Court will construe it in this manner 6. Where however the main object is gone, the company will be wound up 7. Whether any particular transaction is or is not

But if there is a provision that each clause is to be read separately and not limited by other clauses, the difficulty may be overcome: Re Anglo-Cuban Oil Co. In this case a clause in the memorandum ran thus: "Every sub-clause should be construed as a substantive clause and not limited or restricted by reference to any other sub-clause or by the name of the company and that none of such sub-clauses or the objects specified therein should be deemed subsidiary or auxiliary merely to the objects mentioned in the first sub-clause."

within the powers of a company, is a question of law depending on the construction of the objects clauses of the memorandum of association 1.

Where the memorandum of association deals with the rights of various classes of shares, in order to ascertain the rights attaching to particular classes of shares, the memorandum must be read and given effect to as a whole, unless any particular provision of the same violates an express provision of the statute, in which case that particular provision will be treated as invalid 2.

Implied power of company.

As regards the implied powers of a company, Lord Selborne, L. C. observed: "It appears to me that directors and general meetings of companies of this sort can have no powers by implication except such as are incident to, or properly to be inferred from, the powers expressed in the memorandum and articles. Their powers are entirely created by the law and by the contract founded upon the law which enables such companies to be constituted" 3. The doctrine that a company can do nothing which is not expressly or impliedly provided by its memorandum of association must be reasonably understood and applied. A company therefore in carrying on the trade for which it is constituted and in whatever may be regarded fairly as incidental to or consequential upon that trade, is free to enter into any transaction not expressly prohibited by the memorandum 4. Thus a trading company has an implied power to borrow money 5, and to sell land 6, and in the latter case it can give mortgage also 7.

Objects—not powers.

It should be remembered that under this section the memorandum should state the objects of the company and not the powers. This is pointed out clearly by their Lordships in the case noted below 8: "As Lord Wrenbury said in Cotman v. Brougham 9: 'Powers are not required to be and ought not to be specified in the memorandum. The Act intended that the company, if it be a trading company, should by its memorandum define the trade, not that it should specify the various acts which it should be within the power of the company to do in carrying on the trade'...It must be borne in mind that the purpose of the memorandum is to enable shareholders, creditors and those who deal with the company to know what is its permitted range of enterprise, and for this information they are entitled to rely on the constituent documents of the company. They have not access to other sources of information such as antecedent transactions."

In this connection the following observation in the speech of Lord Parker of Waddington in Cotman v. Brougham 10, is instructive: "The truth is that the statement of a company's objects in its memorandum is intended to serve a double purpose. In the first place it gives protection to subscribers, who learn from it the purposes for which their money can be applied. In the second place it gives protection to persons who deal with the company and who can infer from it the extent of the company's powers. The narrower the objects expressed in the memorandum the less is the subscribers' risk, but the wider such objects the greater is the security of those who transact business with the company. Moreover experience soon showed that persons to transact business with companies do not like having to depend on inference when the validity of a proposed transaction is in question. Even a power to borrow money could not always be safely inferred, much less such a power as that of underwriting shares in another company. Thus arose the practice of specifying powers as objects, a practice rendered possible by the fact that there is no statutory limit on the number of objects which may be specified. But even thus, a person proposing to deal with a company could not be absolutely safe, for powers specified as objects might be read as ancillary to and exercisable only for the purpose of attaining what might be held to be the company's prime or paramount object, and on this construction no one could be quite certain whether the Court would not hold any proposed transaction to be ultra vires. At any rate, all the surrounding circumstances would require investigation. Fresh clauses were framed to meet this difficulty and the result is the modern memorandum of association with its multifarious list of objects and powers specified as objects, and its clauses designed to prevent any specified object being read as ancillary to some other objects."

Ultra vires.

A company cannot confirm or ratify anything which is ultra vires [1]. This term in its proper sense denotes some act or transaction on the part of a corporation which, although not unlawful or contrary to public policy if done by an individual, is yet beyond the legitimate powers of the corporation as defined by the statute under which it is formed, or the statutes which are applicable to it, or by its charter or memorandum of association. The term is often loosely used and applied to an act or transaction which is beyond the lawful powers of an individual.

Where an act is ultra vires of a company the consent, even of every member of it, cannot make it valid [2], as Lord Cairns clearly stated the law in the following passage: "If every shareholder of the company had been in the room, and every shareholder of the company had said 'that is a contract which we desire to make, which we authorize the directors to make, to which we sanction the placing of the seal of the company', the case would not have stood in any different position from that in which it stands now. The shareholders would thereby, by unanimous consent, have been attempting to do the very thing which by the Act of Parliament they were prohibited from doing" [1]. Such an act cannot be validated by the assent of a general meeting of the shareholders [3], or by obtaining judgment by consent [4], or by estoppel [5].

On the other hand, a transaction which is beyond the powers of the directors only, may be ratified by an ordinary resolution of a general meeting, although to authorize such acts in the future an alteration of the articles by passing a "special resolution" is necessary 1. The doctrine of ultra vires, as explained in the last noted case, is to be maintained, but is to be applied reasonably so that whatever is fairly incidental to those things which the legislature has authorized ought not, unless expressly prohibited, to be held ultra vires 2.

A company cannot purchase its own shares 3, or advance capital of the company to a director to do so 4, or accept surrender of its own shares except where it does not involve reduction of capital or does not amount to purchase of its own shares 5. It is ultra vires of a company to issue unauthorized capital, or reduce or repay capital without complying with the statutory requirements, or distribute bonus shares gratuitously, or issue shares at a discount 6, or pay dividends out of capital, or pay unreasonable sums for services rendered, or make payments for the benefit of a section of the shareholders, or subscribe to external objects 7.

Apart from any statutory powers, a company cannot employ its funds or assets for the purpose of any transaction which does not come within the objects specified in the memorandum of association. It cannot by its articles of association extend its powers in this respect 8. The purchase of shares of other joint stock companies, unless expressly authorized by the memorandum of association, is ultra vires 9, and the contract is not binding 10. It is not sufficient for the proposed transaction to be convenient, if it is not incidental to the objects stated in the memorandum 11. But if property is acquired by ultra vires expenditure, the company's rights over it may be protected 12. Where the memorandum or the articles give a limited power to borrow and mortgage its property, the company cannot borrow or mortgage beyond the limits set 13. A contract which is ultra vires is not necessarily illegal. Where a bank lent money on mortgage, it was held by the Madras High Court that the bank could sue on the contract, although the memorandum of association of the bank prohibited the bank from lending money on mortgage, on the ground that under the Indian law a mortgage is a transfer of interest in immovable property and property legally and by formal transfer, as laid down by Brice on the Doctrine of Ultra Vires, or conveyance transferred to a corporation is in law duly vested in such corporation which was not empowered to acquire such property 14.

Where a deed of guarantee was entered into between a company, a guarantor and a trustee for the preference shareholders whereby it was provided in clause 7 that any sum paid by the guarantor as dividend to the preference shareholders should be forthwith repaid to him by the company on demand, it was held that clause 7 was wholly ultra vires the company and void. "The instant that any sum is paid by the guarantor to the trustee for the preference shareholders, Cl. 7 authorises the guarantor to commence action for repayment of the sum as if he were a creditor of the company entitled to rank in the same position as any other creditor. The capital of the company might thereby be reduced otherwise than by expenditure on the objects defined in the memorandum of association." [1]. One limited company cannot stand guarantee for the contracts of another limited company without an express power given to the company, either in so many words or to be inferred from the general language used in the memorandum of association [2].

In the absence of a special power in the memorandum, it is ultra vires of a company to take shares in another company carrying on a different class of business, or for one company to amalgamate with another company, or for a company with powers to lend to guarantee the debts of a company promoted by it, or for a railway or tramway company to carry on an omnibus business [3].

On the other hand, it is not ultra vires of a company to pay pension to the family of a deceased officer or gratuities to its servants, to pay a reasonable brokerage for selling its shares, to take a larger house than what is necessary and sublet a portion. A trading company may borrow on or without security or accept bills of exchange or deposit its title deeds to secure an over-draft, or issue debenture stock as collateral security. A colliery company can purchase a colliery or sell land to a builder for the erection of colleges. A company whose powers include that of promoting may promote another company, subscribe the shares and pay the expenses of promotion [4].

Where a company is given by its memorandum express power to purchase land, it is implied that it has power to let the land, and if necessary also to sell it [5]. A company has large powers of selling its personal property as incidental to the management of its business [6]; but a power to sell or purchase the business of another company will not be implied [7]. Although a company cannot confirm or ratify anything which is beyond its powers, part of it may be valid if severable from that which is void [4]. Negotiation of negotiable instruments is within the ordinary course of business of a company, and no special power is necessary for the purpose [8]. But a company may make bills of exchange and promissory notes for the purpose of obtaining credit, if it is authorized by the memorandum of association or if its business is such as to make the use of bills necessary and not otherwise [9]. The company is liable to a bona fide holder of the bill if it is signed by some one having apparent, though not actual, authority [10]. Where a bill is made by the directors without authority, they will be personally liable to a bona fide holder [11]. A company can raise money by the issue of debentures and invest the same or any part of it, if the memorandum so authorizes it[1].

Payment to a retired secretary and member of a club by way of annuity, pension or gratuity is within the powers of the club, although according to the memorandum of association the club is not for gain and no dividend, bonus &c., are to be paid by way of profit to the members[2]. But it has been held that granting pension to the widow of a former managing director is ultra vires, although the articles of the company authorized the directors to provide for the welfare of employees, their widows and children[3]. Where a company was formed to acquire business of chemical manufacture, a large sum of money was allowed to be distributed for the furtherance of scientific education and research on the ground that such distribution was likely to lead to direct and substantial (but not speculative or too remote) advantage of the company[4].

In this connection see Act XXXVII of 1940 (printed as Appendix A) authorizing companies, as from 3rd September, 1939, to make donations in a Government loan for the purpose of assisting the prosecution of the present war notwithstanding that the memorandum or articles of association of such companies do not enable them to do so.

If the directors carry on a trade which is ultra vires of the company, they cannot bind the company by the contracts and the consignees cannot recover in respect of their shipments[5]. If the directors misapply the capital of the company to a purpose which is ultra vires, they are liable to replace it[6]. It has been held in the last noted case that s. 10 of the Limitation Act does not apply to directors. A bona fide compromise of a reasonable claim by payment of a sum of money out of the company's capital is not ultra vires[7].

A mortgage of uncalled capital is allowable where the memorandum of association gives the power and there is nothing in the articles to the contrary[8]; but where the memorandum, while authorizing certain charges, omits to authorize a charge on uncalled capital, the omission may imply a prohibition[9]. A reserve fund created out of undivided profits is not capital[10], and it is not ultra vires of a company to purchase thereby shares of other companies, if the articles of the former so permit[11].

Borrowing.

of the loan under the equitable doctrine of subrogation, if the moneys borrowed were applied in payment of the legitimate trading debts of the company 1. When an agent borrows money for a principal without the authority of the latter, but the principal takes the benefit of the money so borrowed or the money so borrowed has gone into the coffers of the principal, the law implies a promise to pay. There appears to be nothing in law which makes this principle inapplicable to the case of a joint stock company when the borrowing power of the company is unlimited. The position would be that the principal (the company) through its agents (the directors or the managing agents) had borrowed money which the principal had not authorized the agents to borrow. However the money having been borrowed and used for the benefit of the principal, either in paying its debts or for its legitimate business, the company cannot repudiate its liability to repay on the ground that the agents had no authority from the company to borrow. When these facts are established, a claim on the footing of money had and received would be maintainable 2.

Where the carrying on of a business by a company is ultra vires, that ultra vires transaction creates no debt, legal or equitable, and upon winding up of the company the contributories are not liable to pay such debts 3. A company can retain property paid for by it or recover money paid by it, although the purchase or loan was ultra vires 4. As to the persons who are competent to bring a suit in respect of ultra vires acts, see notes to s. 2 (2).

Ratification.

A company cannot confirm or ratify anything which is beyond its powers, express or implied, in the memorandum or conferred by the statute. Short of that, a transaction of the directors which is beyond their own powers, but within the powers of the company, can be ratified by a resolution of the company in a general meeting or even by acquiescence, provided that the shareholders have knowledge of the facts relating to the transaction to be ratified or the means of knowledge is available to them. A company may by a resolution at a subsequent meeting ratify any business which it purported to transact at a meeting informally called 5. In order to establish a case of ratification, it is essential that the party ratifying should be conscious that an act beyond the authority of the agent had been done, and further, after notice of that fact, the party consciously by an overt act agreed to be bound by it or, by acquiescence in the situation arising thereafter, allowed the business to continue. In either event consciousness of the act done by the agent without authority must be proved, and secondly it should be proved that after notice of such unauthorized act, the principal adopted the transaction 6. An incorporated company can ratify a tort committed by its agents 7. For other cases on ultra vires acts see notes to ss. 55 and 88.

Objects must not be illegal.

The objects of a company must not be illegal or include anything in contravention of the Act[1], for instance, the issuing of its shares at a discount[2]. The distribution of the assets in a liquidation cannot be defined by the memorandum so as to deprive the shareholders of the rights given them by the Act[3]. The sale of all a company's assets and all its undertakings and distribution of the proceeds cannot be a corporate object, so that under a clause for that purpose, introduced into the memorandum of association, such a sale and distribution can be made without regard to the provisions of s. 208-C[3].

Where the objects do not include the return of a portion of the share capital to the shareholders in the shape of what is termed 'dividend', the articles providing for such return are ultra vires, being contrary to the objects clause of the memorandum of association[4].

Where the object of a company was "to advance money at interest on the security of land, houses, machinery and other property situated in India and to invest money not immediately required upon such securities and bank deposits as may be from time to time determined", a member of the company was held to be entitled to a declaration that advances of money in the nature of loans should only be made on the security of land, houses, machinery and other poperty situated in India, but that so far as the investment of money not immediately required was concerned, the directors had complete discretion in the matter of approving the kind of security offered[5].

Injunction.

A member of a company is not entitled to an injunction to restrain it from carrying out an object set forth in its memorandum of association[6]. If the act is only voidable and not void, a shareholder has no right to injunction[7]. A bona fide transaction with a company, impeachable on the ground of being ultra vires, will be set aside only on the terms that both parties be restored to their original position[8].

Intra vires.

A company is however bound in a matter intra vires the company by the unanimous agreement of all the corporators. If all the individual corporators in fact assent to a transaction that is intra vires the company, but ultra vires the board of directors, it is not necessary that they should hold a meeting in one room or at one place to express that assent simultaneously[9].

For cases illustrative of intra vires transactions see pp. 432-435 of Part I of Palmer's Company Precedents, 15th ed. (1938).

Clauses of memorandum.

For clauses commonly found in the memorandum of association see Palmer's Company Law, 13th ed. pp. 59-61. Additional provisions may be inserted in the memorandum, but if inserted without qualification, they become conditions of the company's constitution, and the rule is that such condition cannot be altered and that nothing can be done in contravention thereof[10]. memorandum qualifies the provisions, e.g., by giving power to alter them, that power may be exercised [1].

In Oakbank Oil Co. v. Crum [2], Lord Selborne observed: "It appears to me that directors and general meetings of companies of this sort can have no powers by implication, except such as are incident to, or properly to be inferred from, the powers expressed in the memorandum and articles. Their powers are entirely created by the law and by the contract founded upon the law which enables such companies to be constituted."

Where a company is not bound by a contract, it does not become bound for the fact that it acts under the mistaken belief that it is bound [3].

Shareholders in general meetings cannot authorize application of the company's funds in subscription for public objects, unless power has been taken in the memorandum [4]. Payments may however be made for matters that are reasonabiy incidental to or consequential on the business authorized by the memorandum, e.g., expenses of its incorporation [5], liquidation [6], or those of stamping and posting proxy papers [7].

As to the power of making donations in a Government loan floated for the purpose of assisting the prosecution of the present war, see the War Donations and Investments (Companies) Act XXXVII of 1940, printed as Appendix A.

Limited liability.

Cl. (iv). This means that the liability of the members is limited to the amount payable on the shares. They are not bound to pay more even if the company contracts enormous debts.

"Share capital."

Cl. (v). The words "share capital" is used in contradistinction to borrowed money. The capital is not a debt of the company even to its shareholders [8]. In this Act the expression "share capital" has throughout been used instead of "capital" used in the previous Acts.

"Nominal capital."

The nominal capital is the amount which limits the potentiality of a company to issue the shares into which the capital is divided. When some of the "nominal" capital is subscribed, it at once becomes "issued" capital, the residue being "unissued" capital [9].

"Paid up capital."

The aggregate amount of payments of application moneys, allotment moneys and calls represents the "paid up" capital. Shares may be lawfully issued as "fully paid up" for consideration which the company has agreed to accept, as representing the money's worth, the nominal value of the shares, whether the shares are or are not the shares subscribed for in the memorandum of association [10].

"Fixed amount."

The "fixed amount" of a share must be a monetary amount, but it is not necessary that all the shares should be of the same amount. A capital of say Rs. 1,00,000 may be divided into 5,000 shares of Rs. 10 each and 500 shares of Rs. 100 each [11].

"Fixed" and "circulating capital."

The "fixed capital" of a company is what the company retains in the shape of assets upon which the subscribed capital has been expended, and which assets, either themselves produce income independent of any further action of the company, or being retained by the company are made use of to produce income or gain profits. The "circulating capital" of a company is a portion of the subscribed capital intended to be used by being temporarily parted with and circulated in business in the form of using goods or other assets which, or the proceeds of which, are intended to return to the company with an increment and to be used again and again and always returned with accretions. When circulating capital is expended in buying goods which are sold at a profit or in buying raw materials from which goods are manufactured and sold at a profit, the amount so expended must be charged against or deducted from receipts before the amount of any profit can be considered 1. Lord Hanworth, M. R. observed in the undernoted case 2: "It seems rather that the cases of Hancock 3 and of Mitchell v. B. W. Noble Ltd. 4. and of Mallet v. Staveleg 5, give illustrations that the test of fixed and circulating capital is the true one; and where, as in this case, the expenditure is to bring back into the hands of the company a necessary ingredient of their existing business—important but still ancillary and necessary to the business which they carry on—the expenditure ought to be debited to the circulating capital, which is employed in and sunk in the permanent—even if wasting—assets of the business."

Different classes of shares.

Although by this clause "the memorandum of association is to state the amount of the original capital and the number of shares into which it is to be divided, yet in other respects the rights of the shareholders in respect of their shares and the terms on which additional capital may be raised are matters to be regulated by the articles rather than by the memorandum of association and are therefore matters which (unless provided by the memorandum, as in Ashbury v. Watson 6), may be determined by the company from time to time by special resolution" 7. But if the memorandum defines the respective rights, they cannot subsequently be varied 6 without the sanction of the Court in a proceeding under s. 54 or s. 153, unless the memorandum also confers power to alter such rights 8. It is common to declare the rights, privileges and conditions of preference shares and founders' shares by express provisions in the memorandum of association, for by so doing extra protection is secured to the holders of such shares against any alteration of their status. But all this can be done and more properly done by the articles of association 9. The law in this regard has been clearly laid down by the Judicial Committee in a recent case 10: While the memorandum must state the amount of capital, divided into shares of a certain fixed amount, provision as to the character of the shares and the rights to be attached to them is more properly made by the articles, which may be altered from time to time by special resolution. If equality of the shareholders is expressly provided in the memorandum, that cannot be modified by the articles. If nothing is said in the memorandum, the articles may provide for the issue of the authorized capital in the form of preference shares ; if the articles do not so provide or do provide for equality inter socios, the power to issue preference shares may be obtained by alteration of the articles. If the memorandum prescribes the classes of shares into which the capital is to be divided and the rights to be attached to such shares respectively, the company has no power to alter that provision by special resolution 1. A company is entitled to exercise the powers conferred on it by the memorandum, unless such right is clearly restricted by the articles 2.

Specification of rights in memo. or articles.

Specification in the memorandum of rights attached to a particular class of shares is regarded prima facie as one of the conditions referred to in s. 10 and therefore made unalterable 3 ; but if the rights are only conditionally attached, e g., if they are accompanied by a clause providing for alteration, such specification does not take effect as an unalterable condition 4.

If the memorandum is wholly silent on the point, the articles as originally framed and registered can effectually divide, or give power to divide, the capital into different classes of shares with preferential or other rights attached 5. If the rights of different classes of shareholders are fixed by the articles only, they can be altered by special resolution without leave of the Court 6.

When both the memorandum and the articles are silent, a company can issue different classes of shares by taking powers on alteration of the articles 7.

Rights of preference shareholders.

The holders of preference shares, unless the articles expressly so provide, are not entitled to more than their fixed dividend, however prosperous the company may be 8. Preference shares are presumably cumulative, and ambiguous or vague language in the articles will not make them non-cumulative 9. They may however be made non-cumulative if the articles so declare in clear language 10. If the shareholders are by the articles entitled only to dividends when declared, a preference shareholder cannot after liquidation claim payment on the ground that a dividend might have been declared 11.

Unless preference shares are made preferential as to capital, they are paid off equally with the ordinary shares upon liquidation of the company 12. But if they are preferential as to capital, any surplus assets after payment of the debts will, apart from any special provision in the articles 13, be applied first in paying off the capital of the preference shares 14.

If the memorandum or the articles declare that the preference shares shall confer a preference in the winding up, or that the surplus assets 1 shall be applied first in repaying the preference shares, but do not further deal with the capital, there is a difference of judicial opinion in England as to whether the preference shareholders will participate in any surplus after repayment of the ordinary shares 2. If the preference capital is repayable with interest, this means with interest from the date of the winding up, and any surplus from the sale of assets will be treated as capital 3.

Where a clause in the memorandum of association conferred on the preference shareholders "the right to a fixed cumulative preference dividend at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum on the capital for the time being paid up thereon, and to half the distributable surplus profits which in respect of each year shall remain after paying or providing for the payment of dividend for such year at the rate of 10 p. c. per annum on the capital for the time being paid up on the ordinary shares" and provided that their "shares shall rank both as regards dividends and capital in priority to the ordinary shares, but shall not confer the right to any further participation in profits or assets", it was held on the construction of the memorandum and articles that the preference shareholders were entitled, in priority to the ordinary shareholders, to payment of arrears of fixed cumulative preferential dividend and to repayment of capital. Every case depends upon the particular language used 4.

Where the articles state that the preference shareholders are to be paid in a winding up "arrears of the preference dividend", there will be no such arrears if the preference dividend was payable out of the profits of each year and there were no profits before the winding up 5; but the question is doubtful if the dividend is cumulative 6. It has however been held that profits earned after commencement of winding up are divisible as capital 7.

If the shares are issued as preference shares when there is no power to do so, or in an irregular manner, the subscribers are entitled to have their money paid back and are regarded as creditors of the company 8.

Memorandum and articles of an unlimited company.

For forms of memorandum and articles of association of an unlimited company see Form D of the Third Schedule. As to what the articles of such a company should contain see s. 17.

In the case of an unlimited company, the capital being stated in the articles may be varied at any time by special resolution without the sanction of the Court; and if the articles allow it, capital may be returned to the members and they may cease to be members on such terms as may be agreed upon [1].

As in the case of a company limited by guarantee, notice of any increase of capital or in the number of members must be sent to the registrar [2].

As to the registration of an unlimited company see ss. 67 and 68.

Printing and signature of memorandum.

(a) be printed,

(b) be divided into paragraphs numbered consecutively, and

(c) be signed by each subscriber (who shall add his address and description) in the presence of at least one witness who shall attest the signature.

This has been substituted by the Companies (Amendment) Act XXII of 1936 for the original s. 9 which ran as follows :—

Signature of memorandum.

9. The memorandum shall be signed by each subscriber in the presence of at least one witness who shall attest the signature.

For effect of the amendment see Introduction.

[2] S. 53.

Attestation of signature.

One witness for all the subscribers will suffice [1]. But the signature of a subscriber cannot be attested by himself or by another subscriber, for the word "attest" implies "presence of some person who stands by, but is not a party to the transaction" [2].

Who may sign.

An agent may sign the memorandum of association on behalf of his principal, and the authority to sign may be given orally [3]. The execution will be good whether the agent simply writes his principal's name or adds words showing that it is signed by an attorney [4].

Liability of the signatory.

A signatory to the memorandum is responsible for the shares which are shown against his name in the memorandum, and on liquidation he is liable to the full extent, even if the shares were never formally allotted to him [5]. He remains a member until such time as he validly surrenders the shares or validly transfers them [6].

After registration a subscriber to the memorandum cannot divest himself of his liability as a member, although his signature may not have been properly attested; the transaction may be irregular, but it is not void [4]. The subscriber cannot repudiate his subscription on the ground that he was induced to sign by misrepresentation [7]. As to the effect of registration see ss. 23 and 24.

Stamp and fees.

As to the stamp on a memorandum of association see Appendix (Stamp duty). The stamp must be affixed before or at the time of signature [8]. As to the scale of fees, see Table B.

Restriction on alteration of memorandum.

10. A company shall not alter the conditions contained in its memorandum except in the cases and in the mode and to the extent for which express provision is made in this Act :

Provided that any provision in the memorandum relating to the appointment of a manager or managing agent and other matters of a like nature incidental or subsidiary to the main objects of the company, shall not be deemed to be such condition.

The proviso has been inserted by the Companies (Amendment) Act XXII of 1936.

Object of amendment.

The object appears to be to frustrate the designs of such managers, managing agents or secretaries who endeavour to perpetuate their office by inserting a clause to that effect in the memorandum. The amendment follows the recent decision of the Bombay High Court in Ramkumar v. Sholapur Spinning & Weaving Co. (infra).

Condition is not alterable.

As observed by Lord Justice Baggallay, "the memorandum of association forms indeed the charter of the company, to be modified only in the way provided by the statute" [9]. A condition contained in a company's memorandum of association cannot be altered and nothing can be done in contravention thereof [10]. If the memorandum qualifies the provisions, for instance, by giving power to alter them, that power may however be exercised [1]. Where one of the conditions contained in the memorandum of association is that the rights and privileges given to the various classes of shares are subject to variation, varying them does not amount to an alteration of the conditions contained in the memorandum [2]. Where the articles were registered on the same day as the memorandum and the reference in a clause of the memorandum to the "privileges, rights, restrictions and conditions specified in the articles" obviously meant the contemporaneous articles which were registered on the same day, it was held that the rights, privileges and restrictions of the preference shareholders as defined in the articles should be treated as incorporated in the memorandum, and so could not be altered [3].

Meaning of "conditions."

The word "conditions" in this section is general, and is not restricted to conditions required by the statute to be inserted in the memorandum. If conditions, not required by the statute to be inserted, but in the sense of forming part of the constitution of the company, are inserted in the memorandum, they are unalterable [4], unless the memorandum reserves power to alter them [5]. But if the memorandum appoints a director without mentioning anything about his qualification, the company may afterwards impose a share qualification [6]. A company was registered under Act VI of 1882 (repealed) with the following words in the memorandum : "The registered office of the company will be situated in the town of Silchar :" held that the insertion of a place name in the memorandum of association does not make it an unalterable condition, and provided the alteration has been made in the manner provided by the Act, such alteration is valid and binding on the company [7].

It sometimes happens that the managing director, secretary or managing agents of a company with a view to perpetuate their office for ever get a clause inserted in the memorandum of association fixing their tenure of office and remuneration. But it has recently been held by the Bombay High Court that such provisions are nothing more than a detail of management for the purpose of carrying on the business of the company and cannot be considered to be a vital condition [8]. For the opposite view see the case noted below [9].

A company may alter its memorandum of association in the following respects :—

Alteration of memo.

(i) by changing its name (s. 11) ;
(ii) by altering is objects (s. 12) ;
(iii) by altering its share capital by (ss. 50 and 55)

(6) The change of name shall not affect any rights or obligations of the company, or render defective any legal proceedings by or against the company; and any legal proceedings that might have been continued or commenced against it by its former name may be continued or commenced against it by its new name.

The sub-s. (3) above has been substituted by the Companies (Amendment) Act XXII of 1936. The original sub-s. (3) ran as follows:—

(3) A company shall not be registered by a name which contains any of the following words, namely :—"Crown," "Emperor," "Empire," "Empress," "Imperial," "King," "Queen," "Royal," "Bank of Bengal, Bank of Madras, Bank of Bombay," or words expressing or implying the sanction, approval or patronage of the Crown or the Government of India or a Local Government, except where the Governor General in Council signifies his consent to the use of such words as part of the name of the company by order in writing under the hand of one of the Secretaries to the Government of India.

Provided that nothing in this sub-section shall apply to companies registered before the commencement of this Act.

The amendment has been suggested by s. 17 of the English Act of 1929. It will not affect companies registered before the above amending Act came into force.

In sub-ss. (3) and (4) the words "Central Government" have been substituted for the words "Governor General in Council" and "Local Government" respectively by the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937 which came into operation on 1st April, 1937. But in exercise of the powers conferred by sub-s. (1) of s. 124 of the Government of India Act, 1935 the Central Government has, with effect from 1st April, 1938, entrusted to Provincial Governments its function under sub-s. (4) but not under sub-s. (3)(vide Gazette of India dated 26th March, 1938, Part I p. 440). In sub-s. (4) after the words "in writing" the words "under the hand of one of the Secretaries to such Government" have been omitted by the same Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937.

Company's name.

The word "company" or any similar word need not form part of a company's name. Such names as "Bose Brothers, Ltd.," "Rakha Mines, Ltd.," "M. T., Ltd.," "Canning Employees' Fund, Ltd.," may be used.

A new company is not permitted to be registered in a name so nearly resembling the name of an existing company as to be calculated to deceive [1], or to lead to confusion [2]. The registrar may refuse to register the company, and the Court generally does not interfere with his discretion, unless it is exercised on a wrong principle [3] of law or the registrar was influenced by extraneous considerations [3].

[3] King v. Registrar of Companies [1912] 3 K. B. 23.

A company may not get registered in a name as will lead to the belief that it is carrying on the business of an existing firm 1, even if it be a foreign company 2. The sound as well as spelling of the name will be considered 3, and absence of fraud is immaterial 4. If however the business is different and the name is not identical, there cannot be any objection on the ground that one of the names is identical 5.

Injunction.

The Court will grant an injunction where similarity of names may lead to confusion and to interference with the business of an existing firm or company 6. An inadvertent omission of the company to publish its corporate name will not disentitle it to have the use of its name protected by injunction 7.

In the case noted below 8 the defendant was restrained by injunction from using the initials "B. M. A." on the ground that people who might see the defendant's shops might come to the conclusion that the British Medical Association was in some way connected with those shops.

Principle on which the Court interferes.

The principle on which the Court interferes is that one person is not entitled to represent the business of another as carried on by him 9. A company cannot however appropriate a descriptive word or title so as to obtain a monopoly thereof 10. A person who has bona fide, and without any intention to deceive, adopted a name for business purposes and acquired it by reputation over a considerable period, is entitled to trade under that name and cannot be restrained from so doing, even though the similarity of the name to that of another firm engaged in business in the same trade may occasionally lead to confusion 11. The Court would not grant an injunction where there was no evidence that the defendants imitated the trade marks or labels of the plaintiffs or otherwise attempted to deceive the public, although there was a probability that the public would be occasionally misled by the similarity of the names of the plaintiffs 12.

Registrar's power.

The registrar has no power to refuse registration of a company upon the ground that the name of the company would be calculated to deceive people into the belief that the business was carried on by persons not registered as a company under the Act 13.

Distinction.

A distinction must always be drawn between cases in which the words are of common ordinary meaning and cases in which the words complained of are words which more or less partake of the character of fancy words or do not primarily relate to the article, but to the person who makes it. The onus of proving that words which are commonly and properly used as descriptive words have a secondary or subsidiary meaning so as to entitle the person, who has used them, to their exclusive use, lies on that person and is not easily discharged 1. The name or statement of fact may in its primary sense be strictly true, but may be otherwise in its secondary sense 2.

Right to use name.

Although in the absence of fraud or false personation a man is entitled to carry on business in his own name in competition with a similar business previously well established under the same name notwithstanding that confusion or mistake may arise in consequence, yet if he has never carried on such business, he cannot, by promoting and registering a company with a title of which his name forms a part, confer upon the company the rights which he possesses in the use of that name 3.

Name indicates objccts.

The name of a company indicates, to some extent, its objects 4. When a company ceases to carry on its principal business as indicated by its name, it is liable to be wound up on that ground 4.

Sub-s. (3). This was not in the English Act of 1908.

Sub-s. (4). If the special resolution is not duly passed, the registration of the new name will be vacated 5.

Sub-s. (5). The change of name is not complete until it has been made in the register and a new certificate of incorporation issued 6.

Alteration of memorandum.

12. (1) Subject to the provisions of this Act, a company may, by special resolution, alter the provisions of its memorandum so as to change the place of the registered office from one province to another, or with respect to the objects of the company, so far as may be required to enable it—

(a) to carry on its business more economically or more efficiently ; or

(b) to attain its main purpose by new or improved means ; or

(c) to enlarge or change the local area of its operations ; or

(d) to carry on some business which under existing circumstances may conveniently or advantageously be combined with the business of the company ; or

(g) to amalgamate with any other company or body of persons.

(2) The alteration shall not take effect until and except in so far as it is confirmed by the Court on petition.

(3) Before confirming the alteration, the Court must be satisfied—

(a) that sufficient notice has been given to every holder of debentures of the company, and to any persons or class of persons whose interests will, in the opinion of the Court, be affected by the alteration ; and

(b) that, with respect to every creditor who in the opinion of the Court is entitled to object, and who signifies his objection in manner directed by the Court, either his consent to the alteration has been obtained or his debt or claim has been discharged or has determined, or has been secured to the satisfaction of the Court :

Provided that the Court may, in the case of any person or class, for special reasons, dispense with the notice required by this section.

Clauses (f) and (g) have been added to sub-s. (1) by the Companies (Amendment) Act XXII of 1936. They reproduce clauses (f) and (g) of sub-s. (1) of S. 5 of the English Act of 1929. This removes a doubt caused by the decision in John Walker & Sons [1]. See Marshal, Sons & Co. (infra).

Scope.

This section only authorizes alterations which are within the limits provided by the memorandum of association [2]. "To my mind", says Lord Esher M. R., "It is a plain enactment that the company cannot alter anything in the memorandum which is a condition save what is expressly mentioned in that section......... Now anything which is laid down as a rule in the memorandum of association must, I think, be taken to be one of the conditions on which the company is established" [3]. This section does not, however, limit alteration of the memorandum to an alteration of the objects clause, inasmuch as the whole of the objects of a company is not necessarily contained in that clause [4]. The petition will be granted where the proposed alteration is designed for the better attainment of the objects of the company [4]. Where the memorandum confers certain preferential rights upon a particular class of shares, the rights become unalterably attached and cannot be modified unless under the provisions for modification provided for by any of the sections of the Act [5]. See s. 54 and notes.

Unlawful object.

The Court cannot allow alteration of the objects of a company so as to include in them an unlawful object. Where a prize chit, in which those who get the benefit of the drawings get a prize, and the benefit which they get from the drawings gives them different advantages from the persons whose names or numbers are not drawn, amounts to a lottery, the Court will not sanction alteration of a memorandum of association so as to include within its objects the conduct of such prize chits 1.

In the matter of confirmation of a resolution under this section, the Court is bound to exercise a discretion having regard to the interests of the various persons, shareholders, creditors and others 2.

Court's power of alteration.

The Court may however in its discretion sanction very wide 3 alteration of the objects of a company including the addition of a power to purchase other undertakings, to lease the whole of the company's business, to amalgamate with other concerns and to sell the whole or part of its business 4, for such consideration as the company thinks fit, and in particular for shares, debentures or securities of any other company having objects altogether or in part similar. But the Court will not make provision to meet the possibility of the company desiring at some future time to carry on yet another class of business 5. The Act does not enable a company in general terms to alter its memorandum of association, neither does it confer a general power upon the Court to do so ; but the alterations to be sanctioned are confined to those specified in the section 6. On a petition under this section, the Court will have to be satisfied that the new objects are definitely expressed in definite language and fall within sub-s. (1) 7.

On a petition for confirmation, the Court will not hear a person having an interest outside the company that may be injuriously affected by the alteration 8. In dealing with a petition for such confirmation the Court will assume, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that the company will carry on its business properly, and will not therefore have regard to the fact that the alteration in its objects will enable the company to carry on a business competing with that of a body with a very similar name 8.

The Court rarely refuses to confirm a resolution for alteration of the objects 9. It is now well established that the Court has jurisdiction to sanction any alteration of the company's objects, even though consisting of the adoption of an entirely new object clause in modern form in substitution for an old restricted one, upon its being satisfied that this is required to place the company on an equality as regards the efficient carrying on its business with more recently formed companies 10.

If the alterations are such as to render the company's name misleading, the Court may require the name to be changed so as to express the alteration in its aims or sphere of action [1], unless such an alteration of the name will be very inconvenient [2].

Sub-s. (1). An alteration under sub-s. (1), cl. (a) must be one which will leave the business substantially what was before with only such changes in the mode of conducting it as will enable it to be carried on more economically or more efficiently [3]. Under this clause a power to borrow and give security, a power to invest reserves in various securities and other ancillary powers may be authorized [4].

In cl. (b), it should be noted, the expression is "to attain its main purpose" and not "to attain its objects."

An instance of cl. (c) will be found in the case noted below [5].

The additional business under cl. (d) may be a business wholly different from, and bearing no relation to, the existing business of the company and yet be capable of being conveniently and advantageously combined with it, provided that the new business is not destructive of or inconsistent with the existing business [6]. Whether the proposed new business is one of this description is a question for the determination of the directors and shareholders [6]; for the Court will not look to the wisdom or desirability of the proposed alteration. All that it has to decide is whether the alteration is fair and equitable as between the members of the company [7]. In the last cited case the Court refused to sanction an alteration involving abandonment of the objects of a fundamental character.

As an illustration of cl. (e) see the case noted below [7].

Alteration.

The alteration must be for one of the objects specified in the section which does not authorize alterations for mere amplification of the description of objects clearly comprised in the original memorandum [8], or the acquisition of a large number of general powers, many of which the company does not intend to exercise [9]. But an alteration is "with respect to the objects of the company" within the meaning of sub-s. (1), where it is desirable for the purpose of more efficiently carrying out the main object of the company [10].

The alteration of a company's objects may be confirmed wholly or in part [11]. The company may also make the alteration to restrict or abandon any of its objects [12].

Distinction between object and condition.

Where by a clause in the memorandum a person is appointed agent, secretary or managing director, the appointment cannot be regarded as one of the objects of the company, but it was held to amount to a condition within the meaning of s. 10, which could not be altered either by the company or by the Court [13]. The decision of Schwabe C. J. in the last cited case has however been dissented from in a later case of the Bombay High Court by Beaumont C. J. and Rangnekar J.[1]; see notes to s. 10 (supra) and its new proviso.

In the Bombay case a clause in the memorandum of association provided that "the firm of Morarji Gokuldas & Co. or whatever member or members that firm may for the time being consist of shall be the agents of the company, so long as the said firm shall carry on business in Bombay or until they resign......," it was held that the original members of the firm having died and none of the present members of the firm having been ever partners with either of those two individuals, namely Morarji and Gokuldas, the present members of the firm do not come under the clause. "The argument of the appellant really seeks", observed Beaumont C. J. at p. 429, "to endow this firm with the attributes of a corporation having perpetual succession so far as concerns its relations with the company."

Procedure.

At the hearing of a petition for confirmation, the original memorandum and articles of association as well as the minute book must be made exhibits to the affidavit[2]. As to the sufficiency of advertisement of the special resolution see Atlantic Patent Fuel Co. [1917] W. N. 214, 253.

As to what is a valid special resolution under this section see the case noted below[3].

Unlimited and guarantee companies.

The High Court has jurisdiction to sanction an alteration of the memorandum of association of an unlimited company which has no capital[4], or a guarantee company having no share capital[5]; but if an unlimited company seeks to limit its liability, alters its memorandum and adopts the word "limited" in its name, it must register itself as a limited company before applying for sanction to the alteration[6].

Advertisement.

Unless a valid special resolution has been passed, the Court cannot confirm the proposed alteration of objects[3]. The Court will, except in special cases, require advertisement of orders made under this section[7].

For the mode of alteration of the form of constitution of a company which was in existence before the commencement of Act VI of 1882, see s. 267.

Sub-s. (3) applies to persons such as creditors or members of the company[8]. See s. 10 and notes.

Power of Court when confirming alteration.

13. The Court may make an order confirming the alteration either wholly or in part, and on such terms and conditions as it thinks fit, and may make such order as to costs as it thinks proper.

What the Court will consider.

All that the Court has to decide is whether the alteration is fair and equitable as between members of the company. It is not concerned with the wisdom or desirability of the proposed alteration, which is a question for the directors and members. The Court will refuse to sanction the alteration if the wishes of the majority of shareholders cannot be ascertained[9]. In the matter of alteration the Court is, however, bound to exercise a discretion having regard to the interests of the various persons, shareholders, creditors and others 1.

The Court will not, as a general rule, allow a company to take large additional powers which it has not any reasonable intention of using in the near future, except under very special circumstances 2. The Court may also sanction the alteration with the addition of a clause to the effect that none of the additional objects should be undertaken except as subsidiary objects, unless with the sanction by a special resolution 3.

Exercise of discretion by Court.

14. The Court shall, in exercising its discretion under sections 12 and 13, have regard to the rights and interests of the members of the company or of any class of them, as well as to the rights and interests of the creditors, and may, if it thinks fit, adjourn the proceedings in order that an arrangement may be made to the satisfaction of the Court for the purchase of the interests of dissentient members; and may give such directions and make such orders as it may think expedient for facilitating or carrying into effect any such arrangement:

Provided that no part of the capital of the company may be expended in any such purchase.

Procedure on confirmation of the alteration.

15. (1) A certified copy of the order confirming the alteration, together with a printed copy of the memorandum as altered, shall, within three months from the date of the order, be filed by the company with the registrar, and he shall register the same, and shall certify the registration under his hand, and the certificate shall be conclusive evidence that all the requirements of this Act with respect to the alteration and the confirmation thereof have been complied with, and thenceforth the memorandum so altered shall be the memorandum of the company.

(2) Where the alteration involves a transfer of the registered office from one province to another, a certified copy of the order confirming such change shall be filed by the company with the registrar in each of such provinces, and each of such registrars shall register the same, and shall certify under his hand the registration thereof, and the registrar for the province from which such office is transferred shall send to the registrar for the other province all documents relating to the company registered or filed in his office.

(3) The Court may by order at any time extend the time for the filing of documents with the registrar under this section for such period as the Court thinks proper.

Sub-s. (2) is not in the English Act.

Effect of failure to register within three months.

16. No such alteration shall have any operation until registration thereof has been duly effected in accordance with the provisions of section 15, and if such registration is not effected within three months next after the date of the order of the Court confirming the alteration, or within such further time as may be allowed by the Court in accordance with the provisions of section 15, such alteration and order and all proceedings connected therewith shall, at the expiration of such period of three months or such further time, as the case may be, become absolutely null and void :

Provided that the Court may, on sufficient cause shown, revive the order on application made within a further period of one month.

This section is not in the English Act. But there penalty is provided if the order is not filed with the registrar.

Articles of Association.

Registration of articles.

17. (1) There may, in the case of a company limited by shares, and there shall, in the case of a company limited by guarantee or unlimited, be registered with the memorandum, articles of association signed by the subscribers to the memorandum and prescribing regulations for the company.

(2) Articles of association may adopt all or any of the regulations contained in Table A in the First Schedule, and shall in any event be deemed to contain regulations identical with or to the same effect as regulation 56, regulation 66, regulation 71, regulations 78, 79, 80, 81 and 82, regulation 95, regulation 97, regulation 105, regulatian 107 and regulations 112, 113, 114, 115 and 116 contained in that Table :

Provided that [regulations 78, 79, 80, 81 and 82] shall not be deemed to be included in the articles of any private company except a private company which is the subsidiary company of a public company :

Provided further that regulation 107 shall be deemed to require that a statement of the reasons why of the whole amount of any item of expenditure which may in fairness be distributed over several years, only a portion thereof is charged against the income of the year, shall be shown in the profit and loss account, unless the company in general meeting shall determine otherwise.

(3) In the case of an unlimited company or a company limited by guarantee, the articles, if the company has a share capital, shall state the amount of share capital with which the company proposes to be registered.

(4) In the case of an unlimited company or a company limited by guarantee, if the company has not a share capital, the articles shall state the number of members with which the company proposes to be registered, for the purpose of enabling the registrar to determine the fees payable on registration.

Amendment—effect.

The words in italics in sub-s. (2) have been added by the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936, and in the first proviso thereof for the word and figure "regulation 78" the words and figures within square brackets have been substituted by the Indian Companies (Amendment) Act II of 1938. The effect of the addition is that a company, whether limited by shares, by guarantee or unlimited, will be deemed to contain the following regulations of Table A of the Act, namely :—Regulations 56, 66, 71, 78, 79, 80, 81, 82, 95, 97, 105, 107 and 112 to 116 (both inclusive).

Regulation 56 says how a resolution at a general meeting is to be decided by votes on a show of hands or by poll. This regulation should be read with the provisions of cl. (c), sub-s. (1) of the new section 79 which has replaced the old one.

Regulation 66 provides that the instrument of proxy or power of attorney must be deposited at the registered office of the company not less than 72 hours before the time of the meeting.

Regulation 71 provides that business of the company shall be managed by the directors.

Regulations 78 to 82 make provisions for the rotation of directors.

Regulation 95 says that the company in general meeting may declare dividends, but not exceeding the amount recommended by the directors.

Regulation 97, as amended by the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936, provides that no dividend shall be paid otherwise than out of profits of the year or any other undistributed profits.

Regulation 105 relates to provision for inspection of books and accounts of the company by its members.

Regulation 107 as amended by the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936 relates to what the profit and loss account of the company should show.

Regulations 112 to 116 relate to notice to be given to a member or his legal representative.

The first proviso as amended by Act II of 1938 states that in the case of a private company, which is not the subsidiary company of a public company, the regulations 78 to 82 shall not be deemed to be included in its articles of association.

The second proviso states what regulation 107 shall be deemed to include.

Constructive notice of Act and articles.

A person dealing with a company must be taken to have read the Act as well as the articles of association and will be deemed to have had constructive notice of their contents 1. So, where the articles required that all deeds &c. should be signed by the managing director, the secretary and the working director on behalf of the company, but the services of the managing director not being available as prosecution against him by the company was pending, a deed of mortgage was executed by the secretary and the working director only, it was held that the mortgage could not be enforced as the illegality appeared on the face of the bond, although the loan under the mortgage was applied for the purposes of the company 1.

Articles are subordinate to memo.

The articles are subordinate to the memorandum of association. Any clause in the former at variance with the latter is to that extent inoperative 2. The articles cannot modify the memorandum of association in any of the particulars required by the Act to be stated in the memorandum 3, which is the area beyond which the company cannot go; but inside that area the shareholders may make such regulations for their own government as they think fit 4. If a thing is forbidden by the memorandum, it cannot be done; if not, it is immaterial that the change quite alters the composition of the company 5. Lord Selborne said in Dent's case 6: "It is quite certain that if there be found anything in the articles limiting liability of the shareholders in a way inconsistent with the memorandum—anything tending to reduce the liability of the shareholders thereby prescribed—it is simply void." For further cases see notes to s. 21.

Their respective functions.

The articles cannot also extend the objects defined in the memorandum of association. Lord Justice Bowen thus distinguished the respective functions of the memorandum and the articles of association: "The memorandum contains the fundamental conditions upon which alone the company is allowed to be incorporated. They are conditions introduced for the benefit of the creditors and the outside public, as well as the shareholders. The articles are the internal regulations of the company" 7. They are however to be read together; the articles may then explain or amplify the memorandum 8.

Articles—how far a contract.

The articles establish a contract between the members and the company 9, and although there is no contract in terms between each individual member and every other 10, the articles regulate their rights inter se 11. But this contract is not for the benefit of strangers or even of members in some other capacity, for the articles are not contracts with outsiders 12. A statement in the articles that a particular person shall be the secretary, manager or other officer of the company will not amount to a contract with him 12; but where on the footing of the articles the directors are employed by the company and accept office, the terms of the articles impliedly form a contract between the company and the directors [1]. A provision in the articles in favour of a promoter that the preliminary expenses shall be paid by the company, gives to the promoter no right of action against the company [2]. Articles cannot be considered as a contract between the company and a third person, e.g., a vendor [3]. Where a company by its articles appointed a firm as its managing agents who acted as such pursuant to an agreement the terms of which were scheduled to the articles, but the agreement was not executed, and the company claimed back the moneys drawn out by the firm as their remuneration as well as the preliminary expenses, it was held that the company was not entitled to recover the money, although the firm could not sue for and recover it by any course of law [4].

Duties of persons dealing with a company.

Where a company is regulated by an Act of the legislature or by a deed of settlement or memorandum and articles registered in some public office, persons dealing with the company are bound to read the Act or the registered documents and to see that the proposed dealing is not inconsistent with them [5]; but they are not bound to do more [5]. They need not inquire into the regularity of the proceedings—what Lord Hatherley called the "indoor management." They are entitled to assume that all is being done regularly [5]. Thus where the articles give power to borrow with the sanction of a general meeting, a lender need not inquire whether such sanction has in fact been obtained [5]. If there is a managing director and there is authority in the articles for the directors to delegate their powers to him, a person dealing with him bona fide may assume that he has power to do what he purports to do, provided that it is within the company's objects [6]; so too in the case of a mortgagee taking a mortgage from a company executed by such a person [7].

On the same principle a person dealing with a company is entitled to assume that the de facto directors are directors de jure, whether they are properly appointed or not [8]. But a person who has notice of the irregularity cannot claim the benefit [9], nor does the rule apply where the requisite signatures are forged [10].

A person dealing with a company may also assume that the articles registered have been duly adopted by the company [11]. The company as well as the person dealing with it can equally rely upon the articles [8].

A person dealing with a company must take the articles to be such as appear at the office of the registrar of companies to be in force. If the directors propose to do something in excess of their powers thereunder, he is not entitled to assume that their powers have been extended by a special resolution ; for such a resolution, if passed, would be registered 1.

In this connection the observations of Lord Haldane in Pacific Coast Coal Mines v. Arbuthnot 2 are most instructive : "No doubt where some act, such as the granting of an obligation in the course of its business, is put by the constitution of the company within its power and certain formalities of administration are prescribed by the articles of association which for domestic purposes regulate the duties of the directors to the shareholders, the mere failure to comply with a formality, such as a proper appointment or the presence of a quorum of directors, will not affect a person dealing with the company from outside and without knowledge of the irregularity. He is presumed to know the constitution of the company, but not what may or may not have taken place within doors that are closed to him. Lord Hatherley's judgment in Mahony v. East Holyford Mining Co. [(1875) 7 H. L. 869] is for practitioners in company law the classical exposition of this principle. But the case stands quite otherwise, when the act is one which has not by the constitution of the corporation been put within its power excepting on the fulfilment of a condition. In that event, the persons dealing with the corporation are bound to ascertain whether the condition has been fulfilled."

Where the articles provide for the borrowing powers to be exercised in a particular manner, then in the absence of an express power delegating such powers to the directors, the latter cannot exercise those powers 1. The articles cannot authorize the company to do anything which is expressly or impliedly forbidden by the Act, e.g., to pay dividends out of capital 3, nor can they take away from the company or its members any rights conferred by the Act 4. A clause in the articles of association exempting directors from liability except for fraud will protect them from a claim for negligence 5. But see the new s. 86-C.

Scope of articles.

Where the resolutions of a company and its directors are inconsistent with the provisions of the articles, the company may be restrained from acting upon them 6.

A clause in the articles cannot be used to defeat the rules of Court as to discovery and inspection of documents 7.

Stamp.

As to the stamp on articles of association see Appendix—Stamp Duty. The stamp must be affixed before or at the time of signatures 8.

Application of Table A.

18. In the case of a company limited by shares and registered after the commencement of this Act, if articles are not registered, or, if articles are registered, in so far as the articles do not exclude or modify the regulations in Table A in the First Schedule, those regulations shall, so far as applicable, be the regulations of the company in the same manner and to the same extent as if they were contained in duly registered articles.

Table A is a part of the Act.

Table A is a part of the Act. So, if a company adopts it or some analogous provisions as its regulations, they will not be invalid even if they are apparently at variance with the sections of the Act [1]. They may be looked at showing the views of the legislature with regard to matters mentioned in them [2]. Where Table A is adopted, power should be taken to fix the minimum subscription and to pay underwriting commission, as these powers are not to be found in the new or the old Table A. Where Table A or some of its provisions are sought to be excluded, it should be done in clear language [3].

Application of Table A.

Where the articles of a company are neither registered along with the memorandum of association, nor subsequently passed in a manner provided by the law, they cannot take effect as articles of association so as to replace the general provisions of Table A [4]. But if by a long course of conduct the shareholders have put forward such articles as embodying regulations by which they were prepared to be bound, they were binding on the company [5]. The Court may also act upon a distribution of assets, not in strict accordance with the articles, if there has been a general adoption of the method of distribution [6].

Adoption of articles.

When an article is one which the company has power to adopt, the fact that there has been a defect in the procedure of its adoption will not prevent a person dealing with the company on the faith of the article from insisting that it shall be treated as binding on the company, and the company can equally insist upon such articles where they have been made the basis of a contract with a stranger [7].

Where Table A does not apply.

The regulations of Table A will not apply to a company registered under Part VII of the Act, unless such regulations are adopted by a "special resolution" [8], nor to a company registered before 1st April, 1914. Companies existing at the commencement of the Act which have adopted as their articles either the regulations contained in Table B in the Schedule of Act XIX of 1857 or those contained in Table A of the First Schedule of Act VI of 1882 will still be governed by those regulations [9]. These are printed in the Appendix.

Alteration of articles by special resolution.

20. (1) Subject to the provisions of this Act and to the conditions contained in its memorandum, a company may by special resolution alter or add to its articles; and any alteration or addition so made shall be as valid as if originally contained in the articles, and be subject in like manner to alteration by special resolution.

(2) The power of altering articles under this section shall, in the case of any company formed and registered under Act No. XIX of 1857 and Act No. VII of 1860 or either of them, extend to altering any provisions in Table B annexed to Act XIX of 1857, and shall also, in the case of an unlimited company formed and registered under the said Acts or either of them, extend to altering any regulations relating to the amount of capital or its distribution into shares, notwithstanding that those regulations are contained in the memorandum.

Power of altering articles is statutory.

A company cannot deprive itself of the statutory power to alter its articles of association 3, either by a statement in the articles 4 or by a contract 5 that they shall not be altered 6. A thing which is in the articles, but not in the memorandum of association, may be altered 3. Any new article may be adopted which could have been lawfully included in the original articles 7, provided that the alteration was made bona fide for the benefit of the company as a whole 8. "The power," said Lindley, M. R., "thus conferred on corporations to alter the regulations is limited only by the provisions contained in the company's memorandum of association. It must be exercised for the benefit of the company as a whole and it must not be exceeded. These conditions are always implied and are seldom, if ever, expressed. But if they are complied with, I can discover no ground for judicially putting any other restrictions on the power conferred by the section than those contained in it" 1. In this case the Court of Appeal held that the introduction of a lien clause by altering the articles was valid though in some sense it operated retrospectively.

Where the articles provide for matters which need not, under the previous sections, be contained in the memorandum and which are not either expressly or impliedly dealt with therein, the portions of the articles so dealing with such matters cannot be treated as part of the memorandum, and can be altered by a special resolution 2.

Court's jurisdiction.

The Court has no jurisdiction to rectify the articles of association, even if they do not accord with what is proved to have been the concurrent intention of the signatories at the moment of the signatures 3.

Amendment by special resolution.

If a special resolution is not passed, the articles will not be validly altered 4. A company can pass a special resolution altering the articles conditionally upon the happening of some other event, e. g., confirmation by the Court of reduction of capital previously resolved upon 5. If the directors issue notice to the effect that alterations will be made in respect of certain articles while there are equally important alterations in respect of other articles, it cannot be said that the shareholders have sufficient notice of alteration in respect of the latter. The notice should give sufficiently full and frank disclosures of the facts and effects of the resolutions 6. Any alterations in the articles of association cannot bind the members from whom notice of the meeting, at which the alteration was made, was withheld. For, the articles form a contract between a member and the company, and one party to a contract cannot add terms to the contract without the knowledge and consent of the other party 7. Where a company amends its articles by special resolution without mentioning in the notice under s. 81 (post) that the question of amendment of the articles was to come up for decision in the meeting, the irregularity is fatal to the proceedings and makes the amendment invalid and ultra vires 8.

As to "special resolution," see s. 81 post and notes thereto.

Limitation of alteration.

The articles must be altered in good faith and not so as to give an unfair advantage to a majority of the shareholders 9. This is the only limitation in the power to alter the articles of association 10.

A company has power under this section to introduce, by altering the articles, a provision that shareholders, who carry on business in competition with the company, may be required to transfer their shares to a nominee of the directors at a price certified by the auditors to be their fair value, provided that the alteration is for the benefit of the company as a whole[1]; if otherwise, the new provision is invalid[2].

The section cannot be used to oppress or defraud a minority of the shareholders or so as to violate any statutory provision or principle of law[3]. A majority will not be permitted by the Court to commit fraud on the minority[4]. No majority can, even by altering the articles retrospectively, affect to the prejudice of non-consenting shareholders their rights under a previous contract[5].

Alterations affecting preference shares.

In the case of the issue of preference shares and the like, there is generally outside the articles a contract conferring special rights. If the original articles do not contain the power to issue preference shares, the company may take the power by special resolution[6].

Rights which have their origin in a contract outside the articles, the terms of which contract are found in or referred to in such articles, can be altered by such alteration of the articles, unless it is proved that one of the terms of such contract was that such rights should not be affected[7]. But the passing of a special resolution inconsistent with an existing article will not however be effective, unless the special resolution has been passed at previous meetings altering that article[8].

Alteration in the case of existing company.

A company existing before the commencement of the present Act may adopt the Table A of this Act as its regulations by passing a special resolution to the following effect: "The existing regulations of the company are hereby rescinded and in lieu thereof the regulations contained in Table A of the Indian Companies Act, 1913 shall be the regulations for the management of the company subject to the modifications hereinafter set forth."

Alterations in breach of contract.

A company will not be allowed to alter its articles in breach of contract with an outsider[9]; but it is otherwise if the outsider has taken his contract subject to the risk[10]. As regards contracts between a company and its members respecting their shares, it should not be assumed that the contract involves, as one its terms, an article which is not to be altered[11]. A shareholder must be taken to know that one of the incidents of membership is that the company may, by adopting the proper method bona fide, alter its articles in a way which may prejudicially affect his interest; and provided that the alteration in the articles is not inconsistent with the objects set out in the memorandum of association and is bona fide made in the interest[12] of the company, the shareholders will be bound by such alteration. But a special contract may be made with the company in the terms of or embodying one or more of the articles. In that case, if an alteration of the articles so embodied is inconsistent with the real bargain between the parties, the contractee, even though a shareholder, will not be bound; for a company cannot break its contracts by altering its articles of association [1]. But a company may alter its articles so as to vary a contract with an outsider, if the latter has made the contract subject to the risk of the articles being altered [2]. A company cannot be precluded from altering its articles of association thereby giving itself power to act upon the provisions of the altered articles, but so to act may nevertheless be actionable if it is contrary to a stipulation in a contract validly made before the alteration [3]. "The right to alter the articles being inherent, if it is desired by contract to give an employee or a third person a right of action if there should be an alteration of the articles which causes damages to him, I think it is very desirable to express such a term in clear language" [4].

Other alterations.

Where the articles, as altered, provided that the shares of any member who became bankrupt should be sold to certain persons at a certain price, and a member became bankrupt and his trustee claimed that he was not bound by the altered articles, it was held that the articles, as altered in the proper way, were a contract between the other members and the bankrupt, and his trustee was bound [5].

By sub-s. (1) a company may, subject to the provisions of the Act and to the conditions contained in the memorandum, alter or add to the articles. By the general law this power must be exercised bona fide for the benefit of the company. But it is for the shareholders and not for the Court to say whether an alteration of the articles is for the benefit of the company, provided that it is not of such a character as that no reasonable man can so regard it [6].

Adoption of articles by long acquiescence.

Although a special resolution is the statutory mode of enacting articles of association, the adoption of certain articles by a company may be proved by long course of acquiescence, as pointed out by Lord Davey [7]: "It appears that these articles have been registered (without signature) and have been published and put forward as the company's articles and have been acted on, amended or added to by the shareholders and the company's business has been conducted under the regulations contained therein for 19 years without any objection and the company on the record says that these articles are its articles. Their Lordships think that in these circumstances they are entitled to draw the inference that all the shareholders have accepted and adopted the articles as the valid and operative articles of the company. The articles stand on a very different footing from the memorandum and are in the power of the shareholders themselves." But see Pacific Coast Coal Mines v. Arbuthnot [8].

How alteration affects contracts.

Rights, which have their origin in a contract outside the articles, the terms of which contract are found or referred to in such articles, can be altered by such alteration of the articles, unless it is proved that one of the terms of such contract was that such rights should not be affected by an alteration of the articles [1]. The articles can be altered retrospectively unless such alteration will cause a breach of contract entered into by the company [2].

New articles.

The Act does not contemplate new articles of association, and where it purports to be so, it is nothing more than a record of special resolution and as such does not require to be stamped [3].

Clerical errors and mistakes.

Clerical errors in the articles should be set right by a special resolution and not by an action for rectification [4]. The Court has no jurisdiction to rectify the articles on the ground of mistake, for they have a statutory operation [4].

Effect of alteration in memorandum or articles.

20-A. Notwithstanding anything in the memorandum or articles of a company, no member of the company shall be bound by an alteration made in the memorandum or articles after the date on which he became a member if and so far as the alteration requires him to take or subscribe for more shares than the number held by him at the date on which the alteration is made, or in any way increases his liability as at that date to contribute to the share capital of, or otherwise to pay money to, the company :

Provided that this section shall not apply in any case where the member agrees in writing either before or after the alteration is made to be bound thereby.

This section has been inserted by the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936. It reproduces verbatim s. 22 of the English Act of 1929.

This section provides that without the consent of a member he cannot be asked to subscribe for more shares, and his liability in respect of existing shares cannot be increased by amending the memorandum or articles.

General Provisions.

Effect of memorandum and articles.

21. (1) The memorandum and articles shall, when registered, bind the company and the members thereof to the same extent as if they respectively had been signed by each member and contained a covenant on the part of each member, his heirs, and legal representatives, to observe all the provisions of the memorandum and of the articles, subject to the provisions of this Act.

4. Evans v. Chapman [1902] W. N. 78, 18 T. L. R. 506.

(2) All money payable by any member to the company under the memorandum or articles shall be a debt due from him to the company.

Notice.

The members are deemed to be aware of the contents of the memorandum and the articles of association [1] and to understand their meaning [2]. But in certain circumstances where they are induced to become members by fraud, this rule does not apply [3].

Outsiders dealing with a company must also be taken to have read the Act and the memorandum and articles of association of the company he is dealing with and thus to have had constructive notice of their contents [4]; but they are not bound to make enquiries and may assume that the company's internal management has been regular [5], and that the provisions therein contained have been complied with by the company's officers. Where by the articles the directors were directed forthwith to execute by affixing the seal of the company to the scheduled agreement entered into with a firm, strangers to the company are entitled to assume that, that direction has been carried out and that as a consequence the firm is entitled to act as managing agents with the powers conferred by the scheduled agreement [6].

Memorandum.

The memorandum of association irrevocably binds a subscriber thereof to contribute the proportion of the capital for which he subscribes; but it does not bind him irrevocably as regards matters not required by the Act to be stated therein [7]. A person who subscribes for preference shares may take an equivalent amount of ordinary shares instead [7].

Respective spheres of memo. and articles.

The memorandum of association, as Lord Cairns observes, "is as it were the charter, and defines the limitation of the powers of a company to be established, under the Act. With regard to the articles of association, those articles play a part subsidiary to the memorandum of association. They accept the memorandum of association as the charter of incorporation of the company and so accepting it, the articles proceed to define the duties, the rights and powers of the governing body as between themselves and the company at large, and the mode and form in which the business of the company is to be carried on, and the mode and form in which changes in the internal regulations of the company may, from time to time, be made. With regard therefore to the memorandum of association, if you find anything which goes beyond that memorandum, or is not warranted by it, the question will arise whether that which is done is ultra vires, not only of the directors of the company, but of the company itself. With regard to the articles of association, if you find anything which, still keeping within the memorandum of association, is a violation of the articles of association, or in excess of them, the question will arise whether that is anything more than an act extra vires of the directors, but intra vires the company" [1]. Then again, "of the internal regulations of the company, the members of it are absolute masters, provided they pursue the course marked out in the Act, that is to say, holding a general meeting, and obtaining the consent of the shareholders, they may alter those regulations from time to time; but all must be done in the way of alteration subject to the conditions contained in the memorandum of association...... The memorandum of association is, as it were, the area beyond which the action of the company cannot go; inside that area the shareholders may make such regulations for their own government as they think fit" [2]. But except in respect of such matters as must, by statute, be provided for by the memorandum of association, the latter is not to be regarded as the dominant document, but is to be read in conjunction with the articles. In this particular case, however, their Lordships of the Judicial Committee were unable to read the two documents together and held that as the reserve fund was created by the memorandum for the benefit and security of the preference shareholders and as the provisions of the memorandum with regard to it were neither ambiguous, nor in need of being supplemented, article 119 did not empower the directors to apply the said fund for the purposes therein mentioned [3].

Articles.

The articles constitute a contract not merely between the company and the members, but also between each individual member and every other member [4]. As between the company and its members the contract is in respect of their ordinary rights as members [5]. A contract contained in the articles cannot be enforced by a person who is not a member [6], or even by a member except in so far as it relates to his position as a member [7]. Even if a particular article is wide enough to make it apply to a dispute between the company and a member in his capacity of a director, this section does not give contractual force to the article in reference to such a dispute [8]. "In Hickman v. Kent Sheep Bredeers' Assn. 5 it was said: 'An outsider to whom rights purport to be given by the articles in his capacity as such outsider, whether he is or subsequently becomes a member, cannot sue on those articles treating them as contracts between himself and the company to enforce those rights. Those rights are not part of the general regulations of the company applicable alike to all shareholders and can only exist by virtue of some contract between such person and the company'......No right merely purporting to be given by an article to a person, whether a member, or not, in a capacity other than that of a member, as, for instance, as solicitor, promoter, director, can be enforced against the company" [9]. The rights arising out of such contracts can ordinarily be enforced through the company [10].

Anything in the articles which is inconsistent with the provisions of the Act is void 1. In the last noted case at p. 315 Lord Herschell observed as follows: "The articles constitute a contract between each member and the company and there is no contract in terms between the individual members of the company; but the articles do not any the less, in my opinion, regulate their rights inter se. Such rights can only be enforced by or against a member through the company or through the liquidator representing the company; but I think that no member has, as between himself and another member, any rights beyond that which the contract with the company gives."

Where the articles are not valid for want of registration, the company may be estopped from raising the plea of their invalidity against holders of hundis in due course 2.

Social contract.

The memorandum and the articles embody only the social contract between the shareholders inter se, and possibly between the shareholders and directors and do not constitute any contract between the company and its promoters 3.

Purpose of memo. & articles.

The purpose of the memorandum and articles is to define the position of the shareholder as shareholder, and not to bind him in his capacity as an individual 4. No article can constitute a contract between the company and a third person 5. No right merely purporting to be given by an article to a person, whether member or not, in a capacity other than that of a member, e. g., as solicitor, promoter or director can be enforced against the company 6. A memorandum of association must be construed in its literal meaning 7.

"Debt due."

Sub-s. (2). Under this sub-section the liability of the shareholders in respect of the balance due on their shares is undoubtedly a debt due from them to the company, the debt accruing due from the time when their liability commenced, that is, from the time when they first took up their shares. This liability is not however enforceable against the shareholders until a valid notice has been given to them in accordance with the articles 8. Though under this sub-section any money payable by a member becomes a debt when it is due under the articles or the memorandum, still the money does not become due merely because signatories of the memorandum or articles have undertaken to pay for the shares subscribed by them. There is a distinction between money which is due and money which is presently due and it is only money which is presently due which can be described as a debt 9. When there was no term by which the signatories were to pay the amount on a particular date, nor was any date fixed by the board of directors, but the shares were forfeited, it was held that the amount was not presently due and hence the shares were not liable to forfeiture 9.

In Alexander v. Automatic Telephone Co.[1] some directors sought to compel others to pay on their shares in the same proportion as had been paid by shareholders who were members of the public, it was held that the directors were not legally bound to make the payments, but that the Court of Chancery would compel them to pay upon the ground that they had been acting in contravention of the trust which had been reposed on them as directors of the company.

Registration of memorandum and articles.

22. The memorandum and the articles (if any) shall be filed with the registrar for the province in which the registered office of the company is stated by the memorandum to be situate, and he shall retain and register them.

Date of registration.

The registration of a company takes place when the memorandum and articles are accepted and retained by the registrar[2], and not on the date on which his signature is written[2]. The registrar will decline registration if he consider them to be improperly stamped[3]. If the certificate of registration be not forthcoming it may be proved aliunde[4].

Function of registrar.

The function of the registrar is quasi-judicial[5] and the Court will not interfere with his decision unless it is clearly satisfied that he has come to a wrong decision[6]. If he wrongly refuse registration, a mandamus may issue under s. 45 of the Specific Relief Act to compel registration.

For the fees payable for registration see Table B in the First Schedule.

Effect of registration.

23. (1) On the registration of the memorandum of a company, the registrar shall certify under his hand that the company is incorporated, and in the case of a limited company that the company is limited.

(2) From the date of incorporation mentioned in the certificate of incorporation, the subscribers of the memorandum, together with such other persons as may from time to time become members of the company, shall be a body corporate by the name contained in the memorandum, capable forthwith of exercising all the functions of an incorporated company, and having perpetual succession and a common seal, but with such liability on the part of the members to contribute to the assets of the company in the event of its being wound up as is mentioned in the Act.

In England a company created a corporation under the Companies Acts is not thereby created a corporation with Common Law rights[7].

Company becomes a legal entity.

A company, as soon as it is incorporated, becomes a legal entity distinct from its members [1]. It becomes a legal persona [2] and not a mere aggregate of the shareholders [3]. The distinction should be clearly marked, observed and maintained between an incorporated company's legal entity and its actions, assets, rights and liabilities on the one hand, and the individual shareholders and their actions, assets, rights and liabilities on the other hand [4]. The corporator, even if he holds all the shares, is not a corporation and neither he, nor any creditor of the company, has any property, legal or equitable, in the assets of the corporation [5]; and it follows that two companies so incorporated are not the same persons in the eye of the law even though the shareholders in both the companies are the same persons [6]. "It not infrequently happens in the course of legal proceedings", observed Lord Buckmaster, "that parties who find they have a limited company as debtor with all its paid up capital issued in the form of fully paid up shares and no free capital for working suggest that the company is nothing but an alter ego for the people by whose action it is controlled. But in truth the Companies Acts expressly contemplate that people may substitute the limited liability of a company for the unlimited liability of individuals with the objects that by this means enterprise and adventure may be encouraged. A company therefore which is duly incorporated, cannot be disregarded on the ground that it is a sham although it may be established by evidence that in its operations it does not act on its own behalf as an independent trading unit, but simply for and on behalf of the people by whom it has been called into existence" [7]. In a recent Privy Council case [8] Lord Russell of Killowen who delivered the judgment observed as follows: "In the Court of Appeal Riddell J. A. would, their Lordships think, have allowed the appeal, but for the fact that he thought from the evidence 'that the company was a sham simulacrus or cloak and that its business must be regarded as the business of these three' meaning thereby the three partners. He thought that the true position was that the old company, although a separate legal entity, was acting as the agent of the three partners, and was carrying on as such agent not the business of the old company, but the business of the three partners.........But such a view is directly opposed both to the evidence in the case and to the principles and decision in Salomon v. Salomon [1927] A. C. 22. In that case Lord Halsbury puts his view in the form of a dilemma thus: 'Either the limited company was a legal entity or it was not. If it was, the business belonged to it and not to Salomon. If it was not, there was no person or no thing to be an agent at all; and it is impossible to say at the same time that there is a company and there is not.'" In this case [8] their Lordships have further held that it could not be held for taxation (income tax) purposes that the business was the property of some other person and that the company was carrying on the business as agent for that other person and referred to Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Sansom [1921]

2 K. B. 492. In a public statute the word "person" means primarily a person in law and includes "any company or association or body of individuals incorporated or not" [1].

Suit by or against a company.

An incorporated company must sue and be sued in its corporate name [2]. "It is an elementary principle", observed Lord Davey [3], "of the law relating to joint stock companies that the Court will not interfere with the internal management of companies acting within their powers and in fact has no jurisdiction to do so. Again it is clear law that in order to redress a wrong done to the company or to recover moneys or damages alleged to be due to the company, the action should prima facie be brought by the company itself. These cardinal principles are laid down in the well known cases of Foss v. Harbottle [4] and Mozeley v. Alston [5] and in numerous later cases which it is unnecessary to cite. But an exception is made to the second rule, where the persons against whom the relief is sought themselves hold and control the majority of the shares in the company, and will not permit an action to be brought in the name of the company. In that case the courts allow the shareholders complaining to bring an acton in their own names.........The cases in which the minority can maintain such an action are therefore confined to those in which the acts complained of are of a fraudulent character or beyond the powers of the company. A familiar example is where the majority are endeavouring directly or indirectly to appropriate to themselves money, property, or advantages which belong to the company, or in which the other shareholders are entitled to participate as was alleged in the case of Menier v. Hooper's Telegraph Works [6]. It should be added that no mere informality or irregularity which can be remedied by the majority will entitle the minority to sue if the act when done regularly would be within the powers of the company and the intention of the majority of the shareholders is clear. This may be illustrated by the judgment of Mellish, J. in Mac Dougall v. Gardiner [7]."

Such a company can sue for libel affecting its property or for a libel reflecting on the management of its business or attacking its financial position [8]. In such cases it is not necessary to prove special damage [9]. A trading company may sue in respect of a malicious and unreasonable presentation of a winding up petition against it [10].

A suit for recovery of salary or wages lies against the company and not its secretary or managing director [11]. But a solicitor preparing, on instruction from persons who became directors subsequently, memorandum and articles of association before the formation of the company, cannot sue the company, although it has taken benefit of his work [12]. Even the expenses of registration cannot be recovered [13].

[13] National M. M. Coach Co., Clinton's claim [1908] 2 Ch. 515.

In England a company cannot be sued by the vendor on contract made before its incorporation [1]. The person who made the contract on behalf of the company remains personally liable, even if it is afterwards ratified by the company [2]; for a company cannot by adoption or ratification obtain benefit of an agreement purporting to be made on its behalf before its incorporation [1]. In order to do so, a new contract must be made with it after its incorporation on the terms of the old one [1]. The new contract may however be inferred from the facts of the case [1].

Signing and verification of pleadings.

The pleading should be signed and verified on behalf of the company by the secretary ot by any director or other principal officer who is able to depose to the facts of the case [3]. The Court may at any stage of the suit require the personal appearance of such an officer who may be able to answer material questions relating to the suit [4]. In the case noted below [5] Buckland J. has held that in the case of a company or corporation it must be established by an affidavit, (1) that the person signing the pleading was authorised to do so, and (2) that the person verifying it was fit to do so. But when a specific rule has been laid down in O. 29, R. 1, C.P.C. regarding the signing and verification of pleadings in the case of corporations, the specific rule, it is submitted with great respect, excludes, so far as it goes, the general rule provided in Rules 14 and 15 of O. 6, C. P. C. Under Rule 3 of O. 29, C. P. C. the Court may at any stage of the suit require the personal appearance of the secretary, director or other principal officer of the corporation who may be able to answer material questions relating to the suit, thus providing a sufficient safeguard. Of course a company can always authorize some other person under the last part of O. 6, R. 14 to sign the pleading. If the company does not choose that course it can act under O. 29, R. 1, i. e., it can rely on that Order as in fact constituting the persons named therein as agents to sign without the necessity of an express authority [6]. In a proceeding for or against a company it cannot be represented by the registrar of companies [7].

See notes to s. 2 (2) ante.

In India too it has been held that a company cannot be bound by a contract entered into on its behalf before the company was formed, and that it is not competent to bring a company into existence bound to enter into a contract with a third party, the terms of which have been arranged before the company is formed. It is for the company to consider after its formation whether it will enter into the contract or not [8]. But s. 23 of the Specific Relief Act expressly provides that where the contract is made "for the purpose of the company and such contract is warranted by the terms of the incorporation", specific performance thereof may be obtained by the company, though the contract is made before its incorporation. S. 27 of the same Act provides that when the promoters of a public company have before its incorporation entered into a contract, specific performance thereof may be enforced against the company "provided that the company has ratified and adopted the contract and the contract is warranted by the terms of its incorporation." These two sections however have been held to be inapplicable to contracts to take shares [1].

The Court will not make an order the effect of which is to enforce specifically any contract of personal service [2].

Date of registration.

The date of registration of a company is the date mentioned in the certificate and not that on which the signature of the registrar was written [3]. The effect of this section is that the date mentioned in the certificate is the first day of the company's corporate existence, and it is not open to any one to prove the moment of time on which a corporate act was done that day and then to say that the company was not in existence at that moment. The corporate person is to be treated as having been in existence for the whole of the day on which it was incorporated [3].

Effect of registration.

As soon as a company is registered, it becomes a distinct legal 'person' even if the members thereof consist of seven persons, only one of whom holds all the shares and the rest are mere cestui que trust. "If they are shareholders, they are shareholders for all purposes, and even if the statute was silent as to the recognition of trusts, I should be prepared to hold that if six of them were the cestui que trust of the seventh, whatever might be their rights inter se, the statute would have made them shareholders to all intents and purposes with their respective rights and liabilities and dealing with them in their relation to the company; the only relation which I believe the law would sanction would be that they were corporators of the corporate body" [4]. "Whether they are beneficiaries or bare trustees is a matter with which neither the company nor creditors have anything to do: it concerns only them and the cestui que trust if they have any" [5]. "It may be that a company constituted like that under consideration was not in the contemplation of the legislature at the time when the Act authorizing limited liability was passed, that if what is possible under the enactments as they stand had been foreseen, a minimum sum would have been fixed as the least denomination of share permissible and that it would have been made a condition that each of the seven persons should have a substantial interest in the company. But we have to interpret the law not to make it and it must be remembered that no one need trust a limited company unless he so please and that before he does so he can ascertain, if he so please, what is the capital of the company and how it is held" [5]. See notes to s. 2(2).

Co-operative society.

In the case of a co-operative society registered under the Co-operative Societies Act, 1912 as well as under the Companies Act, it has been held by a Full Bench of the Patna High Court that the effect of incorporating such a company under the Companies Act is to make the society a legal person and if a man trust such a corporation he trusts that legal person and must look to its assets for payments and he can only call upon individual members to contribute in case the Act or charter so provides [6].

A private company can commence business as soon as it is incorporated. As to the right of a public company in this respect see s. 103.

If the original certificate of incorporation is lost or if a copy is required for any other reason, another certificate may be obtained from the registrar 1.

As to the seal, see notes to regulation 76, Table A.

Conclusiveness of certificate of incorporation.

24. (1) A certificate of incorporation given by the registrar in respect of any association shall be conclusive evidence that all the requirements of this Act in respect of registration and of matters precedent and incidental thereto have been complied with, and that the association is a company authorised to be registered and duly registered under this Act.

(2) A declaration by an advocate, attorney or pleader entitled to appear before a High Court who is engaged in the formation of a company, or by a person named in the articles as a director, manager or secretary of the company, of compliance with all or any of the said requirements shall be filed with the registrar, and the registrar may accept such a declaration as sufficient evidence of compliance.

Certificate conclusive.

The certificate of incorporation is conclusive on the following points, viz., (1) that all the requirements of the Act in respect of registration and of matters precedent and incidental thereto have been complied with 2; (2) that the association is a company authorised to be registered under the Act; (3) that it has been duly registered. Even though a company is formed for the mere purpose of being registered, the question cannot be raised whether it was authorised to be registered under the Act 3. The only function of the Court therefore is to construe the memorandum of association as it stands 4.

It was held in 1891 that the certificate of incorporation could not be treated as conclusive of the fact that seven persons signed the memorandum of association and that if a less number signed it, the Court had no jurisdiction to make a winding up order 5. But in a later case from India the Privy Council held that the certificate is conclusive for all purposes, even though the conditions of registration prescribed by the Act were not duly complied with and there were not seven subscribers to the memorandum of association 6. The certificate is conclusive, but it will not make illegal objects legal 7.

Although the conduct of the registrar in knowingly registering the memorandum which had been altered is most censurable, the certificate is conclusive evidence that the company was duly constituted and the requirements of the Act complied with 8.

25. (1) Every company shall send to every member, at his request and within fourteen days thereof on payment of one rupee or such less sum as the company may prescribe, a copy of the memorandum and of the articles (if any).

Copies of memorandum and articles to be given to members.

(2) If a company makes default in complying with the requirements of this section, it shall be liable for each offence to a fine not exceeding ten rupees.

The words in italics have been substituted by the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936 for the words "at his request and." Thus a time limit of 14 days has been fixed for compliance with the member's requisition so that the company may not procrastinate.

25A. (1) Where an alteration is made in the memorandum or articles of a company, every copy of the memorandum or articles issued after the date of the alteration shall be in accordance with the alteration.

Alteration of memorandum or articles to be noted in every copy.

(2) If, where any such alteration has been made, the company at any time after the date of the alteration issues any copies of the memorandum or articles which are not in accordance with the alteration, it shall be liable to a fine not exceeding ten rupees for each copy so issued and every officer of the company who is knowingly and wilfully in default shall be liable to the like penalty.

This section has been inserted by the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936. It reproduces s. 24 of the English Act of 1929 with the additions (by the Select Committee) of the words "or articles" in sub-s. (1) and "knowingly and wilfully" in sub-s. (2).

Wilful default.

"An act or omission to do an act is wilful where the person, of whom we are speaking, knows what he is doing and intends to do what he is doing. But if that act or omission amounts to a breach of his duty and therefore to negligence, is the person guilty of wilful negligence? In my opinion that question must be answered in the negative, unless he knows that he is committing and intends to commit a breach of his duty, or is recklessly careless in the sense of not caring whether his act or omission is or is not a breach of duty" 1.

Associations not for Profit.

26. (1) Where it is proved to the satisfaction of the [Central Government] that an association capable of being formed as a limited company has been or is about to be formed for promoting commerce, art, science, "religion," charity, or any other useful object, and applies or intends to apply its profits (if any) or other income in promoting its objects, and to prohibit the payment of any dividend to its members, the [Central Government] may, by license under the hand of one of its

Secretaries, direct that the association be registered as a company with limited liability, without the addition of the word "Limited" to its name, and the association may be registered accordingly.

(2) A license by the [Central Government] under this section may be granted on such conditions and subject to such regulations as the [Central Government] thinks fit, and those conditions and regulations shall be binding on the association, and shall, if the [Central Government] so directs, be inserted in the memorandum and articles, or in one of those documents.

(3) The association shall on registration enjoy all the privileges of limited companies, and be subject to all their obligations, except those of using the word "Limited" as any part of its name, and of publishing its name, and of sending lists of members to the registrar.

(4) A license under this section may at any time be revoked by the [Central Government,] and upon revocation the registrar shall enter the word "Limited" at the end of the name of the association upon the register, and the association shall cease to enjoy the exemptions and privileges granted by this section :

Provided that, before a license is so revoked, the [Central Government] shall give to the association notice in writing of its intention, and shall afford the association an opportunity of submitting a representation in opposition to the revocation.

Alterations. In sub-s. (1) the word "religion" was inserted by Act XXXIII of 1926. In sub-s. (3) the words in italics have been substituted by Act XXII of 1936 for the words "and of filing list of members and directors and managers with the registrar", for bringing the sub-section into line with sub-s. (3) of s. 18 of the English Companies Act of 1929. Throughout this section the words "Central Government" have been substituted for the words "Local Government" by the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937 which came into operation on 1st April, 1937. But in exercise of the powers conferred by sub-s. (1) of s. 124 of the Government of India Act, 1935, the Central Government has, with effect from 1st April, 1938 entrusted to Provincial Governments its functions under this section (vide Gazette of India dated 26th March, 1938, Part I, p. 440).

Licences. In England licence for formation of such companies are granted by the Board of Trade. The provision and the form usually adopted by the Board of Trade prohibiting payments to members do not prohibit any payment made for value received, or for service rendered by a member, or the granting of a pension to a retiring officer who is a member [1].

"Science." The word "science" is not confined to pure speculative science alone but includes various branches of science, such as mechanical or engineering science [1].

"Charity." The word "charity" is liberally construed and is not confined to such charity as consists of giving relief to the poor [2].

Alteration of memo. In case an association formed under this section desires to alter its memorandum of association, it should submit the proposed alterations to the Government first and if the Government approve them, then apply to the Court under s. 12 [3]. Where however the High Court has by order granted an application for confirmation of alteration without its being first approved by the Government, the High Court has jurisdiction to cancel its wrong order [4].

Income tax. It has been recentlv held by the Allahabad High Court that a chamber of commerce incorporated under this section as an association limited by guarantee, not existing for earning profits and prohibited under the law from declaring any dividends to its members, is not exempted from being assessed to income tax, and that the chamber could not claim exemption quod any money it might have elected to spend on charity [5].

Companies limited by Guarantee.

Provision as to companies limited by guarantee.

27. (1) In the case of a company limited by guarantee and not having a share capital, and registered after the commencement of this Act, every provision in the memorandum or articles or in any resolution of the company purporting to give any person a right to participate in the divisible profits of the company otherwise than as a member shall be void.

(2) For the purpose of the provisions of this Act relating to the memorandum of a company limited by guarantee and of this section, every provision in the memorandum or articles, or in any resolution, of any company limited by guarantee and registered after the commencement of this Act, purporting to divide the undertaking of the company into shares or interests, shall be treated as a provision for a share capital, notwithstanding that the nominal amount or number of the shares or interests is not specified thereby.

As to the contents of the memorandum and articles of association of such company see ss. 7 and 17 and forms B and C in the Third Schedule.

Nothing in this section affects companies registered before 1st April, 1914.

PART III.

SHARE CAPITAL, REGISTRATION OF UNLIMITED COMPANY AS LIMITED, AND UNLIMITED LIABILITY OF DIRECTORS.

Distribution of Share Capital.

Nature of shares.

28. (1) The shares or other interest of any member in a company shall be moveable property, transferable in manner provided by the articles of the company.

(2) Each share in a company having a share capital shall be distinguished by its appropriate number.

Meaning of "share."

"Share" means share in the share capital of the company and includes stock except when a distinction between stock and shares is expressed or implied[1]. A share is not a sum of money but is an interest measured by a sum of money and made up of various rights contained in the contract[2]. Shares are "goods" within the meaning of s. 76 of the Indian Contract Act[3]. See notes to s. 2, cl. (16).

Meaning of "transfer."

"Transfer" means transfer by the acts of a member, while "transmission" means transmission by devolution of law, e. g., by death or bankruptcy[4]. The articles of association of most companies contain some restriction on the right of transfer[5]. There seems to be no limit to the restriction that may be so imposed[6]. Any condition precedent to transfer, such as obtaining consent of the directors[7], or giving the members an opportunity to purchase[8] even at a price much below their real value[9], is valid. The restrictive provisions are, however, strictly construed[10]. "Shares", says Lord Wrenbury, "are prima facie transferable. But there is no law which precludes the shareholders from contracting for value that they shall each submit to any reasonable restriction which they choose to agree to...A restriction which precludes a shareholder altogether from transferring may be invalid, but a restriction which does no more than give a right of pre-emption is valid"[11].

Right of transfer.

A shareholder, whether in a public or a private company, has a property in his shares which he has a right to dispose of subject only to any express restriction in the articles[12]. In such a case the transfer cannot take effect without the sanction of the company[13]. In the absence of such restrictions, the shareholder has, by virtue of this section, the right to transfer his shares to any person, even to a pauper 1, or even if the transfer is made to escape liability of the member 2, provided that the transfer is real and bona fide 1, without retaining by the transferor any interest in the shares 3. Directors are entitled to a reasonable time for considering the transfer, before declining registration 4. See s. 34, sub-ss. (1) and (4).

A member may transfer his shares to a person who is incapable of paying the unpaid call, even if the transfer is made for the express purpose of relieving the former from liability 1. But this right may be restricted by the articles 5. The directors may refuse to register a bona fide transfer to an infant, because the latter cannot accept it 6.

Where the articles give an unfettered discretion to the directors to refuse any transfer if it appear to be against the interest of the company, the burden of proving that the refusal was not bona fide is upon the person who sues the company for non-registration of the transfer 7.

Directors' power to refuse registration.

If the directors bona fide exercise their discretion to refuse the registration of a transfer within the powers conferred on them, the Court will not override their decision or compel them to state their reasons 8. But where there is evidence to show that the directors have exercised the powers capriciously or unfairly, the Court has jutisdiction to interfere under s. 38 8. The rule that the directors are not bound to disclose their reasons, if they have considered the question and have acted bona fide, applies to cases where their power is limited to particular grounds as well as where their power is absolute 9. But if they choose to give their reasons, the Court will then consider whether they are legitimate 10 and whether the reasons given by the directors proceeded on a right principle 11. Objections not personal to the transferee do not constitute valid reasons 11. The directors however have no discretionary powers independently of the powers conferred on them by the articles to refuse registration of a transfer which has been bona fide made 12. Where registration of a transfer is wrongfully refused, the measure of damages is the value of the shares at the time of the refusal 4. "The shares are", observed Sir W. Page-Wood J., "transferable by virtue of the statute, and that the province of the articles is to point the mode in which they shall be transferred, and the limitations (if any) to which a shareholder shall be subjected before he can transfer" 13.

Where the articles provide that the sanction of the board of directors will be required for effecting a transfer, but they would not be bound to assign any reason for withholding the sanction, the transferee's title will not be complete without the sanction [1]. A letter of renunciation by an existing shareholder in favour of his nominee of his right to an allotment of new shares is not however such a transfer [2].

Where the articles provide that transfers are subject to the approval of the directors, they cannot exercise the power, which is a fiduciary one, for the benefit of the company, until the question of each transfer together with the names of the transferors and the transferees is before them and they have an opportunity of considering each case [3] fairly [4]. The Court will interfere where the directors do not exercise their discretion bona fide or they act oppressively, capriciously or corruptly or in some way mala fide [5].

Liability of transferee.

A person who executes a transfer form remains liable unless and until there is on the register a transferee who is legally liable to the company. The company, or the liquidator where the company has gone into liquidation, is not concerned with the persons paying the consideration for the shares [6]. Once a person's name is put on the register of members in respect of certain shares, they remain the shares of the person who took them and the position cannot be altered except by some valid transfer [7].

Implied contract to indemnify.

Upon a sale of shares there is an implied contract on the part of the buyer to indemnify the seller from any future call or other liabilities except the statutory ones [8]. But the seller does not warrant that the company will accept the transferee [12]; for it is the duty of the transferee to get himself registered [9]. It does not however follow that a sale can take place even without registration [10]. If after the transfer the directors acting within their powers refuse to register the transfer, the transferor remains the legal holder of the shares, but becomes a trustee for the transferee and must collect and pay over to the transferee the dividends as they accrue [11]. If the purchaser desires to protect himself, he should buy with "registration guaranteed"; otherwise the vendor can keep the purchase money, even if the transfer is not registered [12]. Where the shares were not registered in the name of the transferor, there is however a failure of consideration [13].

Under a contract for the sale of shares, the measure of damages upon a breach by the buyer is the difference between the contract price and the market price at the date of the breach [14]. "It is undoubted law", observed their Lordships of the Judicial Committee, "that a plaintiff who sues for damages owes the duty of taking all reasonable steps to mitigate the loss consequent upon the breach, and cannot claim as damages any sum which is due to his own neglect. But the loss to be ascertained is the loss at the date of the breach. If at that date the plaintiff could do something or did something which mitigated the damage, the defendant is entitled to the benefit of it" 1.

Transfer—how effected.

The deed of transfer should be signed both by the transferor and the transferee ; for if the transferee does not sign it or otherwise agrees to become a shareholder, the transfer will not be effectual to fasten any liability on the transferee, even if the transfer is registered by the directors 2. In such a case the transfer executed by the transferor alone does not pass legal title 3. But if the transfer has been acted upon or recognized by the transferee, it will be effectual 3. The object of requiring the transferee to execute the transfer is to satisfy the company that he agreed to take the shares 4. A registered transfer is however presumed prima facie to have been accepted by the transferee, even where he has not executed the instrument of transfer 5.

A seller of shares is bound, if the contract fixes no date, to deliver the certificate within a reasonable time 6. A contract for the sale of shares may be made orally 7, and specific performance of such a contract 8 may be obtained, even though the company, pending the litigation, has gone into liquidation 9.

On the purchase of shares the obligation to prepare the instrument of transfer is, as a general rule, on the purchaser 10. The instrument must be in accordance with the articles and be executed in manner prescribed therein ; as for instance, if the articles require (as in reg. 18 of Table A) that the instrument shall be executed both by the transferor and the transferee, the omission of execution by the latter invalidates the transfer 11. But the omission of particulars known to the directors will not invalidate a transfer 12.

Where the transfer is lodged with the company and it goes into liquidation before the transfer is registered, the transfer will be registered nunc pro tunc, i. e., as if it had been registered when the registration ought to have been made 13.

Effect of transfer.

Upon a transfer all the rights and obligations of the member in respect of the shares are transferred from the date of the transfer, but his rights to dividends &c. already declared are not transferred unless expressly so provided, nor are the liabilities in respecr of calls already made ; but the rights to future dividends and liabilities in respect of future calls are transferred 14. If the transfer is preceded by a contract, the purchaser will be entitled to dividends declared after the contract 15. Ordinarily, and in the absence of a contract to the contrary, a purchaser of shares is entitled to all the dividends which may have been declared after the date of the purchase. The general rule however may be modified by special stipulations 1. "There is nothing in law", observed Sen, J. in the last cited case, "to preclude a shareholder from selling the shares only and reserving the dividends to himself. Where shares are sold, no matter whether by private treaty or by public sale, and it is definitely understood that the shares and not the dividends on the shares are the subject of bargain, the purchaser cannot deprive the original owner of his right to the dividend of a period anterior to the sale, even though the dividend may have been declared subsequent to the date of the purchase" 2. But in a recent English case Morton J. has held that in a sale by private bargain (not governed by the Stock Exchange Rules as to sale cum dividend or ex dividend) of shares, between days on which dividends are declared, the purchaser buys the shares with all the rights which they confer in respect of the company's capital and in respect of profits up to the date of sale. Thus a dividend payable on the declaration next following such a sale is not apportionable, and goes entirely to the purchaser 3. In transactions on the stock exchange made near the time of the declaration of dividend, the sale is generally expressed in the contract as ex div. or cum div. usually written x. d. and c. d. A slight delay in according sanction to a transfer will not justify a payment of dividends to a person not yet entered on the register as a member, and such a delay will not make the company liable to an action for damages 4. Until the transferee's name is entered in the register of members, the dividends on the shares are payable to the transferor, for he is deemed to be the holder of the shares until the entry is made 5.

Effect of non-compliance with rules.

Non-compliance with the rules of a company for the complete transfer of shares prevents the shares from legally vesting in the transferee, though belonging to him in equity 6. Such a transfer does not absolve the transferor from his liability as a contributory 6. If the articles require a transfer to be made by a deed under seal, a blank transfer cannot be filled in without a power a attorney 7, nor are the directors at liberty to dispense with the formality 8. But if the formalities have been substantially complied with and the transferee accepted as a shareholder, then after a lapse of time the transfer cannot be impeached 9.

Registration of transfer.

A shareholder cannot insist on registration of a transfer on the eve of liquidation, nor if the rights of creditors have intervened, although a winding up has not commenced 10. Where a company has become insolvent, the directors should refuse registration of transfers although the company has not actually gone into liquidation 11. A company was not bound to send notice to the transferor of its refusal to register the transfer 12. But now see sub-s. (4) of s. 34.

A company is not however justified in refusing to register a transfer on the assumption that it is a breach of trust 1. The proper course for the company is to give notice that unless proceedings are taken within specified time, it will proceed to register the transfer 2. A company cannot refuse to register a transfer to a bankrupt director on the ground that the shares will pass to the turstee in bankruptcy 3.

Although the articles prescribe certain conditions which have to be complied with to entitle a transferee to get his name on the register, those are matters which the company may or may not insist upon 4. Where shares are transferred to a firm in the firm name, the company is not bound to register the transfer, as the firm is not a person 5.

Effect of registration on company's lien.

If the articles give the company a lien on the shares, and the directors allow registration of transfer before the debt is paid, the company loses the security 6. But the directors cannot, by delaying registration, acquire a lien which would defeat the transfer 7. A purchaser of shares subject to a lien is bound by it; but he may require the company to resort first to any shares remaining in the hands of the transferor 8. A purchaser at Court sale is entitled, as of right, to have his name entered on the register of members, but he is subject to the same rules as a private purchaser 9.

Security on shares.

A security may be given on shares by a legal mortgage in which case a transfer to the mortgagee is executed and registered, or by an equitable mortgage by deposit of the share certificate with or without a transfer in full or in blank executed by the mortgagor. But the equitable mortgagee's position is not always safe as the mortgagor may obtain a fresh certificate and frustrate the claim of the mortgagee 10. The position of an equitable mortgagee of shares is not however prejudiced by the mortgagor's bankruptcy, although the shares remain registered in his name and notice of the mortgage has not been given to the company 11. On the other hand, even an out and out transfer is unavailing if the registration was obtained by misrepresentation 12. When a shareholder executes blank transfers to enable another to deal with the shares, he is bound not to do anything to prevent registration of the transfer, and if he does improperly intervene he will be liable in damages 13.

"A mortgagee of shares", observed Lord Hailsham, L. C. in a recent case, "cannot split up the interest of the mortgagor and sell the mortgagor's beneficial interest while retaining for himself the legal title, any more than a mortgagee of a house can sell the fixtures in the house leaving the mortgagor the equitable owner of what is left" 14.

Forged transfer.

A forged transfer does not give the alleged transferee a title to the shares and does not estop the company by registration 1. If a company acts upon a forged transfer, it may be compelled to restore the shares to the true owner paying him also any dividends that may have been declared in the meantime 2. Even the sending of a notice to the alleged transferor to the effect that a transfer in his name has been lodged, does not protect the company in the case of a forged transfer 3. The company will however be entitled to damages from the person who procured registration by the forged transfer 4.

As observed by Kanga, J. "except where a shareholder is estopped from denying the title of some particular transferee, the general rule of English law is that a purchaser of shares acquires no better title than his vendor himself has (Colonial Bank v. Cady 5) and that shares in this respect are like other goods and chattels" 6.

Implied contract to indemnify for forgery.

A contract will however be implied on the part of the person lodging a transfer that he will indemnify the company if the document prove to be a forgery, and the broker, who deposits the forged transfer in good faith, is equally liable to the company for any loss it may suffer thereby 7. If the forgery is discovered before the transferee has acquired rights by estoppel, the company may recover the certificate and remove the transferee's name from the register. If the broker represents that he has authority to act for the supposed transferor, he is liable upon an implied contract that he has authority 8. A person who identifies a transferor is liable, if it turns out that a fraud has been committed 9.

Production of share certificate.

Whether a transfer should or should not be registered without production of the share certificate, is a matter within the discretion of the directors 10. In passing transfers the directors should not act upon undertakings or promises given to the intending purchasers, but should exercise an unfettered discretion 11. If a director refuses to attend a board meeting to pass transfers and so makes it impossible to form a quorum, the Court, on being satisfied that the transfer would be passed if a directors' meeting was held, will order rectification of the register of members by inserting the name of the transferee in the place of that of the transferor 12.

Which objections are valid.

The mere fact that transfers of shares are made to increase the voting power of the transferor or in his interest, is no ground of objection to the transfer, for the directors have no power to refuse a transfer of shares, as it is a right of property, except upon personal objection to the transferee 13. It is no valid objection that the transfer is made to avoid a prospective call 14. A colour-able transfer however will not discharge the transferor from liability 1. But the transfer of a controlling interest in a company is not a mere matter of internal management, as it may involve a complete transformation of the company and consequently may, in a proper case, be restrained 2.

Certification and estoppel.

By certification the secretary does not warrant the transferor's title or the validity of the several documents which together establish his title 3. There is no estoppel where the secretary certifies without authority 4. The board of directors is generally the body which has authority to direct registration of transfers. The secretary has no implied authority from the directors or the company to register transfers 5. If a transfer of shares purporting to be fully paid up is certified, the shares being in fact only partly paid up, the company will be estopped from denying that the shares are fully paid up 6. The receipt, after lodgment of certificate, does not bind the company either to recognize the transferee's title to the shares or to issue the corresponding certificate 7.

In permitting the secretary to certify transfers, the company does not authorize him to do more than give a receipt for the certificate of shares. If the secretary gives a receipt or an acknowledgment for certificates which have not been lodged, the company is not estopped from setting up the true facts 8, nor is the company estopped from denying the alleged transferee's title on the ground of invalidity of the forged transfer 9, as the certification does not guarantee the title of the person lodging the certificate 10. If the secretary certifies a transfer when no certificates of the shares have in fact been lodged, his statement in that behalf is not in law the statement of the company 11.

A transfer wrongly certified confers no liability on the company 12. If the secretary instead of cancelling the deposited certificate parts with the same, the company would be liable for any loss occasioned thereby, but would incur no liability to a third person with whom the transferor might improperly pledge the certificate (see note 7). After registration of the transfer the original certificate should be destroyed, otherwise in case of fraud committed by the transferor, the company may be liable to the transferee if he has suffered any damage thereby; but the company is not liable to a third person 7.

For other cases bearing on the question of validity of transfers and their recognition by the company, see notes to s. 38, post.

Transfer in blank.

Where a transfer in blank has been used for effecting a transfer, the transferor cannot take a technical objection as to the filling in of the consideration to defeat the object for which he gave the transfer 13. But where a debtor delivers to his creditor a blank transfer by way of security, that does not enable the creditor to delegate to another person authority to fill it up for purposes foreign to the original contract 1. If the owner of the certificate leaves it and an executed transfer with his broker who wrongfully pledges it with a bank, the title of the bank which had no notice of the fraud will prevail 2. But a transfer in blank executed by an executor, who had not registered himself as owner of the shares, will not have this effect 3. "Whatever may be the effect of an instrument so executed, one thing is clear that it cannot be regarded as either in law or by custom equivalent to a certificate and transfer executed by the registered owner himself" 3. In the last cited case Lord Watson observed : "Notwithstanding his having parted with the certificate and transfer, the original transferor, who is entered as owner in the certificate and register, continues to be the only shareholder recognized by the company as entitled to vote and draw dividends in respect of the shares, until the transferee or holder for the time being obtains registration in his own name. It would therefore be more accurate to say that such delivery passes not the property of the shares, but a title, legal and equitable, which will enable the holder to vest himself with the shares without risk of his right being defeated by any other person deriving title from the registered owner" 4 Where a person obtains possession by fraud of a share certificate and a transfer in blank executed by the owner, he cannot however pass a good title to a bona fide purchaser for value 5. But if a seller is induced to perform his part of a valid contract of sale and to deliver the goods to the buyer in performance of that contract by fraud or cheating on the part of the buyer, the property in the goods delivered passes to the buyer, and if he sells and delivers the goods to a bona fide purchaser for value without notice, it passes to such a purchaser 6.

Stamp.

Where a transfer has been passed by mistake and the transferee's name has been entered in the register of members, it may be corrected by the company and the register amended 7. The register however should not be altered on the basis of a transfer not duly stamped, and the directors are entitled to go behind what appeared on the face of the document 8. A company is not bound by the consideration stated in the transfer. Registration may properly be refused if the stamp is not adequate to the real consideration 8. But if a transfer is apparently stamped properly and the transferee's name is registered, an objection taken subsequently will not affect the transferor's title 9. For stamp duty on transfer see Appendix—"Stamp duty."

Priority of title.

As between two persons claiming title to shares registered in the name of a third person, priority of title prevails unless the claimant, second in point of time, can show that as between himself and the company, before the company received notice of the claim of the first claimant, the second claimant has acquired the full status of a shareholder, or at any rate that all the formalities have been complied with, and that nothing more than some ministerial acts remains to be done which the company could not refuse to do forthwith 10.

If none of the transfers are registered, the first in point of time has priority [1], and this priority is not lost because some ministerial act has not been done [2]. The onus is on the transferee, later in point of time, to show that he acquired the full status of shareholder earlier [3].

Deed is not necessary.

A transfer of shares need not be made by deed, unless the articles so require it [4]. (A deed means one signed, sealed and delivered) [5]. In such a case, in the absence of conduct estopping the party from disputing that he is a shareholder in respect of the shares transferred, the transfer is not valid without a deed [6]. There is no estoppel where the documents are prima facie complete [7].

Surrender of share.

It is not open to a shareholder to surrender his shares, or to the company to accept the surrender, unless the act of the company can be brought within the rules relating to forfeiture of shares [8]. A surrender of shares, the company releasing the shareholder from further liability in respect of the shares, is equivalent to a purchase of the shares by the company and is therefore illegal and void [9].

Share certificate.

In India share certificates are movable property within s. 108 of the Indian Contract Act [10]. Shares are "goods" also within the meaning of s. 76 of the same Act, and where the denoting numbers of the shares are not ascertained at the time of the contract, but share certificates are handed with transfer executed by the transferor (even in blank) and accepted by the purchaser, the shares become ascertained goods and the sale is complete [11]. "Title to get on the register consists in the possession of a certificate together with a transfer signed by the registered holder" [11]. Provisions in the articles authorizing the holders of scrips to pass shares by delivery are irregular and such a company may be ordered to be wound up [12]. If a shareholder disposes of his shares by invalid transfer, he remains liable in respect of those shares [13].

Position of purchaser at Court sale.

In Manilal v. Gordhan Spinning Co. [14] and Nagabhusanam v. Ramchandra [15] it was held that a purchaser of shares at a Court sale was in the same position as a transferee from a shareholder and therefore his right to have his name registered was subject to the discretion given to the directors to refuse registration of a transfer. But this has been doubted in a later decision [16] of the Madras High Court. Srinivasa Ayyangar and Anantha Krishna Ayyar, JJ. have in this case held that in the absence of anything in the articles forbidding the same, a sale by the Court of shares held by a member has the effect of transferring the shares to the purchaser and that the expression "transfer" is not by itself altogether appropriate to indicate a sale by the Court, and therefore any provision regarding voluntary transfer in the articles will not apply to transfer by a Court sale. They have further held that O. XXI, R. 80, C. P. C. is only permissive and it is not necessary, when a share of a company is sold in Court auction, that the Court should execute a transfer before the purchaser can be entitled to such share. Their Lordships are of opinion that this rule is applicable to cases where, for instance, specific performance of an agreement to sell shares has been decreed. But with great respect to the learned Judges it is submitted that the view taken by them of the articles in that case and of Rules 79 and 80 of Order XXI, C. P. C. do not appear to be correct. It is apprehended that to the case of a purchase at a Court sale of shares belonging to a deceased member, the articles relating to transfer of shares are more appropriate than those relating to transmission of shares. It may also be pointed out that Rule 80 forms part of a group of Rules which come under the heading "Sale of movable property"; so the words "where the execution of a document......is required to transfer such......share" probably mean that where such execution is required by the articles of association of the company.

Situs of share.

The true test of the situs of a share for the purpose of jurisdiction is—"Where could the shares be effectively dealt with" 1, that is where there is a branch office for registration of transfer of shares and not necessarily the head office 1. Following the last cited cases, the Judicial Committee have held that the test which must be applied to determine the local situation of shares is where the shares can be effectively dealt with: where a transfer of the shares must be effected by a change in the register of members, the place where the register is to be kept under the law determines the locality of the shares 2.

For the definition and meaning of "share" see s. 2 (1) (16) and notes thereto.

For other cases see notes to s. 38 and regulations 18 and 20 of Table A.

Shares of companies registered under Act XIX of 1857 and Act VII of 1860 were transferable in the manner then in use or in such other manner as the company might direct.

Certificate of shares or stock.

29. A certificate, under the common seal of the company, specifying any shares or stock held by any member, shall be prima facie evidence of the title of the member to the shares or stock therein specified.

For definition of "share" see s. 2 (1) (16) ante,

Meaning of stock.

"Stock" is the aggregate of fully paid up shares legally consolidated and portions of which aggregate may be transferred or split up into fractions of any amount without regard to the original nominal amount of shares 3. When shares have been fully paid up, they may be turned into stock and notice of this must be given to the registrar 4. The issue of a partly paid up stock is void 5. A forged transfer of stock does not affect the title of the stock-holder 6.

Certificate of shares.

The certificate of shares is the documentary evidence in the possession of the shareholder[1]. It is not a negotiable instrument or warranty of title by the company[2]. But if a bona fide purchaser for value acquire the shares relying on a certificate, the company will be estopped from denying the validity of the certificate[3], even if the transfer be a forged one[3]. The measure of damages is the value of the shares at the time the company first refused to recognize him as a shareholder[3]. But the payment of dividend does not estop the company from denying the payee's title to the shares[4]. If the company authorize the issue of a certificate to a person, it is however estopped from denying his title[5], and if the company is unable to give him the shares, it will be liable in damages[6]. On the other hand, if an officer of the company issues certificates without authority, there will be no estoppel[7]. The company may however be liable in damages for the fraud of its officers committed within the scope of their authority[8].

The certificate is a statement as against the company that the person, whose name appears on it, is the registered holder of the shares[9], and in the case of a bona fide purchaser for value without notice, that the amount certified to be paid has been paid[10]. The company is not however estopped from denying the purchaser's title by the mere fact that it has treated him as a shareholder by sending him a dividend warrant[11]. Where the certificate contained a statement that the shares were fully paid up, the onus lay on the liquidator to show that the party sought to be made liable had notice that they were not so[12]. The company will not be liable on share certificates to which the secretary has forged the directors' names[13].

A foot-note under the share certificate to the effect that before a transfer is registered the certificate must be produced is only a warning. As it is not addressed to outsiders it does not create a contract or estoppel[14]. A director, by being merely present at a meeting at which a certificate is passed, is estopped from denying its accuracy[15].

Seal.

The mere affixing of the seal is sufficient without witnesses, unless the articles of association provide otherwise. Where there is a common seal put to a deed, that is title enough of itself without witness to prove it, and if it be said that it was put to by the hand of a stranger, that shall be proved on the side that says so [1]. Proof of the seal may be given by any one who knows it, and it is not necessary to call a person who saw it affixed [2]. When a deed is found to be sealed, the presumption is that the seal was regularly affixed, and the onus is on the person who alleges the contrary [3]. "It is not necessary," as was observed by Lawrence J., "to prove the seal of a corporation in the same manner as the seal of an individual, by producing the witness who saw the seal affixed; but when an instrument having a seal affixed to it, purporting to be a corporate seal, is produced in evidence, it is necessary to prove that it is the seal of the corporation, if there be any doubt about it; otherwise any instrument with a seal to it might be produced in Court as an instrument sealed by the corporation" [4].

A person having power to manage the affairs of a trading company has implied power to affix the seal [5]. Negligence of a company in leaving the seal in the custody of a dishonest person will not preclude it from pleading that the seal was wrongfully affixed, and a forgery gives no title [6]. Where a secretary to aid his own fraud wrongfully affixed the seal to share certificates apparently in the ordinary course of business, the company came under no liability to honest holders of the certificates [7]. Where the certificate is not sealed by the company's authority, it amounts to a forgery and is not binding upon the company [8]. See Reg. 76 of Table A and notes thereto.

Statements in share certificate.

If it is stated in the certificate that the shares are fully paid, the company or its liquidator is estopped from alleging that they are not fully paid up [9]. But a person, who knew that the shares were not fully paid, cannot take advantage of the statement in the certificate [10]. The fact that the shareholder's partner is a director of the company does not however amount to a constructive notice that the shares are not fully paid [11]. Even a director may be protected by a certificate stating them to be fully paid and signed by himself, if he acted in good faith [11].

Delivery.

Delivery of the share certificate may be conditional and may take effect only upon some event happening, e. g., upon the consideration being paid. In that case until the condition is fulfilled the document is an escrow or scrip and has no effect as a deed [12]. As to escrow generally see Foundling Hospital v. Crane [13].

Where a debtor assigned all his properties to trustees for his creditors, but retained the share certificates and subsequently sold the shares to a purchaser for value, the title of the trustees who had given notice to the company prevailed [14].

The certificate of all shares must be ready for delivery within three months after allotment of shares or registration of transfers, unless the conditions of issue provide otherwise [1]. A shareholder is entitled to get his certificate within a reasonable time [2]. See s. 108 and notes thereto.

Duplicate certificate.

Where a company, having no notice of bankruptcy of a shareholder, issued a duplicate certifiate to his executrix on the representation that the original certificate was lost, while it really was in the possession of the bankrupt's assignee, and then the executor transferred the shares and the transfer was registered by the company, it was held that the purchaser's title was a legal title and prevailed against the assignee [3]. A good equitable charge may be created by the deposit of a share certificate [4].

Definition of "member."

30. (1) The subscribers of the memorandum of a company shall be deemed to have agreed to become members of the company, and on its registration shall be entered as members in its register of members.

(2) Every other person who agrees to become a member of a company, and whose name is entered in its register of members, shall be a member of the company.

Who are members.

The members of a company are those persons who collectively constitute the company. A member is not necessarily a shareholder, for an unlimited company or a company limited by guarantee may exist either with or without a share capital [5]. But in the case of a company limited by shares the terms "member" and "shareholder" are synonymous [6]. The word "member" includes a deceased member so long as his name is on the register of members [7].

Contract of subscriber.

"The contract of the subscriber of a memorandum of association", said Buckley J., "is of a very peculiar kind. Down to the moment when the memorandum and articles are taken to Somerset House to be registered there is no contract at all, because the company does not exist, and any contract by the signatories must be with the corporation. At the moment of registration two things take place by force of the Companies Act, 1862; the company springs into existence, and the subscribers to the memorandum of association become by virtue of s. 23 of that Act (s. 30 of the Indian Act), members of the company. There is no executory contract which is subsequently executed. There is no contract at all until the moment when the corporation and the character of membership in the signatories to the memorandum come simultaneously into existence. I must therefore hold that the subscriber to the memorandum cannot have rescission on the ground that he was induced to become a subscriber by the misrepresentation of an agent of the company" [8]. Again: "The contract effected by the signature of the memorandum and registration of the company is not merely a contract created between the subscriber and the company. It is a contract whose existence is the basis of the creation of the corporation as one of the contracting parties, and every other person who becomes a member becomes such on the footing that that contract exists" [1].

Obligation of subscriber to memo.

Each subscriber to the memorandum of association irrevocably agrees to take from the company the number of shares placed opposite to his signature [2], and he becomes a member ipso facto whether his name is entered in the register or not [3], unless all the shares of the company have been duly allotted to others [4]. This obligation is not satisfied by the allotment at a subsequent period of nominally fully paid shares [5]. The present of fully paid shares by a third party does not satisfy the subscriber's obligation in this respect. The issue of the certificate does not estop the company, so long as the certificate has not passed to a bona fide purchaser for value [6]. When shares are available for allotment, the fact that none has been allotted to the subscriber makes no difference and the liquidator is entitled to hold him to the contract [6]. A subscriber to the memorandum cannot repudiate his subscription on the ground that he was induced to sign by misrepresentation [7]. Unless otherwise agreed, the subscriber is however only bound to pay when calls are made [8]. The first portion of sub-s. (1) lays down a rule of substantive law and the second portion a rule of procedure [9]. The words "shall be deemed to have agreed to become members of the company" mean that the subscribers of the memorandum are to be treated as having become members by the fact of the subscription [10]. The first directors are bound to see if the allotment is made in their names. They cannot avoid their liability to pay for the shares by pleading their own default or negligence in not making the allotment to themselves [11].

Liability of subscriber.

The statutory liability of a subscriber to the memorandum of association commences with the signature, and it is not held in suspense until the memorandum is registered. There is no locus penitentiœ up to the date of ragistration, and the subscriber cannot, acting independently of the others, cancel his signature even on the ground of misrepresentation of the promoter [12]. He is liable, whether his name has been entered in the register of members or not [13]. When a subscriber subsequently applies for and receives allotment of a number of shares, they may be treated as a satisfaction pro tanto of his obligation under the memorandum[1]. In a recent Madras case it has been held that even in the case of a subscriber to the memorandum of association, liability to pay for the shares does not arise, unless and until there is a valid allotment of the shares[2]. But the correctness of this view is doubtful.

Where the memorandum and the articles of association registered are not a true copy of the original signed by a person as subscriber, he is not a member of the company as a subscriber; nor is he a member under cl. (2) of the section as the agreement referred to therein must be one entered into after the company has been registered[3]. When a person signs a duplicate of the memorandum after the registration of the original, he does not thereby become a subscriber. But such signature may be equivalent to a proposal to take shares, and if accepted, he will be regarded as a member and will be liable to calls when entered on the register of members[4]. He may however withdraw before his name is put on the register or an allotment is made to him[5]. Acceptance in such a case may be by allotment of shares or by putting his name on the register of members; it cannot be inferred from the circumstances of the case[6]. The present of fully paid up shares by the promoter does not satisfy the obligation of the subscriber, nor does the issue of share certificate estop the company, so long as the certificate has not passed to a bona fide purchaser for value. The company in such cases can prove non-payment and claim the value of the shares[12]. When there are shares available for allotment, the fact that none has been allotted to the subscriber makes no difference[6].

As the contract is to take the shares from the company, the obligation of a subscriber is not satisfied by taking them from some one else[7]. Lapse of time will not relieve the subscriber[8]. An alteration in the articles made after signature and before registration may discharge the subscriber from liability[9].

A subscriber remains a member of the company until such time as either he validly surrenders the shares or pays for the shares and validly transfers them to somebody else[10].

When shares are deemed to be issued.

Shares subscribed by the signatories to the memorandum of association are deemed to be issued when the company is registered[11]. As regards other shares, when a person is entered on the register of members as a shareholder, the shares are regarded to have been issued to him, although he has not obtained the share certificate[12]. In the case of subscribers to the memorandum of association, neither allotment nor entry on the register is necessary[13]; the only way he can possibly escape liability is by showing that all the shares have been duly allotted to other persons [1]. A subscriber cannot repudiate the shares on the ground of misrepresentation, for at the time of his signature to the memorandum the company was not in existence [2].

Application for shares and allotment.

An application for shares is an offer and like any other offer must not only be accepted, but the acceptance must be communicated to the person making the offer ; hence a mere entry of a shareholder's name in the company's register is insufficient to establish that an allotment of shares has in fact been made [3]. Where an unreasonable delay is made in making allotment and the letter of allotment is posted just before the company went into liquidation, it was held that the applicant for the shares was not a member [4]. When an agent of a company asks a person to take shares and the latter signs an application, the proposal comes from the company and is accepted by the other party ; thus there is a complete contract under ss. 2 (a) and (b), 3 and 10 of the Indian Contract Act. Where an application for shares is subject to a condition precedent, that condition must be fulfilled [5]. But where the application is subject to a condition subsequent, such as that the applicant need not pay for the shares unless dividend is paid, the liability arises, although the condition is never fuifilled. A person who takes shares on the condition that "in the event of the company not making a profit, shares were not to be paid for at all" is a "bogus" shareholder and this is opposed to the whole object of the Companies Act [6]. As to an application for shares by an agent, see the cases noted below [7].

How membership is constituted.

In order to constitute membership, entry in the register of members under the next following section is necessary [8], except in the case of signatories to the memorandum, or where there is a subsisting contract to take shares capable of being specifically enforced [9]. A person who is not entered on the register will be liable if he has agreed to become a member, for the register can be rectified by placing his name on it. On the other hand, a person whose name is wrongfully removed from the register remains a member [10]. If a person who has not agreed to take shares is put on the register, he does not become a member [11]. The entry of a person's name on the register casts the onus on that person to prove that he was not duly a member of the company [12]. Upon winding up of the company he will be put on the list of contributories if he knew that he was entered in the register of members and took no steps to have his name removed [12].

Oral application and withdrawal.

An oral application for shares is as effectual as a written application [1]. Withdrawal may also be made by word of mouth [2]. Withdrawal by post is not effective unless it reaches the company before the notice of allotment is actually posted [3]. An applicant for shares can withdraw at any time before his offer has been accepted [4]. An offer is deemed to be accepted as soon as the allotment letter is posted [5]. If the allotment letter contains any term which was not in the application, there is no contract [6]. If after the application an allotment is not made within a reasonable time, the applicant is not bound to accept the shares [7]. The application may be made to the company's agent [8].

Authority "coupled with interest."

An agent is held out as having authority and he can apply for shares in the principal's name [9]; and if the shares are allotted in the principal's name, he becomes a shareholder [10]. Where a company makes allotment of shares on the written authority of a person, he may be estopped from saying that the authority was limited by private instructions [11]. But an application by a person not having authority does not make the supposed principal a member [12]. An authority coupled with an interest, e.g., given for valuable consideration, is irrevocable, and an underwriting letter containing authority for some person to apply in the name of the underwriter, when duly accepted, cannot be revoked [13].

Contracting without authority.

A person who purports to contract as agent for another, not having authority, does not himself become a member, but is liable to the company in damages for breach of warranty of his authority [14]. There is no contract where an agent applies by mistake in the name of the principal in the wrong company, or where by the fraud of the company [14] or of its agent the applicant is led to believe that he is contracting with a different company [15].

Infant's agreement.

attaining majority [1]. But if the shares are registered in his name, and after attaining majority he acts as shareholder [2], or does not within a reasonable time repudiate the shares, he cannot afterwards do so [3]. Under the Indian Contract Act an infant's contract is however altogether void [4]. But a transfer in favour of a minor is not void [5], although a contract to take share on behalf of a minor cannot be specifically enforced either for or against him [6]. So it appears that a minor may become a shareholder if shares are transferred to him [2]; but the company may refuse to accept him as a shareholder [7]. Even where after the transfer, the minor's name was placed on the register in ignorance of his minority, the official liquidator could refuse to accept him as a shareholder, although after coming of age the minor was willing to confirm the transfer [8]. Where a director procured an allotment to his infant children who were at the time of winding up of the company still minors, he was held liable to make good the loss caused to the company by its inability to enforce calls [9]; for a transferee is liable for the unpaid balance of his shares [10]. It has been held that a minor could be a member under Act VI of 1882 [11]. If he intentionally permits the company to believe him to be a shareholder and in that belief to pay him dividends since he attained majority, he is estopped by his conduct from denying that he is a shareholder [11]. If the minor repudiated his shares on attaining majority, he could not recover any sum he had paid to the company in respect of the shares [12]; but he could not, even while an infant, retain the shares without accepting the burdens, e.g., the liability for calls [13].

Application in a fictitious name.

If a person apply for shares in a fictitious name and shares are allotted in that name, he will be liable as a member [14]. The same result follows where the application is made in the name of a person incapable of accepting the shares [15]. In these cases however there must be an intention of contracting [16]. A person who agrees to place shares does not become a member [17].

A company may become a member of another company, if the former is authorized by its memorandum of association to take shares, or if it takes the shares in payment of a debt by way of compromise[1]. But a company cannot acquire its own shares, even if expressly authorized so to do by its memorandum[2]. A partnership firm is not a "person"[3], and the partners have no right to be registered as members in the firm name[4].

Mortgagee of shares.

A person, who lends money to a company on a mortgage of its shares, may become liable as a member in respect of those shares, if he takes the shares on condition that upon repayment the shares will be transferred to a nominee of the company[5].

Contract to take shares.

In the case of an ordinary member of the public, the contract to take shares is complete when an application has been submitted and allotment on the footing of that application has been made and the notice of the allotment has been communicated to the applicant. In the case of a director the company is under obligation to allot shares. In such cases it often happens that the company is regarded as making an offer to the director to take shares; the director's subsequent application for shares is an acceptance of that offer, and when the application is made, the contract is complete[6]. Where a director has been given shares, or shares have been transferred to him as qualification for his directorship, it makes the transferee a member of the company. And if such person hold out that he is a shareholder, he is estopped from denying his membership where the company goes into liquidation, on the ground that the transfer was a mere colourable transaction[7]. Where a person who consents to become a shareholder on condition that his suggestions will be included in the memorandum and articles of association, and despite the promoters' failure to carry out the suggestions he signs the usual application for shares and becomes a shareholder, it is not open to him subsequently to object to his being a shareholder on the ground of the conditions aforesaid not having been fulfilled. The proper time to raise the objection was at the time of incorporation of the company[8]. A valid executory contract for the allotment of shares is constituted by offer and communicated acceptance before allotment is made. If however, the only facts are that there is application for shares and nothing further is done by the company but allotment, there is no conclusive contract until the allotment is communicated to the applicant[9]. If there was in fact no contract to take shares, the supposed member can at any time (i.e., before the rights of creditors have intervened on winding up) have his name removed from the register, for he was never really a member[10]. The repudiation or avoidance of a contract to take shares on the ground of undue influence, fraud or misrepresentation, must be made by the shareholder within a reasonable time and before the commencement of the winding up proceedings[11]. Mere placing the name on the share register is not sufficient to fasten liability on a person who had no knowledge[12]. A few months before the decision in Oakes v. Turquand 1 it was decided by the House of Lords that where a person was induced to take shares by fraudulent misrepresentation, he was never a member and was entitled to repudiate and treat as null and void all which he was induced to do 2. But this case was distinguished in Oakes v. Turquand 1 on the ground that the former was a case between a shareholder and the company, and it had no application to a case where the question was between a shareholder and the creditor 3.

[12] Alabaster's case (supra).

Although the contract under which a person took shares could not have been enforced against him as he had, with knowledge that his name was on the register, dealt with them as if he had been a member and assented to keep them, he was liable to pay the whole amount of the shares in cash notwithstanding his misapprehension as to the legal effect of the contract he had originally entered into 4. A contract to take shares cannot be vitiated because a collateral agreement happens to be unenforceable in law 5. Motive can never be enquired into in considering the validity or otherwise of a contract 6. But where it is impossible to sever the contract from an illegal contract for the payment of the purchase price, the two documents in fact constituting one contract, the company is not entitled to recover the price of the shares 7.

One partner can accept shares so as to bind the firm 8.

When shares are subscribed by a person on a certain condition, if that condition is not fulfilled, he cannot be regarded as a member but may be a creditor 9.

Inchoate title.

Where a person has neither a complete legal title to the shares, nor as between himself and the company an unconditional right to be registered as a shareholder, his title being inchoate only, it is not sufficient to defeat the preexisting equitable title of another person 10.

Illegal contract.

"No Court", observed Lord Justice Lindley, "ought to enforce an illegal contract or allow itself to be made the instrument of enforcing obligations alleged to arise out of a contract or transaction which is illegal, if the illegality is duly brought to the notice of the Court, and if the person invoking the aid of the Court is himself implicated in the illegality. It matters not whether the defendant has pleaded the illegality or whether he has not. If the evidence adduced by the plaintiff proves the illegality, the Court ought not to assist him" 11.

Making market for shares.

An agreement between two or more persons to purchase shares in a company, in order to induce persons who might thereafter purchase shares in such company to believe, contrary to the facts, that there was a bona fide market for its shares, and that the shares were at a real premium, is an illegal transaction, and may be made the subject of an indictment for conspiracy, and no action can be maintained in respect of such agreement or purchase of shares 11.

Cesser of membership.

Cesser of membership takes place by the sale of the share and entry on the register of members the name of the purchaser, and valid surender or forfeiture of the share. The membership of a mutual benefit fund is not terminated by the mere appropriation of the share capitals of a member towards the amount due by him to the fund in the absence of forfeiture [1]. Where persons holding fully paid up shares in a bank surrendered their shares, after the bank had gone into voluntary liquidation, to another company and in lieu thereof received preference shares in the said company which meanwhile, by an arrangement evidenced by an instrument that had not been registered, had taken over the assets of the bank in liquidation, it was held that those persons had ceased to be members of the bank and that any meeting convened or proceedings taken by them as shareholders or contributories of the bank were invalid and inoperative [2].

Rights of a member.

The rights of a member are—(1) statutory, (2) given by the memorandum and articles of association and (3) given by the general law, especially that relating to contracts and members of corporations. The statutory right cannot be taken away or modified by any provision in the memorandum or the articles [3].

A member has the right of claiming injunction to restrain the company from acting on an ultra vires resolution, even if he has himself been a party to the passing of the resolution and has assented to previous illegal acts done under it [4].

A minority of the members has a right to sue a shareholder for misappropriation of the company's goods, even though the majority approved of his acts [5]. No shareholder has any right to any item of the company's property [6].

As to the position of a person who has been induced to take share by the misrepresentation of the company or its agents, see notes to ss. 93, 97 and 100.

For the right of a bearer of share warrant to be regarded as a member, see ss. 45 and 46.

For cases relating to allotment of shares, see notes to s. 101.

Expulsion of member.

Where a company by resolution expels a member from the membership of the company, and the articles of association do not empower such expulsion so as to deprive the expelled member of his share, the resolution of expulsion has no effect, inasmuch as while the expelled member remained a shareholder, he must also remain a member [7].

Register of members.

31. (1) Every company shall keep in one or more books a register of its members, and enter therein the following particulars :—

(i) the names and addresses, and the occupations, if any, of the members and, in the case of a company having a share capital, a statement of the shares held by each member, distinguishing each share by its number, and of the amount paid or agreed to be considered as paid on the shares of each member;

(ii) the date at which each person was entered in the register as a member;

(iii) the date at which any person ceased to be a member.

(2) If a company makes default in complying with the requirements of this section, it shall be liable to a fine not exceeding fifty rupees for every day during which the default continues; and every officer of the company who knowingly and wilfully authorises or permits the default shall be liable to the like penalty.

The register of members must be kept at the registered office until the company goes into liquidation [1].

How registers are kept.

The Act does not prescribe any particular systsm of keeping the register, but only requires that it shall contain the particulars mentioned in this section [2]. More than one book may be used [3]. If there is a substantial compliance with the requirements of the Act, the register is not invalidated by reason of a slight deviation from its directions or by unimportant omissions or defects in the particulars of information specified in the section [4]. The company must not enter in the register or share certificate a statement of any lien on the shares [5]. It should not put on the register anything except what is required under the Act [6]. An executor is entitled to be put on the register on proof of his title, and the company is not entitled to qualify the entry by showing that he holds the shares in a representative capacity [6]. A partnership should not be entered in the register in the firm name [7]. Two or more persons getting a transfer in their partnership name are not entitled to be entered on the register in their partnership name, for a firm is not a person [7]. But the word used is "member" and not "person." See Weikersheim's case [3].

Where a company has converted any of its shares into stock, the register must show the amount of stock held by each member instead of the amount of shares and the particulars relating thereto (vide s. 52).

Joint holders of shares, where the articles so provide, are entitled to have their names entered in the register in whatever order they choose [8].

The register of members is the creditors' guarantee showing them to whom and to what they have to trust and must consequently be properly kept, so that the names appearing there are all the names of the persons really for the time being liable to the creditors [9].

[9] Ramesh v. Jogini [1920] 47 Cal. 901 at p. 906.

As the Companies Act becomes applicable the moment a company is registered, it is necessary that until the register of members is written up, the allotment book or the list of applications should be made to serve the purpose of the register, and all the necessary particulars should be shown therein 1.

For a suit against a shareholder to enforce liability in respect of his shares, time runs from the date on which his name is entered on the register of members 2.

Prima facie evidence.

The register of members is prima facie evidence of any matter directed or authorized by the Act to be inserted therein 3. S. 33 provides that no notice of any trust express, implied or constructive shall be entered on the register. The register is not couclusive 4.

Rectification of register.

If a person who has agreed to be a member is not put on the register, the Court may rectify the register upon winding up of the company 5. A person whose name has been wrongfully removed from the register remains a member 6, and one who has not agreed to take shares is not a member even if his name is put on the register 7. If he has been induced to take the shares by misrepresentation the register may be amended under s. 38. The applicant in such a case must prove by direct evidence that the statements relied on by him were false 8. He is not entitled to rely on admissions made by the chairman or on the report of an expert employed by the company 9.

If shares are paid in money's worth, the register must show that they are paid up, though no money has actually passed 10. The directors can in certain circumstances, e.g., mutual mistakes, rectify the register without intervention of the Court, if the latter could under such circumstances rectify it 11. Where the directors acknowledge that a shareholder is entitled to rectification of the register, they may consent to this being done without the necessity of an application to the Court 12. For cases relating to rectification of the register see notes to s. 38.

Inspection of register.

The register is open to members gratis and to non-members on payment of the prescribed fee, and they may make extracts 13. The motive of the party however in making the extract is immaterial 14. As regards the right of a person, whether member or not, to obtain copies of the register, see s. 36, sub-s (2).

Branch register.

For provisions relating to the keeping of a branch register in the United Kingdom called the British register, see ss. 41 and 42. As to inspection and rectification of the register of members, see ss. 36 and 38 respectively. For a company's power to close the register for not more than forty-five days in a year see s. 37.

Index of members of company.

31-A. (1) Every company having more than fifty members shall, unless the register of members is in such a form as to constitute in itself an index, keep an index of the names of the members of the company and shall within fourteen days after the date on which any alteration is made in the register of members make any necessary alteration in the index.

(2) The index, which may be in the form of a card index, shall in respect of each member contain a sufficient indication to enable the account of that member in the register to be readily found.

(3) If default is made in complying with this section, the company and every officer of the company who is knowingly and wilfully in default shall be liable to a fine not exceeding fifty rupees.

This section is new. It has been inserted by the Companies (Amendment) Act of 1936. It reproduces s. 96 of the English Act of 1929. See Introduction.

Annual list of members and summary.

32. (1) Every company having a share capital shall within eighteen months from its incorporation and thereafter once at least in every year make a list of all persons who, on the day of the first or only ordinary general meeting in the year, are members of the company, and of all persons who have ceased to be members since the date of the last return or (in the case of the first return) of the incorporation of the company.

(2) The list shall state the names, addresses, and occupations of all the past and present members therein mentioned, and the number of shares held by each of the existing members at the date of the return, specifying shares transferred since the date of the last return or (in the case of the first return) of the incorporation of the company by persons who are still members and persons who have ceased to be members respectively and the dates of registration of the transfers, and shall contain a summary distinguishing between shares issued for cash and shares issued as fully or partly paid up otherwise than in cash, and specifying the following particulars :—

(a) the amount of the share capital of the company, and the number of the shares into which it is divided ;

(b) the number of shares taken from the commencement of the company up to the date of the return ;

(c) the amount called up on each share ;

(d) the total amount of calls received ;

(e) the total amount of calls unpaid;

(f) the total amount of the sums (if any) paid by way of commission in respect of any shares or debentures, or allowed by way of discount in respect of any shares or debentures, since the date of the last return or so much thereof as has not been written off at the date of the return;

(g) the total number of shares forfeited;

(h) the total amount of shares or stock for which share-warrants are outstanding at the date of the return;

(i) the total amount of share-warrants issued and surrendered respectively since the date of the last return;

(k) the number of shares or amount of stock comprised in each share-warrant;

(l) the names and addresses of the persons who at the date of the return are the directors of the company and of the persons (if any) who at the said date are the managers or managing agents of the company, and the changes in the personnel of the directors, managers and managing agents since the last return together with the dates on which they took place; and

(m) the total amount of debt due from the company in respect of all mortgages and charges which are required to be registered with the registrar under this Act.

(3) The above list and summary shall be contained in a separate part of the register of members, and shall be completed within twenty-one days after the day of the first or only ordinary general meeting in the year, and the company shall forthwith file with the registrar a copy signed by a director or by the manager or the secretary of the company, together with a certificate from such director, manager or secretary that the list and summary state the facts as they stood on the day aforesaid.

(4) A private company shall send with the annual return required by sub-section (1) a certificate signed by a director or other officer of the company that the company has not, since the date of the last return or, in the case of a first return, since the date of the incorporation of the company, issued any invitation to the public to subscribe for any shares or debentures of the company, and where the annual return discloses the fact that the number of members of the company exceeds fifty, also a certificate so signed that the excess consists wholly of persons who under sub-clause (b) of clause 13 of sub-section (1) of section 2 are not to be included in reckoning the number of fifty.

(5) If a company makes default in complying with the requirements of this section, it shall be liable to a fine not exceeding fifty rupees for every day during which the default continues, and every officer of the company who knowingly and wilfully authorises or permits the default shall be liable to the like penalty.

Amendment. By the Companies (Amendment) Act XXII of 1936, the words in italics have been inserted in sub-s. (1). In sub-s. (2) cl. (f) for the words "in respect of any debentures", the words "in respect of any shares or debentures" have been substituted, and the last portion (in italics) has been added. In cl. (l) for the words "the managers of the company" the words in italics have been substituted. In sub-s. (3) for the words "seven days" the words "twenty-one days" have been substituted. The original cl. (4) has been re-numbered as cl. (5) and a new cl. (4) imposing a new obligation on private companies has been inserted. The new obligation has, it appears, been suggested by the provision in the Sixth Schedule of the English Act of 1929.

Year. Sub-sec. (1). The word "year" means a year reckoned according to the British calendar [1], i.e., from 1st January to 31st December inclusive.

Cash. Sub-sec. (2). The word "cash" means such a transaction as would, in an action at law for calls, support a plea of payment, as Lord Macnaghten observed in Larocque v. Beauchemin [2]: "If a transaction resulted in this, that there was on the one side a bona fide debt payable in money at once for the purchase of the property, and on the other side a bona fide liability to pay money at once on shares, so that if bank notes had been handed from one side of the table to the other in payment of calls, they might legitimately have been handed back in payment for the property; it appears to me that the Act does not make it necessary that the formality should be gone through of money being handed over and taken back again." For other cases see notes to s. 104.

Discount. Shares cannot be issued at a discount [3], even by way of compromise [4], or in any other indirect way [5]. If an arrangement for the issue of shares is such that in the course of its due working out there is as much as a possibility that in the result the shares will have been issued at a discount, then the issue of the shares as fully paid cannot be justified [6].

Lump sum. To insert a lump sum in the summary or balance-sheet for good-will, trade marks, machinery, furniture and fixtures without giving the separate values for each class is not a compliance with the law [7]. Where the company has converted any of its shares into stock, the list must show the amount of stock held by each member instead of the amount of shares and particulars relating thereto (s. 52).

Sub-sec. (3). It is the bounden duty of a company and its directors and managers to forward to the registrar the summary and the list specified in the section [8], and the obligation does not come to an end on the date on which by default the penalty begins to accrue. Therefore all persons, who at any time during the default in complying with the provisions of this section acted as directors or managers, are liable to be convicted; it is immaterial that some or all of them were not legally qualified to act as directors or managers until after the date when the penalty first accrued [1]. The fact that the managing directors and the secretary had resigned their positions before the prosecution for the non-compliance with the provisions of the section was started, does not free them from their liability [2].

Sub-s (5). It is no defence to a charge under this section that there was no general meeting held, the persons charged having been themselves parties to the default in holding the general meeting [3]. But a continuing daily fine may not be imposed where owing to no meeting having been held it is not possible to remedy the default [4]. If default is made in holding the general meeting and in filing the return, penalties are incurred under this section as well as under s. 76 [5]. The word "default" is a word of general import and includes failure or omission [6]. "Default" implies a wilful continued neglect to do an act required to be done [4]. A statutary offence is committed where the transaction is not malum in se [6].

In order that a conviction under this section, s. 77 (10) and s. 134 (4) of an officer may be sustained, the only thing the prosecution has to prove is that that particular officer knowingly and wilfully authorized or permitted these defaults. The section speaks also of authorisation of those defaults, but it is not necessary to prove that, as the offence is also complete if the officer knew of the defaults and permitted the defaults [7].

As to the penalty for wilfully making a statement which is false in a material particular, see s. 282.

For the form in which the annual list and summary must be made see From E in the Third Schedule.

As to the right of a person to obtain copies of the list and summary see s. 36, sub-s. (2).

Magistrate's power & jurisdiction.

The forwarding to the registrar of the list and summary, which upon the face of them purport to satisfy the requirements of the Act, is not a sufficient compliance with the section, unless such a list and summary are in accordance with the facts, and the Magistrate has jurisdiction to enquire into the truth or falsehood of the statements contained therein [8]. But questions of nicety as to the title to shares and the right to be on the register cannot properly be determined by the Magistrate, and with reference to such questions he ought to accept the company's register as practically conclusive [9]. A charge under this section cannot be sustained, unless there is evidence that the previous return is correct, because otherwise one must arrive at the conclusion that if there is any mistake in one year it cannot be corrected in the next (see the last case).

Trusts not to be entered on register.

33. No notice of any trust, expressed, implied or constructive, shall be entered on the register, or be receivable by the registrar.

Object of the section.

The object of the section is (1) to relieve the company from taking notice of equitable interests in shares and (2) to preclude persons claiming under equitable titles from converting the company into a trustee for them [2].

Company recognizes no trust—equitable rights.

Although a member is merely a trustee to the knowledge of the company, he is liable for calls and other obligations of his membership. The lien of the company will prevail over the title of the cestui que trust [3]. But a company, which in the face of notice that the shareholder is not the beneficial owner of the shares, makes advances or gives credit to the shareholder, is not protected by the section or by the provisions to that effect in the articles of association, and the company cannot in such circumstances assert against the beneficiaries a lien on the shares for the indebtedness of the member [4]. The company is not relieved from the obligation of giving effect to equitable rights of which it actually has notice, and its own lien will not take precedence of charges prior in date of which it has notice at the time of making the advance [5]. But a company is not concerned to enquire whether trustees who are registered as shareholders are acting within their powers in dealing with the shares [6], and can enforce its own rights against the persons in whose names the shares stand [7]. A company lending money on the security of its shares will however be bound by constructive notice [8].

Though a company is not bound to recognize a trust in respect of its shares, yet that would not prevent a Court from recognizing such a trust in a suit in which evidence of that trust is forthcoming and from considering the rights between the parties [9].

Priorty of mortgages.

As a result of this section, where there are several mortgages, the mortgagee first in date has priority, not the person who first gives notice to the company [10]. Lord Esher, M. R. said : "The law has given the company the right to say 'we do not care whether you are a cestui que trust or not ; if you are, we have a right to take no notice of you,' " [11]. See notes to s. 28.

But, as observed by Stirling, L. J., "where the company in which the shares are held sees fit to deal with the shares for its own benefit, then that company is liable to be affected with notice of the interest of a third party" [12].

As between the trustee and the cestui que trust, the latter is the shareholder and is bound to indemnify the trustee against all liabilities attached to the shares[1]. Transfer of shares.

34. (1) An application for the registration of the transfer of shares in a company may be made either by the transferor or the transferee, provided that where such application is made by the transferor no registration shall in the case of partly paid shares be effected unless the company gives notice of the application to the transferee and subject to the provisions of [sub-section (7)] the company shall, unless objection is made by the transferee within two weeks from the date of receipt of the notice, enter in its register of members the name of the transferee in the same manner and subject to the same conditions as if the application for registration was made by the transferee.

(2) For the purposes of sub-section (1) notice to the transferee shall be deemed to have been duly given if despatched by prepaid post to the transferee at the address given in the instrument of transfer and shall be deemed to have been delivered in the ordinary course of post.

(3) It shall not be lawful for the company to register a transfer of shares in or debentures of the company unless the proper instrument of transfer duly stamped and executed by the transferor and the transferee has been delivered to the company along with the scrip :

Proviaed that, where it is proved to the satisfaction of the directors of the company that an instrument of transfer signed by the transferor and transferee has been lost, the company may, if the directors think fit, on an application in writing made by the transferee and bearing the stamp required by an instrument of transfer, register the transfer on such terms as to indemnity as the directors may think fit.

(4) If a company refuses to register the transfer of any shares or debentures, the company shall, within two months from the date on which the instrument of transfer was lodged with the company, send to the transferee and the transferor notice of the refusal.

officer of the company who is knowingly a party to the default shall be liable to a fine not exceeding fifty rupees for every day during which the default continues.

(6) Nothing in sub-section (3) shall prejudice any power of the company to register as shareholder or debenture holder any person to whom the right to any shares in or debentures of the company has been transmitted by operation of law.

(7) Nothing in this section shall prejudice any power of the company under its articles to refuse to register the transfer of any shares.

This section has been substituted by the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936 for the original s. 34 which ran thus :

Registration of transfer at request of transferor.

34. On the application of the transferor of any share or interest in a company, the company shall enter in its register of members the name of the transferee in the same manner and subject to the same conditions as if the application for the entry were made by the transferee.

In sub-s. (1) the expression "sub-section 7" has been substituted for the expression "sub-section (4)" by the Companies (Amendment) Act II of 1938.

Object of section.

The Act did not lay down the procedure for the transfer of shares and this was generally provided for in the articles of a company. Undue restrictions upon transfers and undue delay in registering transfers were not uncommon. This section, while leaving a discretion with the directors to refuse transfers, requires, for a transfer application either by the transferor or the transferee, notice to the transferee in the case of an application by the transferor, the use of the proper instrument of transfer required by the company, and notice by the company to the transferee and the transferor in case of refusal of registration. It also prescribes a penalty for default in complying with the terms of sub-s. (4). See Introduction.

Protection of transferor.

If the transferee does not apply to have the transfer registered, the transferor can, or he can make an application to the Court for rectification of the register of members [1]. This section is intended for the protection of the transferor if the transferee fail to perform his duty of getting the transfer registered [2]. But it is the duty of the transferor to see that all formalities necessary to complete the transfer are performed. If however the directors fail in their duty to see them performed, they cannot after a lapse of time hold the transferor liable [3].

Sub-s. (3). An arricle conferring upon the directors power to transfer shares inspite of the absence of an instrument of transfer is ultra vires of this section [4].

Sub-s. (7). Where the directors in refusing to register a transfer of shares reasonably and bona fide exercise their powers under the relevant articles, the refusal is valid [5].

As to transfer of shares generally, see notes to s. 28 and reg. 18, Table A.

As to the liability of a past member in the winding up, see s. 156.

Transfer by legal representative.

35. A transfer of the share or other interest of a deceased member of a company made by his legal represetative shall, although the legal representative is not himself a member, be as valid as if he had been a member at the time of the execution of the instrument of transfer.

Rights of executors and legal representatives.

A deceased member remains a member so long as his name remains on the register without notice to the company of his death [1]. The executor or adminstrator of a deceased member does not become a member, unless he consents to be treated as such and to be entered on the register of members [2]. The executor however can insist on being entered as a member in his own right, without any reference to his representative capacity [3], unless the articles of association contain some authority to do so [3]. The company must enter the names of the executors on the register in the order desired by the latter [3].

The legal representatives of a deceased or bankrupt member are entitled to receive on behalf of the estate any dividends, bonuses or benefits attaching to the shares and are liable to be put on the list of contributories in their representative capacity [4]; but they are not members unless they have become so by formal registration [5]. Until they do this, they are not entitled to receive notices from the company [6].

The legal representatives of a deceased member can transfer the shares before getting themselves registered as members [7]. Before registration they are liable for calls only in their representative capacity, but after registration they become personally liable [8]. A company cannot reject the executor's claim to the shares relying upon its articles which enable it to refuse transfers [9]. Articles forbidding executors to exercise the rights of a member until they have been registered have been held to refer to the exercise of rights on their own behalf and not on behalf of the testator's estate [10]. As regards the executor's right to transfer the shares of the testator, reg. 22 of Table A gives the directors the same right to decline or suspend registration as they would have had in the case of a transfer by the deceased member before his death. But to exercise this right there must be a valid resolution of the board [11]. See notes to reg. 22, Table A.

On the death of a holder of partly paid shares, the company cannot intervene to prevent distribution of the estate, unless a call has actually been made [12].

Lunatic's shares.

Shares or stock registered in the name of a lunatic can only be transferred, under an order made in lunacy, by the person named in the order [13]. A trustee in bankruptcy may disclaim the bankrupt's interest in unsaleable or or not readily saleable encumbered shares [14].

Notice in case of death of a member.

A notice served at the registered address of a deceased member is valid, if the company has no notice of his death 1. If the company is aware of the death, the notice should be served on the legal representative. It will be valid if the notice comes to the knowledge of the executors 2. Probate is not notice to the company of the contents of the will of the deceased member 3.

Rights of the estate of deceased member to new shares.

If the articles require that upon creation of new shares they should first be offered to the members, the estate of a deceased member must have the benefit 4. The executor, though he has not registered himself as a member, can give notice in case of a reconstruction under s. 213 (now s. 208-C) and has the same right to dissent from a reconstruction scheme 5.

"Personal representative."

The expression "personal representative" means the duly constituted representative according to the law of the country in which the company is registered 6. A transfer executed by one of two executors, not registered as holders of the shares, may be a valid transfer 7 ; but where the names of the executors are placed on the register, they become joint shareholders in their individual capacity, although they may be described as executors in the register, and consequently the shares can only be transferred by means of transfer executed by all of them 7.

See notes to regs. 21 and 22 of Table A and to s. 160.

Inspection of register of members.

36. (1) The register of members, commencing from the date of the registration of the company and the index of members, shall be kept at the registered office of the company, and, except when closed under the provisions of this Act, shall during business hours (subject to such reasonable restrictions, as the company in general meeting may impose, so that not less than two hours in each day be allowed for inspection) be open to the inspection of any member gratis, and to the inspection of any other person on payment of one rupee, or such less sum as the company may prescribe, for each inspection. Any such member or other person may make extracts therefrom.

(2) Any member or other person may require a copy of the register, or of any part thereof, or of the list and summary required by this Act, or any part thereof, on payment of six annas for every hundred words or fractional part thereof required to be copied and the company shall cause any copy so required by any person to be sent to that person within a period of ten days, exclusive of non-working days and days on which the trans-

(3) If any inspection required under this section is refused or if any copy required under this section is not sent within the proper period the company and every officer of the company who is in default shall be liable in respect of each offence to a fine not exceeding twenty rupees and to a further fine not exceeding twenty rupees for every day during which the refusal or default continues and the Court may by an order compel an immediate inspection of the register and index or direct that copies required shall be sent to the persons requiring them.

Amendment. In Sub-s. (1) the words in italics have been inserted by the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936 which has also added the words in italics to sub-s. (2). The new sub-s. (3) has been substituted for the original one. These amendments closely follow the provisions of s. 98 of the English Companies Act of 1929 (printed in the Appendix). For the effect of these alterations see Introduction. The original sub-s. (3) of s. 36 ran thus :

(3) If any inspection or copy required under this section is refused, the company shall be liable for each refusal to a fine not exceeding twenty rupees and to a further fine not exceeding twenty rupees for every day during which the refusal continues, and every officer of the company who knowingly authorises or permits the refusal shall be liable to the like penalty, and the Court may by order compel an immediate inspection of the register.

Inspection of register of members. Where a person, entitled to obtain inspection of the register, applies for inspection during business hours and not at a time prohibited under the next following section, such inspection must be granted [1], and even a temporary refusal, based upon grounds of convenience to the company's business, will render a director liable to the penalty [2]. A member was not entitled to take extracts or make copies himself [3].

Object is immaterial. Object of inspecting the register is immaterial; for even if it be known that the object is antagonistic to the company, it is illegal to refuse inspection or copy [4].

Right to inspect. The right to inspect ceases upon the commencement of winding up [5], and if inspection is required after that, an order of the Court must be obtained under s. 241. Such an order entitles the party to inspect and take copies himself [6]. He need not pay the liquidator a fee for having the copies made [7]. The result of authorities as to the nature and extent of the common law right which any member of a corporation has to inspect the documents of the corporation is that the privilege of inspection is confined to cases where the member has in view some definite right or object of his own and to those documents which would tend to illustrate such right or object [1].

It would be a breach of duty on the part of the directors to allow the register of members to be removed from the registered office of the company, and a solicitor cannot have a lien on it even if the company in general meeting pass such a resolution, because there are other persons, e. g., creditors who have a right to inspect it [2].

Removal from registered office.

Custody.

The liquidator and not the receiver for debenture-holders should have the custody of the register upon a winding up [3].

Power to close register.

37. A company may, on giving seven days' previous notice by advertisement in some newspaper circulating in the district in which the registered office of the company is situate, close the register of members for any time or times not exceeding in the whole forty-five days in each year but not exceeding thirty days at a time.

Amendment.

By the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936 the words "seven days' previous" have been inserted, the words "forty-five" have been substituted for the word "thirty" and the last portion in italics has been added. See Introduction.

Advertisement.

Where a company keeps a British register as well under s. 41, the advertisement must be in some newspaper circulating in the locality wherein the British register is kept [4].

Power of Court to rectify register.

38. (1) If—

(a) the name of any person is fraudulently or without sufficient cause entered in or omitted from the register of members of a company; or

(b) default is made or unnecessary delay takes place in entering on the register the fact of any person having ceased to be a member,

the person aggrieved, or any member of the company, or the company, may apply to the Court for rectification of the register.

(2) The Court may either refuse the application, or may order rectification of the register and payment by the company of any damages sustained by any party aggrieved, and may make such order as to costs as it in its discretion thinks fit.

(3) On any application under this section the Court may decide any question relating to the title of any person who is a party to the application to have his name entered in or omitted from the register, whether the question arises between members or alleged members, or between members or alleged members on the one hand and the company on the other hand; and generally may decide any question necessary or expedient to be decided for rectification of the register:

Provided that the Court may direct an issue to be tried in which any question of law may be raised; and an appeal from the decision on such an issue shall lie in the manner directed by the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, on the grounds mentioned in section 100 of that Code.

"Sufficient cause."

Sub.s. (1) (a). In any case in which the company and its directors literally and bona fide carry out the provisions of the company's articles, it or they cannot be said to be acting without "sufficient cause." It is a misreading of those words in this section to suppose that they confer upon the Court jurisdiction to make a roving enquiry as to whether what has happened is desirable or even reasonable 1.

Where register may be rectified.

The power to rectify the register has been exercised by the Court in the following circumstances: Where there has been misrepresentation in the prospectus; where it is expedient to pass an order which will bind all the shareholders and effectually bar any subsequent application for restoration of a name struck out by the directors; where shares have been improperly issued at a discount; where the application for shares has been made in the name of a person without his authority; where there is no valid allotment of shares; where allotment is not made within a reasonable time; where the allotment is irregular; where transfer of shares has been improperly registered or registration of transfer has been refused; where the company puts in the register matters which are not required by the statute; and in order to set right allotment of shares which have been issued as fully paid up without a proper contract being filed 2.

The Court has ordered rectification of the register, where the allotment was irregular 3, where the company wrongfully refused to register a transfer 4, where the company acted on a forged transfer 5, where the transfer was a colourable transaction 6, where shares have been transferred to avoid liability 7, where a person has been induced to take shares by fraud or misrepresentation 8, and where shares have been improperly surrendered 9. The name of any person improperly entered or omitted must be considered to be entered or omitted without "sufficient cause" 7.

A person gave his bankers a continuing guarantee and deposited with them certificates of shares of a certain company with a memorandum charging the shares as security for payment on demand of all moneys due or to become due to them and upon default by him in paying or further securing on demand any money secured, authorising them without further notice to sell the shares. Upon sale by the bankers of the shares the shareholder brought an action for rectification of the register: the House of Lords held that the shareholder was entitled to have the register rectified by restoring his name thereto, on the ground that there was no effective demand for payment before the attempted sale of the shares, the demand which was made having been superseded by the security and the mortgage subsequently given and executed [1].

Where not.

Alteration of the register will not however be made where the transfer is not registered owing to a decision of the directors bona fide come to and within their powers that the transfer ought not to be registered [2], or if something remains to be done to complete the transfer [3], or if the articles require the directors to exercise their discretion and they have not yet done so [4].

Court's power.

On an application for rectification on the ground of misrepresentation in the prospectus by the omission to disclose certain facts, it is not enough for the applicant to show mere non-disclosure of the facts; he must show that if the facts had been disclosed it would falsify some statement in the prospectus [5]. If the time between discovery of the true state of things and repudiation be too long, the Court will not grant the application for rectification [5]. But mere delay in applying is itself not a ground for refusal to order the register to be rectified [6]. In order to give jurisdiction to the Court, it is not necessary that there should be actual default in the company [7]. The jurisdiction is general and not confined to cases where there has been error, mistake or default on the part of the company [8].

Before and after winding up.

Power is discretionary.

The Court has power to rectify the register after [9], as well as before, a winding up order has been passed [10]. In a proper case it may make the date of registration retrospective [10]. But after the winding up order, it is too late to rescind a contract for taking shares on the ground of fraud, unless the contract is void ab initio [11]. The power is however entirely discretionary, and the Court will not exercise it where the only object of the applicant is to save the expenses of taking letters of administration and of a legal transfer of the shares in the applicant's name. [12]. It is a matter of discretion whether the Court will exercise the summary jurisdiction, and in a complicated or doubtful case the jurisdiction ought not to be exercised; but where the legal title in the applicant is clear, the order ought to be made [13]. Although persons are not entitled to an order ex debito justitiæ, the jurisdiction under this section is unlimited, with a discretion in the Court in the circumstances of each case: "In a simple case where an immediate rectification is essential, it may be desirable to apply under this section; but if the case is complicated, an action should be brought" [14]. Where a holder of shares applies to have his name removed from the register, a mortgagee of the uncalled share capital being vitally interested in the proceedings is entitled to oppose the application 1. In exercising the discretion regard must be had to the justice of the case 2.

The Court is not bound to dismiss an application under this section as premature on the ground that there has been no refusal to register by a properly constituted board of directors, and it may treat the defence set up as such refusal and deal with the application on the merits 3. An application for registration of transfer will be refused unless it is shown that the directors had acted capriciously and not honestly 4.

Directors' discretion.

Where the articles give a discretionary power to the directors to refuse registration of a transfer and it appears that they have bona fide considered the matter, the Court will not compel them to disclose their reasons 5; but when the reasons are disclosed or evidence is produced as to the reasons, the Court can and would consider them 6. Reasons for refusing to register transfers should not be arbitrary, capricious and wanton 7. Where the directors refuse registraiton of transfers without assigning any reason, the Court has jurisdiction, even without reference to the directors or the company, to determine whether the transferee had a right under the articles to have his name registered 8. The powers given by the articles to the directors to refuse registration of a transfer are to be exercised in the interests of the company, and the Court will order rectification where the directors refuse rectification on the mere ground that the transferor has informed them that the transfer was effected by misrepresentation 9.

A power for directors to refuse to register transfers if "in their opinion it is contrary to the interests of the company that the proposed transferee should be a member thereof" only justifies a refusal to register upon grounds personal to the proposed transferee 10. It does not justify refusal to register transfers of shares in small numbers, because the directors do not think it desirable to increase the number of shareholders, or because they think that the transfer is not bona fide but that the tranferee is mere nominee of the transferor and the transfer is made to increase the number of shareholders who will support him in a policy which the directors disapprove 10. Of course the directors are entitled to disapprove of a transferee, because they are apprehensive that his position as a shareholder may enable him to acquire, and to pass on to others, information the divulgence of which might be contrary to the interests of the company. But where the directors make up their minds without considering the personality of the transferee, it cannot be said that there has been a proper exercise of their discretion. In such cases the register would be rectified by registering the name of the transferee 10.

The directors can rectify the register where the Court would under similar circumstances order rectification 11. Where the directors acknowledge that a shareholder is entitled to rectification, they do this without the necessity of an application to the Court 1, for the company is not bound to fight every claim 2. Cancellation of shares by directors, where the shareholder has valid grounds for cancellation, is good and effectual, although the shareholder claimed such cancellation on invalid grounds, not being at the time aware of the existence of valid grounds 3. If an officer of a company, under a mistake, strikes out the name of the member properly registered, this is a nullity and must be disregarded. The Court will order rectification of the register so as to "restore and retain" the name of the shareholder 4.

Rules and formalities.

Where a company refuses to register a transferee on account of his failure to comply with certain prescribed rules and formalities, the latter may apply for rectification. Such rules and formalities are matters which the company may or may not insist upon and it has always the right to accept such evidence as satisfies its mind that the applicant has a right to be registered 5. When the transferee has complied with what is required of him, he is entitled to assume that the company has acted in accordance with its internal regulations so far as the sanctioning of the transfer is concerned (see note 7 of last page). But refusal by an officer who had no authority by the articles to refuse registration is no refusal by the company 6.

Estoppel of company.

Where a company refuses registration of a transfer alleging that it has a lien on the shares, it is estopped if it had once recognized a previous transfer (see note 7 of last page).

Where winding up intervenes.

Where a shareholder having sold his shares applies to the company for registration of the transfer, but before registration the company goes into liquidation, the shareholder is entitled to have the transferee's name entered in his place as contributory, if he shows sufficient cause, or default or unnecessary delay on the part of the company in entering that fact on the register 7.

If the contract under which the shares have been taken is void and not merely voidable, the name against which the shares stand may be removed even after winding up has commenced 8. But where the removal of a member's name was in consequence of an invalid surrender, it was replaced even after a lapse of seven years 9.

Sub-s. (1). The striking out or expunging a member's name from the register is an omission of his name within the meaning of cl. (a) of this sub-section. In such a case rectification of the register of members will be directed 10. In order to succeed in an application for removal of his name from the register, the applicant must show that it was entered there without sufficient cause 11.

Fraud or misrepresentation.

A member can get his name removed from the register on the ground that he was induceed to take the shares by fraud or misrepresentation in the prospectus 12, provided that the application is made within a reasonable time and before winding up has commenced 13, and proper material has been placed before the Court[1]. Where a shareholder does not take action for a long time, e.g., seven years, to have his name expunged from the register of members, his right to do so would be barred[2]. In the case of Scottish Petroleum Co.[3] Lord Justice Baggallay said: "The delay of a fortnight in repudiating the shares makes it to my mind doubtful whether the repudiation in the case of a going concern would have been in time. No doubt where investigation is necessary some time must be allowed as in Central Railway Co. of Venezuela v. Kish[4]. But where, as in the present case, the shareholder is at once fully informed of the circumstances he ought to lose no time in repudiating." If knowing that his name is included in the register of members he stands by, he loses his right to have his name removed. It makes no difference in principle whether he applies for the shares or he is included as a transferee, if he has assented to his name being included amongst the shareholders[5].

Necessary parties.

In an application under this section the company, and not the directors, is the necessary party even if they have exceeded their powers in refusing to register a transfer[6]. The power given to the Court by this section is discretionary, and the Court will not order a transfer to be registered where the alleged transferor is not before the Court, and there is any real doubt as to the validity or bona fides of the transaction[7].

When Court will exercise jurisdicdiction.

The Court will interfere and rectify the register upon a motion under this section, where the error is due to the neglect or default of the company, and generally where the question arises between the company and a member or an alleged member as to whether his name has been properly included or excluded[8]. But where a third party is affected, the Court will not exercise its jurisdiction under this section. The applicant in such a case must bring an action to which the third person may be made a party[9].

Rectification: how effected.

Where the Court orders the register to be rectified by removing a name from it, the name should not be erased; it should be penned through and an abstract of the order signed by the secretary should be added[10]. An order to put the transferee's name on the register is necessarily an order to take the transferor's name off[11]. An order for rectification cannot be made in an action to which the transferor is not a party[11].

Damages.

A company is liable to pay damages to a person for any loss he may have sustained by its neglect or refusal to do its duty in respect of the entries in the register of members[12]. But if the order for rectification is refused, the Court cannot give damages upon a motion under this section, the proper course being for the aggrieved person to bring an action[13].

Where a person is suing for rescission, the Court can on terms, e.g., upon giving the usual undertaking to pay damages and paying into Court the amount of the call with interest, restrain the company from forfeiting the shares pending the hearing of the case 1 ; but this is not necessarily a condition precedent to the granting of an injunction.

In an action for damages against a company on the ground of some alleged breach of duty in removing the plaintiff's name from the register, the person whose name has been substituted need not, and indeed ought not, to be joined as a defendant, the claim being not for rectification of the register 2.

Date of taking effect.

In ordering rectification of the register under this section, whether the company is in liquidation or not, the Court has power in a proper case to fix a particular date at which the registration shall be operative, even to the extent of making it retrospective but subject, if necessary, to conditions protecting the rights of third persons 3.

Estoppel of allottee.

Once the shares have been registered in the name of the allottee and he has done acts only consistent with his being a member, he will be taken to have agreed to take the shares and will be estopped from denying that he has so agreed, for the law recognizes that observance of formalities may be dispensed with and irregular, as distingushed from void, transaction may be confirmed 4. But even where the agreement is void, if the applicant's name is put on the register and he with full knowledge of all the facts does acts that are only consistent with his being a shareholder, he will be bound as such. In such a case the placing of the applicant's name on the register would seem to amount to an offer and the acts done to be an acceptance of the offer. The position of a person who agreed to take shares upon special conditions depends upon determination of the question whether the conditions are conditions precedent or conditions subsequent. In the latter case, or where the conditions precedent have been waived, the applicant becomes a shareholder 4. If the allottee transfers his shares, attends meetings or accepts dividends, he will be bound by his acts and cannot rely upon non-performance of the condition precedent 5.

Section is not exhausive.

The section is not exhaustive and does not negative all alteration of the register except those referred to in the section. Where shares stand in the names of two trustees jointly, they are entitled to have their names in different orders and the register may be altered accordingly 6.

Suit for declaration.

Where in a suit for declaration to the effect that the plaintiffs were not shareholders and directors of a company, it appeared that the plaintiffs substantially asked for all the reliefs to which they were entitled, it was held that as no money had been paid by the plaintiffs, a prayer to the effect that the register of members might be rectified by the removal of the plaintiff's name therefrom, would merely be a prayer for nominal relief and hence the objection to the maintainability of the suit in a declaratory form was without any substance 7.

Proviso. The proviso to the section is not in the English Act. The proviso should not be confined to the last clause, but must be read as a general reservation imposed on all the clauses 1. Having regard to the fact that under the proviso an appeal is allowed from the decision of an issue directed to be tried, it is necessary that there should be a clear direction as to the trial of an issue, so that there may be no obscurity on the point and no room for the argument that there was no issue directed to be tried and consequently no right of appeal 1. Under s. 58 of Act VI of 1882, which corresponds to this section, it was held that there was no reason for confining the last sentence, viz., "and an appeal in the manner directed by the Code of Civil Proeedure shall lie," to the case in which an issue has been directed upon a question of title 2. But in view of the altered language of the present section Amrita v. Shrish 2 is, it is submitted, no longer an authority for the proposition that an appeal lies although no issue has been directed upon a question of title.

Serious questions of title. In proceedings under the section the Court is not bound to decide serious questions of title; but where it elects to decide the question, it may either decide it itself, or send it to somebody else in the form of an issue, but the decision of the issue in either case is the decision of the Court and is appealable 3. The jurisdiction of the civil Court to decide the question falling within the purview of this section is not excluded 4. For further cases see notes to s. 28.

This section in India gives a wide discretion in the matter of costs 5.

An application under this section in which the company is respondent is a proceeding against the company within s. 171 and requires leave of the Court; but with leave the section will apply against the company after winding up 6.

For the question of rectification after winding up see notes to s. 184.

Notice to registrar of rectification of register. 39. In the case of a company required by this Act to file a list of its members with the registrar, the Court, when making an order for rectification of the register, shall, by its order, direct notice of the rectification to be filed with the registrar within a fortnight from the date of the completion of the order.

proving want of notice of allotment is on the person who alleges it 1. It is not conclusive, especially where other papers filed by a plaintiff contradict the register, even though the defendant does not adduce any evidence 2. "If names are put upon the register without any authority, the owners of those names are in no way responsible" 3.

The register of members is not absolutely conclusive as to the number of shares held by a person, but it is necessary, not only from the point of view of law but as a matter of policy, to see that it is as conclusive as it can be made consistently with a proper interpretation of the Companies Act. When a person has been treated as a shareholder and acted as such, he cannot go back and deny his position to protect himself from liability, specially when he has full knowledge of his real position 4. Cases are not unknown however where promoters put the names of persons of position on the register in the expectation that they would accept the shares, without any application on the part of the latter ; and when the company goes into liquidation or its uncalled capital is sold to a third person, the persons whose names are thus put on the register find themselves in a rather difficult position on account of the presumption arising under this section. In such cases the promoter may be ready with the plea that those persons made oral applications for shares. The legislature, it is submitted, ought to have made written application for shares compulsory.

In Portal v. Emmens 5 Lindley, J. said : "The true view of the Act 6 we take to be as follows :—1. If a proper register is kept, that register is prima facie evidence that a person whose name is on it is a shareholder. 2. If in addition it be proved that such a person has become, by subscribing to the prescribed sum or otherwise, entitled to a share in the company, the evidence that he is a shareholder is conclusive. 3. If there be no register, or if the register be so defective as to be inadmissible in evidence, other evidence must be adduced to prove that a person is a shareholer."

In proceedings before a Magistrate for penalties evidence may be given to prove entries in the register to be untrue 7.

Power for company to keep branch register in the United Kingdom.

41. (1) A company having a share capital may, if so authorised by its articles, cause to be kept in the United Kingdom a branch register of members (in this Act called a British register).

(2) The company shall, within one month from the date of the opening of any British register, file with the registrar notice of the situation of the office where such register is kept and, in the event of any change in the situation of such office or of its discontinuance, shall within one month from the date of such change or discontinuance, as the case may be, file notice of such change or discontinuance.

Regulations as to British register.

42. (1) A British register shall be deemed to be part of the company's register of members (in this section called the principal register).

(2) It shall be kept in the same manner in which the principal register is by this Act required to be kept, except that the advertisement before closing the register shall be inserted in some newspaper circulating in the locality wherein the British register is kept.

(3) The company shall transmit to its registered office in India a copy of every entry in its British register as soon as may be after the entry is made; and shall cause to be kept at such office, duly entered up from time to time, a duplicate of its British register, and the duplicate shall, for all the purposes of this Act, be deemed to be part of the principal register.

(4) Subject to the provisions of this section with respect to the duplicate register, the shares registered in a British register shall be distinguished from the shares registered in the principal register, and no transaction with respect to any shares registered in a British register shall, during the continuance of that registration, be registered in any other register.

(5) The company may discontinue to keep any British register, and thereupon all entries in that register shall be transferred to the principal register.

(6) Subject to the provisions of this Act, any company may, by its articles, make such regulations as it may think fit respecting the keeping of a British register.

This new section has been inserted by the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937 which came into operation on 1st April, 1937.

Issue of share-warrants to bearer.

43. (1) A company limited by shares, if so authorised by its articles, may, with respect to any fully paid-up shares, or to stock, issue under its common seal a warrant stating that the bearer of the warrant is entitled to the shares or stock therein specified, and may provide by coupons or otherwise, for the payment of the future dividends on the shares or stock included in the warrant, in this Act termed a share-warrant.

(2) Nothing in this section shall apply to a private company.

Amendment.

By the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936 the original s. 43 has been re-numbered as sub-s. (1), and sub-s. (2) has been added. The reason for the amendment is that the issue of bearer share warrants is not compatible with the position of a private company as defined in the Act. See s. 2 (13) and notes thereto.

In the case noted below it was contended that the power of a company to issue stock warrants to bearer had been impliedly repealed by the English Companies Act of 1929 : held, that the Act kept alive the power to issue both classes of warrants to bearer [1].

Effect of share-warrant.

44. A share-warrant shall entitle the bearer thereof to the shares or stock therein specified, and the shares or stock may be transferred by delivery of the warrant.

Share-warrants to bearer are negotiable by mercantile usage and are transferable by delivery. So, even if it has been previously stolen, a subsequent innocent purchaser for value gets a good title [2].

Registration of name of bearer of share-warrant.

45. The bearer of a share-warrant shall, subject to the articles of the company, be entitled, on surrendering it for cancellation, to have his name entered as a member in the register of members ; and the company shall be responsible for any loss incurred by any person by reason of the company entering in its register the name of a bearer of a share-warrant in respect of the shares or stock therein specified without the warrant being surrendered and cancelled.

Position of bearer of share-warrant.

46. The bearer of a share-warrant may, if the articles of the company so provide, be deemed to be a member of the company within the meaning of this Act, either to the full extent or for any purpose defined in the articles, except that he shall not be qualified in respect of the shares or stock specified in the warrant for being a director or manager of the company, in cases where such a qualification is required by the articles.

Entries in register when share-warrant issued.

47. (1) On the issue of a share-warrant, the company shall strike out of its register of members the name of the member then entered therein as holding the shares or stock specified in the warrant as if he had ceased to be a member, and shall enter in the register the following particulars, namely :—

(i) the fact of the issue of the warrant ;

(ii) a statement of the shares or stock included in the warrant, distinguishing each share by its number ; and

(iii) the date of the issue of the warrant.

(2) If a company makes default in complying with the requirements of this section it shall be liable to a fine not exceeding fifty rupees for every day during which the default continues, and every officer of the company who knowingly and wilfully continues or permits the default shall be liable to the like penalty.

Surrender of share-warrant.

48. Until the warrant is surrendered, the above particulars shall be deemed to be the particulars required by this Act to be entered in the register of members ; and, on the surrender, the date of the surrender shall be entered as if it were the date at which a person ceased to be a member.

Power of company to arrange for different amounts being paid on shares.

49. A company, if so authorised by its articles, may do any one or more of the following things, namely :—

(1) make arrangements on the issue of shares for a difference between the shareholders in the amounts and times of payment of calls on their shares ;

(2) accept from any member who assents thereto the whole or a part of the amount remaining unpaid on any shares held by him although no part of that amount has been called up ;

(3) pay dividend in proportion to the amount paid up on each share where a larger amount is paid up on some shares than on others.

Cl. (3). In the absence of such a clause in the articles of association, members are entitled to dividend in proportion to the nominal value of their shares, and not in proportion to the amount paid thereon 1. Payment of dividend in proportion to the amount paid up on each share was for the first time authorized in Table A of the Act of 1913 2.

Power of company limited by shares to alter its share capital.

50. (1) A company limited by shares, if so authorised by its articles, may alter the conditions of its memorandum as follows (that is to say), it may—

(a) increase its share capital by the issue of new shares of such amount as it thinks expedient ;

2. Vide reg. 98 of the present Act and notes thereto ; cf. reg. 72, Table A of the Act of 1882 printed as Appendix B.

(b) consolidate and divide all or any of its share capital into shares of larger amount than its existing shares ;

(c) convert all or any of its paid-up shares into stock and re-convert that stock into paid-up shares of any denomination ;

(d) sub-divide its shares, or any of them, into shares of smaller amount than is fixed by the memorandum, so however, that in the sub-division the proportion between the amount paid and the amount, if any, unpaid on each reduced share shall be the same as it was in the case of the share from which the reduced share is derived ;

(e) cancel shares which, at the date of the passing of the resolution in that behalf, have not been taken or agreed to be taken by any person, and diminish the amount of its share capital by the amount of the shares so cancelled.

(2) The powers conferred by this section * * * must be exercised by the company in general meeting.

(3) A cancellation of shares in pursuance of this section shall not be deemed to be a reduction of share capital within the meaning of this Act.

(4) The Company shall file with the registrar notice of the exercise of any power referred to in clause (d) or clause (e) of sub-section (1) within fifteen days from the exercise thereof.

Amendment. In sub-s. 2 the words "with respect to sub-division of shares" after the word "section" have been omitted and for the words "by special resolution" at the end, the words "by the company in general meeting" have been substituted by the Companies (Amendment) Act of 1936. By the same Act sub-sections (3) and (4) of the original section have been omitted, subs-s. (5) has been re-numbered as sub-s (3) and the new sub-s. (4) has been added.

The original sub-sections (3) and (4) were as follows :

(3) Where any alteration has been made under this section in the memorandum of a company, every copy of the memorandum issued after the date of the alteration shall be in accordance with the alteration.

(4) If a company makes default in complying with the requirements of sub-section (3), it shall be liable to a fine not exceeding ten rupees for each copy in respect of which default is made ; and every officer of the company who knowingly and wilfully authorises or permits the default shall be liable to the like penalty.

The reason for the omission of these two sub-sections appears to be that the provisions thereof have been already incorporated in the new s. 25-A. No provision has however been made in this section for any penalty for default in complying with the new sub-s. (4). The alterations have been made for bringing the section into line with s. 50 of the English Companies Act of 1929.

The power is fiduciary.

The power to increase capital by the issue of new shares is a fiduciary power to be exercised by the directors bona fide for the general advantages of the company and they are not entitled to use their powers merely for the purpose of maintaining their control over the affairs of the company and for defeating the wishes of the existing majority of shareholders[1].

Sub-s. (1). The company can, "if so authorised by its articles", do the things authorized in the manner authorized. But if not so authorized by the articles, the company may take the necessary powers[2] by altering the articles in the mode provided by s. 20.

Suit by share-holder.

A suit by a shareholder for a declaration that the allotment of new shares to certain persons is not legal and that they have no powers as shareholders on the ground that the resolution authorizing the increase of capital by issuing new shares was invalid and ineffective, does not lie. Where no consequential relief, such as a prayer for rectification of the register of members by removing the names of new shareholders or for an injunction, is sought, the suit comes within the mischief of s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act and is consequently bad[3].

How and when can directors exercise power.

Cl. (a). Where the articles provide merely that "the company may increase its capital" without saying how, and contain the general clauses (as in Table A) enabling the directors to act generally on behalf of the company, the directors can exercise the power of increase[4]. But where the articles do not contain the requisite authority to increase, they should be amended by "special resolution", and the alteration of the articles as well as that of the capital may be effected by one resolution[4]. If the company passes a special resolution authorizing the creation and issue of new shares, that will in effect not only give authority to increase, but enable the directors to exercise that authority[5].

Where a company has power in its articles to increase its capital without a "special" or "extraordinary" resolution, it is unnecessary to do more than pass an ordinary resolution; or the company may confer on its directors the power to make the increase[6]. But it is otherwise if other articles require the sanction of the company in general meeting[7]. In that case a single shareholder holding all the shares of a class may constitute the meeting[8]. The intention to make the specific increase of capital must be embodied in the resolution[9].

Where the articles provide that the existing shareholders should have the option of taking the shares in the increased capital rateably and in proportion to their respective shares, a deviation from the provision cannot be made unless with the assent of all the shareholders[1]. On the increase of capital the new shares shall be offered to the members in proportion to their existing shares[2].

Fees and stamp.

In England stamp duty is to be paid on the amount by which the nominal capital is increased[3] : registered capital means authorized capital. As to the fees for registration of increase of capital see Table B, item No. 3.

The authority to increase is to be contrasted with the authority to reduce which authority can only be exercised by special resolution[4].

Consolidation of shares.

Cl. (b). If the alteration does not involve consolidation or division and does not involve an alteration of the memorandum of association, separate meetings of the classes are not required[5]. Where this is the case, the rights are frequently altered by an arrangement under s. 153[6]. If it does not involve any alteration of the memorandum, it may be done by special resolution without the anction of the Court[7].

Conversion of shares into stock and re-conversion.

Cl. (c). When shares have been fully paid up, but not before[8], they may be turned into stock of which notice must be given to the registrar under the next following section. The issue of partly paid up stock would be a nullity[8]. For distinction between share and stock see notes to s. 51.

Sub-division of shares.

Cl. (d). If no power is given either in the memorandum or the articles of association to sub-divide the share capital or to create any preference between different classes of shares, the company can take the power by altering the articles[9]. If the articles did not contain the requisite authority to sub-divide, they could be amended by special resolution and then the power had to be exercised by a subsequent special resolution. The two successive resolutions might be passed in three meetings[10].

When a reduction of capital has created shares not consisting of an integral amount, such shares may be consolidated and then sub-divided into shares of integral amount[11]. The section permits a consolidation of shares followed by a sub-division resulting from such consolidation to be carried by a single resolution[12].

Court's sanction when necessary.

In spite of the provisions of this section, a scheme of reduction of capital may be sanctioned by the Court under s. 55[13]. A company registered under the previous Acts may, with the confirmation of the Court, alter its objects or substitute a memorandum and articles for its deed of settlement without registering it under this Act[14].

All the powers mentioned in this section may be exercised contingently on the confirmation by the Court of a resolution for reduction of capital[15], and a single resolution for consolidation and sub-division of shares resulting from such consolidation may be valid 1.

Notice to registrar of consolidation of share capital conversion of shares into stock, etc.

51. (1) Where a company having a share capital has consolidated and divided its share capital into shares of larger amount than its existing shares or converted any of its shares into stock, or re-converted stock into shares, it shall within fifteen days of the consolidation and division, conversion or re-conversion, file notice with the registrar of the same, specifying the share consolidated and divided, or converted, or the stock re-converted.

(2) If a company makes default in complying with the requirements of this section, it shall be liable to a fine not exceeding fifty rupees for every day during which the default continues, and every officer of the company who knowingly and wilfully authorises or permits the default shall be liable to the like penalty.

Distinction between "share" and "stock."

For the meaning of the word "stock" see notes to s. 29. The distinction between "share" and "stock" was explained by Lord Cairns in Morrice v. Aylmar 2 where it was pointed out that when converted into stock the shares might be assigned in fragments; but the stock should still be the qualification of directors and that meetings should be of persons entitled to this stock who meet and vote as shareholders in the proportion of shares which would entitle them to vote before the consolidation into stock.

One of the conveniences of stock, besides its divisibility, is that it becomes no longer necessary in a transfer to specify all the numbers of various shares comprised in the transfer : a transfer is made of so much stock.

A bequest of shares would include stock ; but a direction in a will to invest in preference stock does not justify investment in preference shares 3. If stock is issued as partly paid up, the issue is void 3. But the irregularity committed by a company in issuing fully paid stock without first issuing shares is a mere irregularity which will not in equity be held to avoid the transaction, but can be ignored 4.

Sub-s. (2) is not in the English Act.

Effect of conversion of shares into stock.

52. Where a company having a share capital has converted any of its shares into stock, and filed notice of the conversion with the registrar, all the provisions of this Act which are applicable to shares only shall cease as to so much of the share capital as is converted into stock ; and the register of members of the company, and the list of members to be filed with the registrar, shall show the amount of stock held by each member instead of the amount of shares and the particulars relating to shares hereinbefore required by this Act.

Notice of increase of share capital or of members.

(2) The notice to be given as aforesaid shall include particulars of the classes of shares affected and the conditions (if any) subject to which the new shares are to be issued.

(3) If a company makes a default in complying with the requirements of this section, it shall be liable to a fine not exceeding fifty rupees for every day during which the default continues, and every officer of the company who knowingly and wilfully authorises or permits the default shall be liable to the like penalty.

Amendment.

By the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936, the words "or in the case of a special resolution the confirmation" after the word "passing" in sub-s. (1) have been omitted, the original sub-s. (2) has been re-numbered as sub-s. (3) and the new sub-s. (2) has been inserted.

54. (1) A company limited by shares may, by special resolution confirmed by an order of the Court, modify the conditions contained in its memorandum so as to reorganize its share capital, whether by the consolidation of shares of different classes or by the division of its shares into shares of different classes :

Reorganization of share capital.

Provided that no preference or special privilege attached to or belonging to any class of shares shall be interfered with except by resolution passed by a majority in number of shareholders of that class holding three-fourths of the share capital of that class * * * and every resolution so passed shall bind all shareholders of the class.

(2) Where an order is made under this section, a certified copy thereof shall be filed with the registrar within twenty-one days after the making of the order, or within such further time as the Court may allow, and the resolution shall not take effect until such a copy has been so filed.

Amendment.

By the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936, the words "and confirmed at a meeting of shareholders of that class in the same manner as a special resolution of the company is required to be confirmed" after the words "share capital of that class" in the proviso have been omitted on account of the new definition of special resolution [see s. 81 (2)].

Re-organization.

Buckley (Lord Wrenbury) in his Companies Act, 11th ed. at p. 315 says: "All modes of re-organizing the share capital, even when involving an interference with preferences or special rights attached to shares by the memorandum of association, can be effected as part of an agreement with members under the section, with the possible exception, whilst s. 45 of the Act of 1908 (s. 54 of the Indian Act) was in force, of the two classes of re-organization of capital falling within that section, and subject to the qualification that if the arrangement involves a dealing with capital, for which other sections of the Act prescribe special formalities, such formalities must also be complied with." Again, "It is no objection to an arrangement with classes of members under this section that it involves a winding-up of the company and a transfer of its undertaking to another company, including a foreign company, for fully or partly paid shares in that company for distribution amongst the different classes of members of the transferor company in manner or proportions provided by the arrangement. In such a case the Court may, but does not necessarily, insist upon dissentient members being given protection similar to that provided by s. 234 (s. 208-C of the Indian Act) in the case of transfer under that section without the sanction of the Court. If however the so-called arrangement is really a transfer under s. 234 simpliciter, but without giving dissentients the protection provided by that section, quaere, whether the transfer can be sanctioned as an arrangement under this section" 1.

Duty of Court.

"What the Court has to do", says Lindley L. J., "is to see first of all, that the provisions of the statute have been complied with; and secondly, that the majority has been acting bona fide. The Court also has to see that the minority is not being overridden by a majority having interest of its own clashing with those of the minority whom they seek to coerce. Further than that, the Court has to look at the scheme and see whether it is one as to which persons acting honestly......take a view which can be reasonably taken by business men. The Court must look at the scheme and see whether the Act has been complied with, whether the majority are acting bona fide and whether they are coercing the minority inorder to promote interests adverse to those of the class whom they purport to represent, and then see whether the scheme is a reasonable one or whether there is any reasonable objection to it, or such an objection to it as that any reasonable man might say that he could not approve of it" 2.

Mode of reorganization.

This section is confined to two modes of reorganization of share capital, namely, (a) by consolidation of shares of different classes, and (b) by division of shares into shares of different classes 3. It does not however apply to a scheme for total abolition of the existing classes and creation of fresh classes of shares 4. But a scheme of arrangement which alters any rights defined by the memorandum of association must satisfy the conditions laid down by this section, although the scheme does not include the consolidation of different classes of shares or the division of shares into shares of different classes 1.

In a reorganization of share capital under this section a company may divide each of its £ 1 preference shares on which 15s. has been paid, into two different classes of shares of 10s., called "A preference shares" and "B preference shares" respectively and treat the former as fully paid up and the latter as being 5s. uncalled 2.

Preferential rights.

Where preferential rights of members arise under the articles which provide for modification of those rights, they may be so modified without having regard to the provisions of this section, as those provisions only operate when the preferential rights are determined, not by the articles, but by the memorandum 3. But when the rights are determined by the memorandum, they cannot be interfered with unless the conditions required by this section are fulfilled 3. The proviso is one limiting the effect of the previous part of the section and is not in any sense an independent enactment operating beyond the limits of the particular section to which it is attached. Therefore in cases where a preference has been rightly given by the articles, such preference can be modified by special resolution 3.

Application of section.

It is not an enabling section. It limits the general power to make arrangements under s. 153. Its application is confined to the two cases mentioned in the section. In other cases a scheme of arrangement which interferes with rights conferred by the memorandum, e. g., diminishes the rights of preference shareholders to dividends, may be validly effected under s. 153 4. But where the only persons interested in any profits in excess of the fixed dividend payable on the ordinary shares are the shareholders themselves, the Court ought, in the exercise of its discretion, confirm the special resolution for reorganizing the share capital 5.

Where one of the conditions in the memorandum of association is that the rights and privileges of different classes of shareholders are subject to variation, a resolution which has the effect of sweeping away the rights and privileges attached to ordinary and deferred shares and which leaves the two classes of shares with precisely the same rights, is perfectly valid and does not require the sanction of the Court. But where even after this resolution a deferred share cannot be sold as an ordinary share, a proposal to make these two classes of shares into one class involves a consolidation of the different classes of shares and such consolidation modifies the condition of the memorandnm of association 6.

Where the section does not apply.

This section does not however apply where the proposed scheme does not modify the memorandum or consolidate shares or affect preferential rights of shareholders; and the section is applicable only to arrangements which have the effect specified in sub-section (1) 7.

Where by an agreement A. company was entitled to act as a manager of B. company and to receive in respect of each financial year of the B. company 50 per cent. of its net profits as well as a management share with very important rights attached to it, and B. company having desirous of putting an end to the management by A. company an agreement was prepared terminating the management in consideration of the payment to A. company of 100,000 l. to be raised by B. company by the issue of debenture stock and incidentally the management share was to be converted into an ordinary share, it was held that it was not ultra vires the B. company to enter into the proposed agreement, it being no objection to the agreement that it involved the redemption of the annual charge on the B. company's net profits out of capital raised for the purpose 1.

Sub-s. (1). To comply with the provisions of sub-section (1) a majority of three-fourths in value of the shareholders of that particular class must be present or represented when the resolution is passed ; and it must be passed at a meeting, voting by proxy being allowable when such votings are allowed by the articles 2.

Where a company by special resolution reorganized its share capital in such a manner that the liability of the company to the shareholders was reduced, but the nominal amount of the share capital was not reduced, it was held that the company had rightly adopted the procedure prescribed by this section in order to obtain confirmation of the reorganization scheme 3.

A resolution passed by half of the preference shareholders, who represent three-fourths of the share capital of their class, does not comply with the provisions of this section 4. Although a single member cannot constitute a "meeting" in the ordinary sense of the word, the context may show the word to be used in an unusual sense and in such a way as to include the formal consent of the sole member of the class, the consent of which is required to be obtained 5.

Proviso.

The proviso to sub-s. (1) does not apply to affecting the rights of ordinary shareholders by an issue of preference shares 6.

The wide powers which the Court has in confirming a scheme is well shown in the case where a dissentient shareholder was compelled to receive 4½% debentures for 5½% cumulative shares 7.

Class meetings.

"Only by the clearest words", observed Lord Blanesburgh, "and in full knowledge of their rights, will a class be bound by a resolution which, it is suggested, modifies or extinguishes those rights" 8. The opportunity afforded to the class of discussing their own affairs undisturbed by opposing or conflicting interests is the modest protection against possible oppression offered by a class meeting 9. As to how class meetings should be conducted see the last cited case.

An alteration such as is referred to in this section cannot be carried out under s. 153 alone without regard to the special provisions of this section 1. But if no consolidation or division of shares into different classes is involved, this section does not apply 2. A mere increase of the number of shares of any class does not alter the rights of the class within the meaning of this section or s. 153 2.

Distinction between this section and s. 153.

The various steps for reorganizing the capital and business can be taken at one and the same time and by a single resolution 3.

For preference and other classes of shares and the privileges &c. attached to them see notes to s. 6 and regs. 3, 4 and 98 of Table A.

It is not necessary to advertise a petition for reorganization of the share capital 4.

Reduction of Share Capital.

Restrictions on purchase by company or loans by company for purchase of its own shares.

54A. (1) No company limited by shares shall have power to buy its own shares or the shares of a public company of which it is a subsidiary company unless the consequent reduction of capital is effected and sanctioned in the manner provided by sections 55 to 66.

(2) No company limited by shares other than a private company, not being a subsidiary company of a public company, shall give, whether directly or indirectly, and whether by means of a loan, guarantee, the provision of security or otherwise, any financial assistance for the purpose of or in connection with a purchase made or to be made by any person of any shares in the company :

Provided that nothing in this section shall be taken to prohibit, where the lending of money is part of the ordinary business of a company, the lending of money by the company in the ordinary course of its business.

(3) If a company acts in contravention of this section, the company and every officer of the company who is knowingly and wilfully in default shall be liable to a fine not exceeding one thousand rupees.

(4) Nothing in this section shall affect the right of a company to redeem any shares issued under section 105B.

This section is new and has been inserted by the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936. Sub-s. (1) replaces sub-s. (1) of s. 55 which has been omitted, sub-s. (2) and the proviso were suggested by s. 45, cl. (1) and proviso (a) of the English Act of 1929, and sub-s. (3) is on the line of sub-s. (3) of the aforesaid section of the English Act.

Ultra vires.

In the absence of a special power of cancellation or forfeiture of shares, the directors have no power to release shareholders from their liability or to cancel shares 2. A resolution, passed by a company authorizing the money of those shareholders who have not paid their allotment money and are not willing to remain as members to be returned, is ultra vires and cannot operate to relieve them of their liability as contributories 2. An article enabling members to sever all connections with the company and end all their liability, being opposed to this section, is ultra vires the company and the memorandum of association 3.

Company cannot deal in its own shares.

A company, even though it be empowered by its memorandum or articles of association to deal in the shares of companies, is not thereby entitled to deal in its own shares, and a purchase by the directors of its shares on behalf of the company is ultra vires 4. Directors have no power to cancel shares duly issued to a shareholder at his request and thus to reduce the company's capital 5. Provisions for option for a company to buy its own shares is ultra vires under the Acts of 1866 and 1882, as well as under the present Act 6.

Reduction of share capital.

55. (1) Subject to confirmation by the Court, a company limited by shares, if so authorised by its articles, may by special resolution reduce its share capital in any way, and in particular (without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing power) may—

(a) extinguish or reduce the liability on any of its shares in respect of share capital not paid up ; or

(b) either with or without extinguishing or reducing liability on any of its shares, cancel any paid-up share capital which is lost or unrepresented by available assets ; or

(c) either with or without extinguishing or reducing liability on any of its shares, pay off any paid-up share capital which is in excess of the wants of the company, and may, if and so far as is necessary, alter its memorandum by reducing the amount of its share capital and of its shares accordingly.

(2) A special resolution under this section is in this Act called a resolution for reducing share capital.

Amendment. By the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936 sub-s. (1) of this section has been omitted and sub-sections (2) and (3) have been re-numbered as sub-sections (1) and (2) respectively. The provision of sub-section (1) has been transferred to s. 54A. The original sub-s. (1) was as follows :

55. (1) No company limited by shares shall have power to buy its own shares unless the consequent reduction of capital is effected and sanctioned in manner hereinafter provided.

Principle. In an application for reduction of capital under this section the following principles are applicable : (1) The company has power to reduce its capitlal ; (2) subject to confirmation by the Court, which is the safe-guard of the minority, the question of reducing capital is a domestic one for the decision of the majority ; (3) the company is to determine the extent, the mode and incidence of the reduction ; (4) the company may reduce the share capital of all its shareholders wholly or in part ; (5) the Court has to see that interests of the minority have been protected and no unfairness has been shown to it ; (6) in doing so the Court should keep in view the consideration that the decision has been arrived at by business men who are fully cognizant of their necessities and are the best custodians of their interests and should therefore be slow to interfere 1. Without throwing any doubt on the general proposition that shareholders acting honestly are usually better judges of what is to their commercial advantage than the Court, where it is proved that the majority of a class may have voted in the way they did because of their interests as shareholders in another class, little attention should be paid to the vote of the majority in considering whether the scheme is fair 2. In such a case the Court should itself decide the question of fairness or unfairness on the evidence before it 3.

Reduction without Courts's sanction. A company may reduce its capital without the sanction of the Court by—(a) forfeiting shares for non-payment of calls and the like, (b) paying off paid up capital out of accumulated profits 4, (c) cancelling shares by special resolution under s. 50, sub-sec. (1), cl. (e). A surrender of shares in consideration of a payment in money or money's worth by the company is a purchase by it of its own shares and is ultra vires 5. "Every surrender of shares, whether fully paid up or not, involves a reduction of capital which is unlawful, except where sanctioned by the Court. Forfeiture is a statutory exception and the only exception" 6. A surrender of shares to the company not involving any reduction of capital and not amounting to a purchase of its own shares is not however necessarily ultra vires 7. It may be done where a forfeiture can be justified 8. Surrender in all other cases is illegal 9.

"Capital."

In speaking of reduction of capital, the word "capital" means neither nominal capital to the exclusion of paid up capital, nor the latter to the exclusion of the former. A reduction of nominal capital which is paid up must be so made as not to affect the equilibrium of the company's balance-sheet to the prejudice of the company's creditors. This equilibrium is not disturbed where the reduction is effected, (a) by cancelling capital lost or unrepresented by available assets, or (b) by paying off capital in excess of the company's wants, because in either case the balance item on the debit or credit side of the balance sheet, as the case may be, is unaffected, but the section impliedly forbids the writing off of paid up capital which is not lost or unrepresented by available assets or returned, the result in that case being to disturb the equilibrium of the balance-sheet by striking out of the debit or liability side a sum representing paid up capital, leaving the credit or assets side unaffected 1.

When the directors knowing that the company is insolvent make payment of sums of money representing the uncalled capital due by them for shares, such payment will be treated as payment towards capital and not as a loan 2.

Authorization in articles necessary.

Reduction of capital cannot be effected unless it is authorized by the articles as originally framed or altered by special resolution 3, power in the memorandum of association being ineffective 4. This statutory power cannot be fettered 5. A company not having powers by its articles to reduce the capital, can take the power by passing a special resolution and at the second meeting exercise the power 6. Where a company had taken power by its articles to reduce its capital in any way in which under the statute it was authorized to do, it was held by the House of Lords that a scheme of reduction affecting the deferred shareholders only was not ultra vires and that the scheme was fair to both classes of shareholders 7. In the last cited case Lord Blanesburgh was of opinion that although, if the question had been open, the meeting of the deferred shareholders (not being a meeting exclusively attended by these shareholders) was not a separate meeting, the resolution approving the scheme must be taken to have been duly passed, as it had not been challenged by the appropriate procedure. But in the same case Lord Russell of Killowen and Lord Maugham expressed the opinion that although prima facie a separate meeting of a class should be a meeting attended only by members of that class, the meeting of the deferred shareholders having been properly convened, the presence of shareholders of another class was a matter relating to the conduct of the meeting, which lay in the hands of the chairman with the assent of those persons who were properly present and constituted the meeting, and as no objection was taken at the meeting, those present must be taken to have assented to the meeting being so conducted, and the resolution was accordingly valid.

It was not competent for a company to pass resolutions at the same extraordinary general meeting, first authorizing the reduction and secondly providing for the reduction in a certain way ; for at the time the latter resolution was passed, there was no power to reduce, as the former resolution could not be effective until confirmed at a subsequent meeting [1].

How reduction is to be effected.

Prima facie a reduction of capital should be an all round one i.e., the same percentage should be paid off or cancelled or reduced in respect of each share, and the pari passu mode of reduction is the proper mode where there are several classes of shares [2], unless the preference shares have priority as regards capital in the winding up [3], in which case the loss should be thrown first on the ordinary shares [4]. The Court has however jurisdiction to confirm any kind of reduction subject to the creditors' right to object, notwithstanding that it affects the legal rights of classes [5]. To give the Court jurisdiction to entertain a petition for reduction, it is not essential to prove that the capital proposed to be cancelled is lost or unrepresented by available assets [5]. But if a resolution for reduction is in fact unfair, even the objection of a few opponents will prevail [6]. It is however no part of the business of a Court of Justice to determine the wisdom of a course adopted by a company in the management of its own affairs [6].

Where under the memorandum and articles of association, preference shareholders have no priority as to capital or voting powers but are merely entitled to a fixed cumulative dividend and the company has power to reduce capital, a rateable reduction on all the shares, preference and ordinary, though diminishing the actual preferential dividend, is not an alteration of the rights of the preference shareholders so as to require their sanction under an ordinary modification of rights clause [7]. But where it becomes necessary to cancel arrears of preference dividends, it requires an arrangement under s. 153 [8], unless the memorandum or the articles vest the requisite power in a class meeting [9].

A guarantor of preference dividends, who had made payments pursuant to the guarantee, can claim only to be subrogated to the rights of preference shareholders, and cannot claim to be repaid as a creditor by the company [10].

A scheme for reduction comes within the operation of this section, although it differentiates between the holders of the same class of shares to the extent of paying off some and not others and imposes upon the shareholders, whose shares are to be extinguished, the obligation to accept debenture stock in lieu of cash and also involves the advance to the company of the moneys to be utilized in redemption of the share capital by the very persons whose shares are to be redeemed [11]. The Court may make it a term of the confirmation that the cost of a dissentient shareholder who has assisted the Court by his criticism of the scheme shall be provided for by the company [11].

A reduction of capital may, with the sanction of the Court, be effected in any manner even though it involve doing things which without such sanction are entirely forbidden, e.g., the purchase by the company of its own shares, or a re-arrangement of the rights of the members 1, or a sub-division of shares in which the amount unpaid is not equally divided between the resulting shares 2.

Where of the ordinary £ 5 shares of a company, there were 6,047 fully paid shares and 53,953 shares which were paid up only to the extent of £ 1 per share, and the company, having accumulated a large reserve fund, passed and confirmed a special resolution for the return of £ 4 per share on the 6,047 fully paid shares, it was held that the company had power to reduce the paid up capital in the manner proposed by the special resolution 3.

A petition to the Court for confirmation of a scheme for reduction of capital was opposed by the deferred shareholders. The scheme was that every 2 l., of ordinary share should be converted into 1 l., of ordinary share ; but the reduction was thought advisable having regard to the conflict of interests between the ordinary and the deferred share capital on any dividend distribution. Article 44 of the company's articles of association gave power to reduce the capital by paying off capital, cancelling capital lost or unrepresented by available assests, or reducing the liability on the shares or otherwise as might seem expedient. Arts. 71 and 72 required the assent of each class of shareholders by an extraordinary resolution passed at a meeting of such class. There was no suggestion of any want of good faith on the part of the directors : held (1) that Art. 44 was sufficient to allow reduction in the manner proposed ; (2) that there was a proper holding of a separate meeting of each class of shareholders, though at such a meeting shareholders of other classes were present without voting ; (3) that a circular sent with the notice of the meeting was sufficient to convey all the information necessary, and any imperfection in it had not caused any misapprehension ; (4) that it was not necessary that the circular should disclose the holdings of the directors in the various classes of shares ; and (5) that although the scheme conferred a power on the majority to bind a minority, the Court ought to approve it as one for the benefit of that class, and it was a question in any case which could be far better decided by the shareholders themselves 4.

Reduction of capital cannot be effected as a scheme under s. 153 post, unless the proper steps are also taken under ss. 55 to 61.

Where reserve fund is mixed with general assets.

If there is a reserve fund which is mixed with the general assets of the company and allowed to rest in account only, as is often done, the general rule is to attribute to the reserve fund the same proportion of any loss of capital as the amount of the reserve fund bears to that of the nominal capital 5.

Where shares have been forfeited.

Where shares have deen forfeited, the amount paid up before forfeiture may be written off and the shares treated as having nothing paid thereon 6. Fully paid up shares cannot be forfeited and therefore cannot be validly surrendered, even as a gift, to the company 7. A surrender or forfeiture of shares is in fact a reduction, and it cannot be done without the Court's sanction 8.

Reduction of paid up capital only.

A company may by special resolution reduce its paid up capital without reducing its nominal capital, the special resolution being to the effect that the accumulated profits shall be returned to the members in reduction of the amount paid up on their shares, the liability on the shares being increased by the same amount. If this repayment is made out of the profits, the Court's sanction is not required [1]. Capital may be diminished by cancelling shares which have not been taken or agreed to be taken. This may, if the articles so provide, be done by an ordinary resolution ; vide s. 50, sub-s. (1), cl. (e). Where a cancellation of shares is not permissible under s. 50, the Court may sanction such reduction of capital under this section if the provisions hereof are complied with [2].

Special resolution.

Sub-s. (2). The power of reduction must be exercised by passing a special resolution. If minutes are properly signed, no evidence will be required to prove that the meetings were properly convened [3]. Where of twelve shareholders present at the general meeting eight voted for and two against reduction and the remaining two did not vote, it was held that the resolution was not effective inasmuch as a majority of three-fourths of the members entitled to vote and present at the meeting [4] had not voted in favour of the resolution [5]. The words "in any way" in this sub-section gives effect to the decision of the House of Lords in Poole v. National Bank of China [6].

Where capital consists of stock only.

Where the capital consists only of stock, a reduction can be effected by cancelling a part of the stock. In such a case the holding of each stock-holder could be reduced by so much per cent. being the proportion which the sum to be written off bears to the amount of the issued stock [7].

Procedure.

Sub-s. (2) Cl. (b). It is not always necessary or essential for the Court to which a petition for reduction of capital is presented to satisfy itself that there has been a loss of capital. The only serious question is whether or not the company had duly passed its special resolution [8]. Where however the reduction of the capital is based on the ground that capital has been lost or unrepresented by available assets, it is always prudent to proceed on some evidence [9]. Where the person opposing the petition accepts the statement of the company that there has been loss of capital, the Court should act upon the assumption that there is evidence of loss of capital [9]. Where such an application is opposed by a shareholder on the ground that certain persons who have voted for the resolution for reduction of capital were not duly qualified as shareholders to vote, but no steps have been taken to have the register of members rectified under s. 38, the onus is on the shareholder opposing the petition to substantiate his allegations [9].

Sub-s. (2), cl. (c). This includes capital which can only be called up in case of the company going into liquidation[1]. The petition and affidavit should state the fact that the amount to be returned is in excess of the company's requirements[2].

Court's power is discretionary.

Reduction of capital may be sanctioned or disallowed at the discretion of the Court[3]; so any scheme which works unfairly as regards the interest of the minority may be disapproved[3]. But a fair scheme will be sanctioned, even if it effects an alteration of the respective rights of classes of shareholders[4].

Power of reduction.

It is doubtful whether a company can contract itself out of the power to reduce its capital which is conferred upon it by the Act and the articles[5]. Subject to the confirmation by the Court, which is the safeguard of the minority[4], the question of reduction of capital is one for the decision of the majority[5], and the Act leaves the company to determine the extent, the mode and the incidence of the reduction and the application of any capital moneys which the reduction may set free[6].

Unauthorized reduction of capital will be restrained by the Court[6].

An unlimited company can reduce its capital in any way its memorandum and articles allow[7].

Application to Court for confirming order.

56. Where a company has passed * * a resolution for reducing share capital, it may apply by petition to the Court for an order confirming the reduction.

The words "and confirmed" after the word "passed" have been omitted by the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936.

What the petition should contain.

Where there is more than one class of shares, a petition for reduction of capital should state whether or not there is any priority as to capital[8]. The petition must be supported by affidavits and a copy of the memorandum and articles of association, and the original minute-book of the proceedings must be made an exhibit[9].

Questions to be considered.

In an application under this section the Court is only concerned to confirm the proposed reduction and not the resolution passed by the company[10]. The only questions to be considered by the Court are: (1) Ought the Court to refuse its sanction to the reduction out of regard to the interests of those members of the public who may be induced to take shares in the company? (2) Is the reduction fair and equitable as between different classes of shareholders? Where the reduction is shared by all and is designed to work justly and equitably, and where it does not involve dimunition of any liability in respect of any unpaid capital or payment to any shareholder of any paid up capital and there is evidence regarding the loss of capital and non-representations of available assets, there is nothing to prevent the Court from confirming such reduction 1.

Simultaneous resolution to increase capital.

Where along with the resolution as to reduction of capital, another resolution is passed for the increase of capital by issue of new shares and this fact is stated in the application under this section with the prayer for sanction of the new scheme of reorganization, but the same is subsequently withdrawn on the objection of some shareholders, the increase of capital does not fall to be cons'dered by the Court under the present section, as the function of the Court does not extend to the exercise of the paternal care of the shareholders of a company, for such matter exclusively falls within the internal management of the company 1. In the last cited case the creditors of the company were not concerned at all.

Condition giving jurisdiction.

In Poole v. National Bank of China 2 Lord Macnaghten observed: "The condition that gives jurisdiction, is not proof of loss of capital or proof that capital is unrepresented by available assets, or that capital is in excess of the wants of the company. The jurisdiction arises whenever the company seeking reduction has duly passed a special resolution to that effect."

Addition to name of company of "and reduced."

57. On and from the passing by a company of a resolution for reducing share capital, or where the reduction does not involve either the diminution of any liability in respect of unpaid share capital or the payment to any shareholder of any paid-up share capital, then on and from the making of the order confirming the reduction, the company shall add to its name, until such date as the Court may fix, the words "and reduced" as the last words in its name, and those words shall, until that date, be deemed to be part of the name of the company:

Provided that, where the reduction does not involve either the diminution of any liability in respect of unpaid share capital or the payment to any shareholder of any paid-up share capital, the Court may, if it thinks expedient, dispense altogether with the addition of the words "and reduced."

Amendment.

In this section for the word "confirmation" in the first line the word "passing" has been substituted by the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936. By the same Act for the words "the presentation of the petition for confirming the reduction" after the words "on and from', the words "the making of the order confirming the reduction" have been substituted. The first alteration had to be made on account of the new definition of "special resolution" which no longer requires confirmation [see s. 81 (2), post]. The effect of the second alteration is that the company is not required to add the words "and reduced" to its name from the presentation of the petition for confirming the reduction, but it will have to add those words after the making of the order confirming the reduction.

2. [1907] A.C. 229.

Object of the addition.

The addition of the words "and reduced" is required in order to give warning to the public of the financial position of the company 1. The fact that the company is carrying on business abroad will not necessarily induce the Court to dispense with the use of those words 2. But in a proper case, where the use of the words "and reduced" has greatly prejudiced the company's credit by leading foreign customers to suppose that the company might be unable to meet its obligations, the Court may limit the time for use of the words to a short period, say fourteen days 3. The time usually ordered is one month 4.

Consequences of failure to make the addition.

Where the company failed to add the words "and reduced" to its name after the confirmation of the resolution for reduction, the petition for confirmation by the Court was incompetent 5. In the case noted below the Court dispensed with use of the words on the common seal of the company, but otherwise ordered the words to be used for one month from the date of the order 6. If the company is desirous of not using the words at all, it should make an application to that effect at the time of presentation of the petition 7. The application must be supported by affidavit 8.

Objections by creditors and settlement of list of objecting creditors.

58. (1) Where the proposed reduction of share capital involves either diminution of liability in respect of unpaid share capital, or the payment to any shareholder of any paid-up share capital, and in any other case if the Court so directs, every creditor of the company who at the date fixed by the Court is entitled to any debt or claim which, if that date were the commencement of the winding up of the company, would be admissible in proof against the company, shall be entitled to object to the reduction.

(2) The Court shall settle a list of creditors so entitled to object, and for that purpose shall ascertain, as far as possible without requiring an application from any creditor, the names of those creditors and the nature and amount of their debts or claims, and may publish notices fixing a day or days within which creditors not entered on the list are to claim to be so entered or are to be excluded from the right of objecting to the reduction.

Private company.

The Court will not readily accede to the prayer of dispensing with intimation and advertisement of the petition where the company is a private one and a family concern 9.

Creditors' right to object.

Where a reduction of capital does not involve diminution of assets and there has been no default by the company under the provisions of its debenture deed, a debenture-holder or creditor, and in particular a secured creditor, must make out a strong case before the Court will direct that he is entitled to object to the reduction, and the Court will not exercise its discretion in favour of the debenture-holders where there is no evidence that the assets are an insufficient security 1.

Sub-s. 2. The language of sub-s. (2) is imperative. The Court cannot dispense with the procedure even if there is no creditor 2.

Power to dispense with consent of creditor on security being given for his debt.

59. Where a creditor entered on the list of creditors whose debt or claim is not discharged or determined does not consent to the reduction, the Court may, if it thinks fit, dispense with the consent of that creditor, on the company securing payment of his debt or claim by appropriating, as the Court may direct, the following amount (that is to say),—

(i) if the company admits the full amount of his debt or claim, or, though not admitting it, is willing to provide for it, then the full amount of the debt or claim;

(ii) if the company does not admit or is not willing to provide for the full amount of the debt or claim, or if the amount is contingent or not ascertained, then an amount fixed by the Court after the like inquiry and adjudication as if the company were being wound up by the Court.

Debenture holders.

Debenture-holders may, on receiving notice by advertisement, appear and claim to be entered on the list and are, if they fail to do so, to be excluded from the right of objecting 3. Creditors named in the list whose debts are secured, but not yet due, and who have neither assented nor dissented, must be taken to have assented 4.

Consent of creditors.

An extraordinary resolution passed by the majority at a meeting of debenture-holders is a sufficent consent of all the debenture-holders 5.

Order confirming reduction.

60. The Court, if satisfied, with respect to every creditor of the company who under this Act is entitled to object to the reduction, that either his consent to the reduction has been obtained or his debt or claim has been discharged or has been determined or has been secured, may make an order confirming the reduction on such terms and conditions as it thinks fit.

Consent. Where debentures to bearers were outstanding and the names of the bearers could not be ascertained, the Court allowed unanimous resolution of a meeting of debenture-holders, at which 87 per cent. of the issue was represented, to suffice as equivalent to the consent of all 1.

If the debt is admitted or proved or is an ascertained sum, the whole amount must be set aside, and if the company refuses to do it, sanction to the reduction may be refused 2.

Power to confirm is discretionary. The Court has an absolute discretion to confirm 3, or refuse 4 to confirm, the reduction or impose such terms and conditions on the company, as it thinks fit 5. The only express statutory limitation is that certain measures must be taken for the protection of the creditors. The Court cannot, except in exceptional cases, review the opinion of the company in regard to its domestic or commercial questions 6. The Court has power, in a proper case, to confirm a resolution for reduction of capital notwithstanding that the voting powers may thereby be affected 7.

Scheme under s. 153. If a scheme of arrangement under s. 153 involves a reduction of capital, all the requirements of the Act with regard to reduction must be complied with; and it is necessary to advertise the petition for sanctioning the scheme, unless the Court has dispensed with any advertisement 8.

Scheme involving alteration of rights. A scheme of reduction of capital is not necessarily unfair or inequitable because it involves an alteration of the rights of voting and priority as between the different classes of stock-holders 9.

61. Registration of order and minute of reduction. (1) The registrar on production to him of an order of the Court confirming the reduction of the share capital of a company, and on the filing with him of a certified copy of the order and of a minute (approved by the Court) showing, with respect to the share capital of the company as altered by the order, the amount of the share capital, the number of shares into which it is to be divided and the amount of each share, and the amount (if any) at the date of the registration deemed to be paid up on each share, shall register the order and minute.

(2) On the registration, and not before, the resolution for reducing share capital as confirmed by the order so registered shall take effect.

(3) Notice of the registration shall be published in such manner as the Court may direct.

(4) The registrar shall certify under his hand the registration of the order and minute, and his certificate shall be conclusive evidence that all the requirements of this Act with respect to reduction of share capital have been complied with, and that the share capital of the company is such as is stated in the minute.

Form and contents of the minute for reduction.

The minutes for reduction of capital must contain, among other particulars, the denoting numbers of the shares referred to therein ; the notice of registration of such minutes need not however contain the denoting numbers, but may be in such shortened form as the Court may direct [1]. The minutes must ctontain the denoting numbers of the shares where they are not all paid up to the same extent [2]. This will not be excused ; but if the minutes are very complicated, a shortened form of advertisement may be allowed [1]. For what the minutes and memoranda should contain see notes [1] & [3].

For the form of the minute where the scheme for reduction involves a reorganisation of capital see cases noted below [4].

The form of minute to be registered pursuant to this section should contain a statement of sub-division of the share capital as effected by the resolution for reduction, but need not contain the original numbers of the shares, nor the fact that nothing has been paid up on the unissued shares [4].

Registrar's certificate conclusive.

The registrar's certificate is conclusive evidence that the requirements of the Act have been complied with [5], though it appeared afterwards that the company had no power under the articles to reduce its capital or that the special resolution for reduction was invalid [6].

Minute to form part of memorandum.

62. (1) The minute when registered shall be deemed to be substituted for the corresponding part of the memorandum of the company, and shall be valid and alterable as if it had been originally contained therein, and shall be embodied in every copy of the memorandum issued after its registration.

ceeding ten rupees for each copy in respect of which default is made, and every officer of the company who knowingly and wilfully authorises or permits the default shall be liable to the like penalty.

Liability of members in respect of reduced shares.

63. (1) A member of the company, past or present, shall not be liable in respect of any share to any call or contribution exceeding in amount the difference (if any) between the amount paid, or (as the case may be) the reduced amount, if any, which is to be deemed to have been paid, on the share and the amount of the share as fixed by the minute :

Provided that, if any creditor, entitled in respect of any debt or claim to object to the reduction of share capital, is, by reason of his ignorance of the proceedings for reduction, or of their nature and effect with respect to his claim not entered on the list of creditors, and, after the reduction, the company is unable, within the meaning of the provisions of this Act with respect to winding up by the Court, to pay the amount of his debt or claim, then—

(i) every person who was a member of the company at the date of the registration of the order for reduction and minute, shall be liable to contribute for the payment of that debt, or claim an amount not exceeding the amount which he would have been liable to contribute if the company had commenced to be wound up on the day before that registration ; and

(ii) if the company is wound up, the Court, on the application of any such creditor and proof of his ignorance as aforesaid, may, if it thinks fit, settle accordingly a list of persons so liable to contribute, and make and enforce calls and orders on the contributories settled on the list as if they were ordinary contributories in a winding up.

(2) Nothing in this section shall affect the rights of the contributories among themselves.

Penalty on concealment of name of creditor.

64. If any officer of the company wilfully conceals the name of any creditor entitled to object to the reduction, or wilfully misrepresents the nature or amount of the debt or claim of any creditor, or if any officer of the company abets any such concealment or misrepresentation as aforesaid, every such officer shall be punishable with imprisonment which may extend to one year, or with fine or with both.

Publication of reasons for reduction.

65. In any case of reduction of share capital, the Court may require the company to publish as the Court directs the reasons for reduction, or such other information in regard thereto as the Court may think expedient with a view to give proper information to the public, and, if the Court thinks fit, the causes which led to the reduction.

The Court rarely acts under this section, but may do so where the loss has been very large and sudden[1].

Increase and reduction of share capital in case of a company limited by guarantee having a share capital.

66. A company limited by guarantee and registered after the commencement of this Act may, if it has a share capital and is so authorised by its articles, increase or reduce its share capital in the same manner and subject to the same conditions in and subject to which a company limited by shares may increase or reduce its share capital under the provisions of this Act.

Variation of Shareholders' Rights.

Rights of holders of special classes of shares.

66A. (1) If in the case of a company, the share capital of which is divided into different classes of shares, provision is made by the memorandum or articles for authorising the variation of the rights attached to any class of shares in the company, subject to the consent of any specified proportion of the holders of the issued shares of that class or the sanction of a resolution passed at a separate meeting of the holders of those shares, and in pursuance of the said provision the rights attached to any such class of shares are at any time varied, the holders of not less in the aggregate than ten per cent. of the issued shares of that class, being persons who did not consent to or vote in favour of the resolution for the variation, may apply to the Court to have the variation cancelled, and where any such application is made the variation shall not have effect unless and until it is confirmed by the Court.

(2) An application under this section must be made within fourteen days after the date on which the consent was given or the resolution was passed, as the case may be, and may be made on behalf of the shareholders entitled to make the application by such one or more of their number as they may appoint in writing for the purpose.

(3) On any such application the Court, after hearing the applicant and any other persons who apply to the Court to be heard and appear to the Court to be interested in the application, may, if it is satisfied having regard to all the circumstances of the case that the variation would unfairly prejudice the shareholders of the class represented by the applicant, disallow the variation and shall, if not so satisfied, confirm the variation.

(4) The decision of the Court on any such application shall be final.

(5) The company shall within fifteen days after the service on the company of any order made on any such application forward a copy of the order to the registrar and, if default is made in complying with this provision, the company and every officer of the company who is knowingly and wilfully in default shall be liable to a fine not exceeding fifty Rupees.

(6) The expression "variation" in this section includes "abrogation" and the expression "varied" shall be construed accordingly.

This new section has been inserted by the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936. It is a verbatim reproduction of s. 61 of the English Act of 1929 except this : that for the words "liable to a default fine" in sub-s. 5 of the English Act, the words "liable to a fine not exceeding fifty rupees" have been substituted. This section may come into conflict with s. 54. In the English Act of 1929 s. 45 of the English Act of 1908 (corresponding to s. 54) was not re-enacted. See Introduction.

Sub-s. (1). The presence, at a separate meeting of the holders of one class of shares, of holders of a different class not voting either by show of hands or on a poll, does not invalidate the meeting as a separate class meeting, or the poll taken thereat [Carruth v. Imperial Chemical Industries [1936] 1 Ch. 587, C. Registration of Unlimited Company as Limited.

Registration of unlimited company as limited.

67. (1) Subject to the provisions of this section, any company registered as unlimited may register under this Act as limited or any company already registered as a limited company may re-register under this Act, but the registration of an unlimited company as a limited company shall not affect any debts, liabilities, obligations or contracts incurred or entered into by, to, with or on behalf of, the company before the registration, and those debts, liabilities, obligations and contracts may be enforced in manner provided by Part VIII of this Act in the case of a company registered in pursuance of that Part.

(2) On registration in pursuance of this section, the registrar shall close the former registration of the company, and may dispense with the delivery to him of copies of any documents with copies of which he was furnished on the occasion of the original registration of the company; but, save as aforesaid, the registration shall take place in the same manner and shall have effect as if it were the first registration of the company under this Act.

Power of unlimited company to provide for reserve share capital on re-registration.

68. An unlimited company having a share capital may, by its resolution for registration as a limited company in pursuance of this Act, do either or both of the following things, namely :—

(a) increase the nominal amount of its share capital by increasing the nominal amount of each of its shares, but subject to the condition that no part of the amount by which its capital is so increased shall be capable of being called up except in the event and for the purposes of the company being wound up ;

(b) provide that a specified portion of its uncalled share capital shall not be capable of being called up except in the event and for the purposes of the company being wound up.

Reserve Liability of Limited Company.

Reserve liability of limited company.

69. A limited company may by special resolution determine that any portion of its share capital which has not been already called up shall not be capable of being called up, except in the event and for the purposes of the company being wound up, and thereupon that portion of its share capital shall not be capable of being called up except in the event and for the purposes aforesaid.

Reserve capital.

After the special resolution such a capital cannot be charged by the company under a power in its memorandum and articles of association to charge its uncalled capital 1. Reserve capital cannot be turned into ordinary capital without leave of the Court and it cannot be dealt with by the directors 1. The reserve capital cannot be cancelled on a reduction of capital 2.

Unlimited Liability of Directors.

Limited company may have directors with unlimited liability.

70. (1) In a limited company the liability of the directors or of any director may, if so provided by the memorandum, be unlimited.

(2) In a limited company in which the liability of any director is unlimited, the directors of the company (if any) and the member who proposes a person for election or appointment to the office of director shall add to that proposal a statement that the liability of the person holding that office will be unlimited and the promoters and officers of the company, or one of them, shall, before the person accepts the office or acts therein, give him notice in writing that his liability will be unlimited.

(3) If any director or proposer makes default in adding such a statement, or if any promoter or officer of the company makes default in giving such a notice, he shall be liable to a fine not exceeding one thousand rupees and shall also be liable for any damage which the person so elected or appointed may sustain from the default, but the liability of the person elected or appointed shall not be affected by the default.

Special resolution of limited company making liability of directors unlimited.

71. (1) A limited company, if so authorised by its articles, may, by special resolution, alter its memorandum so as to render unlimited the liability of its directors or of any director.

(2) Upon the passing of any such special resolution, the provisions thereof shall be as valid as if they had been originally contained in the memorandum. * * * * * *

Amendment.

By the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936 the word "passing" in sub-s. (2) has been substituted for the word "confirmation", as under the new definition of "special resolution" [vide s. 81 (2)] it is no longer required to be confirmed.

By the same Act the following words after the word "memorandum" in sub-s. (2) have been omitted, namely: "and a copy thereof shall be embodied in or annexed to every copy of the memorandum issued after the confirmation of the resolution." These words were rendered unnecessary on account of the new s. 25-A. By the said amending Act sub-s. (3) has been omitted.

The original sub-s. (3) was as follows :—

(3) If a company makes default in complying with the requirements of this section, it shall be liable to a fine not exceeding ten rupees for each copy in respect of which default is made ; and every officer of the company who knowingly and wilfully authorises or permits the default, shall be liable to the like penalty.

PART IV.

MANAGEMENT AND ADMINISTRATION.

Office and Name.

Registered office of company.

72. (1) A company shall as from the day on which it begins to carry on business, or as from the twenty-eighth day after the date of its incorporation, whichever is the earlier, have a registered office to which all communications and notices may be addressed.

(2) Notice of the situation of the registered office and of any change therein shall be given within twenty-eight days after the date of the incorporation of the company or of the change, as the case may be, to the registrar who shall record the same.

(3) The inclusion in the annual return of a company of the statement as to the address of its registered office shall not be taken to satisfy the obligation imposed by this section.

(4) If a company carries on business without complying with the requirements of this section, it shall be liable to a fine not exceeding fifty rupees for every day during which it so carries on business.

Amendment.

By the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936 this section has been substituted for the original s. 72 in which there was no definite time limit within which a company should have a registered office or within which the notice of its situation or change should be given to the registrar. This new section reproduces s. 92 of the English Act of 1929. The old s. 72 was in the following terms :

Registered office of company.

72. (1) Every company shall have a registered office to which all communications and notices may be addressed.

(2) Notice in writing of the situation of the registered office, and of any change therein, shall be filed with the registrar, who shall record the same.

(3) If a company carries on business without complying with the requirements of this section, it shall be liable to a fine not exceeding fifty rupees for every day during which it so carries on business.

Service must be effected at registered office.

A summons to appear before a Magistrate must be served at the registered office, and appearance by a solicitor to raise a point of substance only is not a waiver of the objection 1. Where there is no registered office, service at the office in fact used by the company will be sufficient 2. Where there is no office, the company having ceased to carry on business, service on some of the late officers may be allowed 3. Service at any other place, even if the company carries on business there, is insufficient 1.

Where the registered office of a company still exists at the usual place, but a part of the company's business has been shifted to some other place without any notification of such change to the registrar, all the notices &c. must be addressed to the usual registered office 4. In the last cited case Panckridge J. observed : "I find myself unable to accept Mr. S. C. Roy's contention that s. 72 shows that a resolution to change the registered office is sufficient and that the only effect of failure to notify the change is to render the company liable to fine under sub-s. 3."

In suit.

In a suit against a corporation the summons may be served—(a) on the secretary or any director or principal officer of the corporation; (b) by leaving or sending it by post addressed to the corporation at the registered office, or if there is no registered office, then at the place where the corporation carries on business 5. As to the mode of service of any document on a company see s. 148.

73. Every limited company—

Publication of name by a limited company.

(a) shall paint or affix, and keep painted or affixed, its name on the outside of every office or place in which its business is carried on, in a conspicuous position, in letters easily legible and in English characters, and also, if the registered office be situate in a place beyond the local limits of the ordinary original civil jurisdiction of a High Court, in the characters of one of the vernacular languages used in that place ;

(b) shall have its name engraven in legible characters on its seal ;

(c) shall have its name mentioned in legible English characters in all bill-heads and letter paper and in all notices, advertisements and other official publications of the company, and in all bills of exchange, hundis, promissory notes, endorsements, cheques and orders for money or goods purporting to be signed by or on behalf of the company, and in all bills of parcels, invoices, receipts and letters of credit of the company.

Object.

The object of this section is to make the company itself continually bring to the notice of those who dealt or might deal with it, the fact that it is a limited concern. This section has nothing to do with advertising the whereabouts of a company or affording facilities to members of the public in finding its place of business 1.

Requirements how satisfied.

The requirements of the section would be satisfied by a board of the necessary conspicuousness and legibility outside the office room inside the building in which it is situate and therefore it cannot be said that when an office is situated within a compound, the name of the company should be painted or affixed outside the compound as well as outside the office 1.

Construction.

This section being a penal provision should be construed strictly. The words "outside of every office" in cl. (a) of the section cannot be construed to mean outside the premises in which the office is situate 1.

Use of the word "limited."

The abbreviations "Ltd." or "Ld." may be used for the word "Limited" 2. If a limited company makes a contract without using the word "Limited," the directors who make the contract on behalf of the company will be personally liable 3. For the protection of the public the strictest accuracy is to be observed in this respect 4. See notes to s. 88, post.

As to the company's seal, see notes to s. 29 and reg. 76, Table A.

(1) If a limited company does not paint or affix, and keep painted or affixed, its name in manner directed by this Act, it shall be liable to a fine not exceeding fifty rupees for not so painting or affixing its name, and for every day during which its name is not so kept painted or affixed, and every officer of the company, who knowingly and wilfully authorises or permits the default, shall be liable to the like penalty.

Panalties for non-publication of name.

(2) If any officer of a limited company, or any person on its behalf, uses or authorises the use of any seal purporting to be a seal of the company whereon its name is not so engraven as aforesaid, or issues or authorises the issue of any bill-head, letter paper, notice, advertisement or other official publication of the company, or signs or authorises to be signed on behalf of the company any bill of exchange, hundi, promissory note, endorsement, cheque or order for money or goods, or issues or authorises to be issued any bill of parcels, invoice, receipt or letter of credit of the company, wherein its name is not mentioned in manner aforesaid, he shall be liable to a fine not exceeding five hundred rupees, and shall further be personally liable to the holder of any such bill of exchange, hundi, promissory note, cheque or order for money or goods, for the amount thereof, unless the same is duly paid by the company.

Company described by a wrong name.

Where South Shields Salt Water Baths & Co. was described in a bill as the Salt Water Baths Ltd., it was held that the directors were personally liable on the bill 1. So it is of great importance to see that the name of the company is fully and correctly written in the bill of exchange, hundi &c. Where the directors describe the company by a wrong name on a bill accepted by them on behalf of the company, they will be personally liable 2.

Sub-s. (2). The word "holder" in sub-sec. (2) means, in the case of an order for goods, the person to whom the order is given 3.

75. (1) Where any notice, advertisement or other official publication of a company contains a statement of the amount of the authorised capital of the company, such notice, advertisement or other official publication shall also contain a statement in an equally prominent position and in equally conspicuous characters of the amount of the capital which has been subscribed and the amount paid up.

Publication of authorised as well as subscribed and paid-up capital.

pany who is knowingly a party to the default shall be liable to a fine not exceeding one thousand rupees.

This section is not in the English Act.

Meetings and Proceedings.

76. (1) A general meeting of every company shall be held within eighteen months from the date of its incorporation and thereafter once at least in every calendar year and not more than fifteen months after the holding of the last preceding general meeting.

Annual general meeting.

(2) If default is made in holding a meeting in accordance with the provisions of this section, the company and every director or manager of the company who is knowingly and wilfully a party to the default shall be liable to a fine not exceeding five hundred rupees.

(3) If default is made as aforesaid, the Court may, on the application of any member of the company, call or direct the calling of a general meeting of the company.

Amendment.

By the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936, this section has been substituted for the original s. 76. This brings it into line with s. 112 of the English Act of 1929. Compare the amended s. 32. In sub-s. (1) the words "eighteen months" were substituted by the Select Committee for the words "one year" in the Bill, and the word "wilfully" was added in sub-s. (2). Compare the amended ss. 32 and 131.

The original s. 76 was in the following terms :

76. (1) A general meeting of every company shall be held once at the least in every year, and not more than fifteen months after the holding of the last preceding general meeting and, if not so held, the company and every officer of the company who is knowingly a party to the default shall be liable to a fine not exceeding five hundred rupees.

Annual general meeting.

(2) When default has been made in holding a meeting of the company in accordance with the provisions of this section, the Court may, on the application of any member of the company, call or direct the calling of a general meeting of the company.

Scope.

The terms of the section are mandatory. They make no reference to the balance-sheet. The section has nothing to do with the preparation of a balance-sheet [1].

Sub-s. (1). Notwithstanding regulations made by the Local Government under s. 248 with respect to the duties of the registrar, a shareholder is entitled to file a complaint against the directors for failure to comply with the provisions of this section [2].

[2] Laxmi Narain v. Mahajan [1928] N. 186, 29 Cr. L. J. 581, 109 I. C. 597.

Meaning of "year."

"Year" means the calendar year 1 which commences on the 1st day of January 2; so it will be sufficient if the meeting is held before 31st December in any year, provided that it is within 15 months from the time when the last meeting was held 3.

Once in every year.

Sub-s. (1) demands that there shall be a general meeting held once at least in every year, i.e. one separate and distinct meeting every year. Where a meeting called and held on a day in one year is adjourned to a date in the next year, and held on that date, the meeting held on the latter date is not a different meeting and does not satisfy the requirements of this section 4.

What is a general meeting.

The section does not make a difference between a general meeting and an extraordinary general meeting; so where such a meeting is held within the 15 or 18 months, as the case may be, no offence is committed if the general meeting was not held within that period 5. But the Bombay High Court has held that an extraordinary general meeting held on the requisition of certain shareholders is not a general meeting within this section 6.

Power of general meeting.

A company in general meeting can do all acts save those delegated to the directors and other persons by the articles of association. Such acts are done by votes of the majority, as observed by Lord Hardwick: "Whenever a certain number are incorporated, a major part may do any corporate act; so if all are summoned and part appear, a major part of those that appear may do a corporate act though nothing be mentioned in the charter of the major part" 7. The assent of every member of the company will not be effective 8, unless the company is not one inviting or proposing to invite subscription from the public 9. But knowledge and acquiescence of all the members may condone a breach of trust committed by the directors 10. The presence of all the members at a meeting is sufficient to regularize any resolution passed whether there has or has not been due notice 11, where the act is not ultra vires of the company 12.

It has been held by the Madras High Court that where there is nothing in the articles of association to show that the general power of the shareholders at a meeting to cancel a decision of the directors is not possessed by the company, the failure to note forfeiture of shares as per resolution of the directors which was cancelled at a general meeting of the company cannot be treated as default 13. This raises the question, where the general or particular powers of the company are vested in the directors by the articles, can the company in general meeting override such powers of the directors ? With all respect to the learned Judge it is submitted that the company cannot do it[1].

Resolution.

Where a general meeting is convened with notice to all the shareholders, but some of them do not choose to appear, they must be held to be bound by the resolutions passed by the majority[2]. Where a meeting is called as a meeting of directors, all the directors are present and they are the only shareholders in the company, the meeting is practically a meeting of shareholders at which resolution may be passed which would otherwise be invalid under the articles of association[3].

Rights of the minority.

A meeting of shareholders cannot by a majority refuse to hear the arguments of the minoriry ; but when such arguments have been heard, it is competent for the meeting to apply the closure, i.e., to declare the discussion closed and put the motion to the vote[4].

Interference by Court.

On the well-known principle that the Court will not interfere with the internal management of companies, a very strong case must be made out to induce the Court to stop a general meeting of shareholders, especially on an interlocutory motion[5].

Proceedings of a general meeting.

The proceedings of a general meeting may be declared invalid unless such meeting has been properly convened, properly constituted and properly conducted[6]. See regs. 49 to 70 of Table A and notes thereto.

Adjournment.

In the absence of express authority in the articles, the directors have no power to postpone a general meeting properly convened[7]; but the chairman can on proper grounds adjourn the meeting[8]. An adjourned meeting is merely a continuation of the original meeting[9].

Where the articles provide that "the chairman with the consent of the meeting may adjourn it," he is not bound to adjourn, even though the majority desire the adjournment[10]. But he cannot, by leaving the chair before the business is completed, bring the meeting to a close ; and if he purports to do so, the meeting may elect another chairman and proceed with the business[11]. See regs. 52 and 54 of Table A and notes thereto.

Duties of the chairman.

It is the duty of the chairman to preserve order, to conduct proceedings of the meeting regularly and to take care that the sense of the meeting is ascertained with regard to any question before it.

Every member is entitled to notice of a general meeting[12]. If special business is to be transacted, the notice must specify its nature 1. A notice which stated that the object was to adopt new regulations, instead of Table A, but did not set out the contents of the new regulations, was held to be good 2. A notice which states that a certain resolution will be passed "with such amendments as shall be determined at the meeting" is a good notice 3. A notice however should show substantially what is proposed to be done, e. g., a notice of a resolution to increase the capital should specify the amount of the proposed increase 4. What is sufficient notice of the general nature of the business proposed to be transacted must be determined from the particular circumstances of each case 1.

Notice of general meeting.

As a general rule, the notice of a general meeting should contain clear information as to what is proposed to be done; for an insufficient notice may invalidate the whole proceeding 5. The terms of any specific resolution to be proposed need not be set out in the notice, unless an extraordinary or special resolution is intended to be passed 6. But if something is kept back concealed, it will invalidate the proceedings 7. Thus a notice to adopt new articles of association which might be seen at the company's office, is not sufficient where the new articles increase the directors' remuneration and borrowing power and make other important changes 8. See reg. 49 of Table A and notes thereto.

If notice to propose a director is required to be given so many days before the day of election, and the election takes place at an adjourned meeting, the notice is sufficient if given at the specified time before the date of the adjourned meeting 9.

Where notice of a meeting has been duly given, it cannot be postponed by a subsequent notice 10. A notice to be good must be given by a person having authority to summon the meeting. A resolution passed at a meeting convened by the secretary without the authority of the board is invalid. In such a case the consent of the directors separately given will not cure the defect 11.

Notwithstanding a declaration by the chairman, the notice of the meeting may be looked at to see if the resolution is in order 12.

Effect of acquiescence of a member.

A company is not "corporately assembled" unless all the members attend, or at any rate they have got notice of the meeting. But a member who is in fact present and has acquiesced in the resolution for a long time, cannot subsequently complain of any irregularity in summoning the meeting 13.

Amendments. Where the notice is of a resolution to appoint as directors three persons named in the notice, three other names may be added by way of amendment 1. If the chairman improperly refuses to submit an amendment to the meeting, the resolution actually carried will be invalidated 2.

Resolutions. Each resolution must, if any member so requires, be put separately to the meeting 3. The poll must also be taken separately 4.

Right to vote. A right to vote is property, and the Court will interfere to protect a member from being deprived of this right 5. Where an agreement for sale of shares has been made or shares are mortgaged, but the vendor's or mortgagor's name remains on the register of members, he alone can vote; but he must do so in accordance with the directions of those entitled to the beneficial interest in the shares 6.

A provision in the articles that holders of any class of shares shall not have votes in respect of those shares is good, and resolutions passed by those having votes are binding even where they affect the interests of all classes 7. But one class of shareholders may not vote away the rights of another class 8.

Proxy. A shareholder must be present in person or by proxy before he can vote; but proxies cannot be used on a show of hands 9. This principle is not overridden by a provision in the articles that if a poll is demanded it shall be taken in such manner and at such time and place as the chairman of the meeting directs 10.

Stamp on proxy paper. When properly stamped, a proxy to vote at any ordinary or extraordinary general meeting is valid 11. An adhesive stamp must be cancelled by having the signature of the shareholder written across it or by being otherwise obliterated 12. The Central Government has reduced to 2 as. the duty chargeable under the Stamp Act, 1899 on a proxy empowering policy-holders of an insurance company to vote at a meeting of the policy-holders to be held for the election of directors. Vide Gazette of India dated 13th September, 1941, Part I, p. 1298. For stamp on proxy paper generally see Appendix—"Stamp Duty."

As to the quorum of a general meeting, see reg. 51, Table A and notes thereto.

Speeches at the meeting. On the ground that members have a common interest in the affairs of the company, speeches at a meeting and circulars sent by directors or shareholders to the members are privileged, and in the absence of malice will not support an action for libel 13. But newspapers making a report of what passes at a meeting have not a similar privilege, nor may directors or shareholders publish to the world defamatory statements, even though contained in the report of a meeting 1.

Sub-s. (2). Under the corresponding section, i.e., s. 74 of Act VI of 1882, the penalty of the default in holding the general meeting was a fixed fine of Rs. 1,000, and the Court could not impose a lesser fine when the offence was proved 2. This has been set right in the present section. In a case where there was no general meeting of the company during the year, before the managing director can be convicted under s. 32, ante, it must be found that he was responsible for the default in respect of the holding of the general meeting, even assuming that he cannot plead the impossibility of complying with s. 32 caused by the non-holding of the general meeting if the impossibility was due to his own default 3. Even if the accused has already been convicted under the present section for default in connection with holding of the general meeting, there must be an independent finding of the default in the prosecution under s. 32, ante, 3.

See notes to sub-s. (5) of s. 32 ante, and to those to sub-s. (4) of s. 134 post.

When the registrar condones the delay in holding a general meeting, the delay in filing a balance sheet before the general body of this meeting must also be deemed to have been condoned 4.

Sub-s. (3). In dismissing an application for an order directing the calling of a general meeting, Buckland J. observed that the section was not intended to enable the Court to make an order which would excuse persons responsible for failure to call a general meeting from the consequences of their omission 5.

As to general meetings generally, see notes to ss. 77, 78, 79, 81 and regs. 45 to 70 of Table A.

(c) an abstract of the receipts of the company and of the payments made thereout up to a date within seven days of the date of the report, exhibiting under distinctive headings the receipts of the company from shares and debentures and other sources, the payments made thereout, and particulars concerning the balance remaining in hand, and an account or estimate of the preliminary expenses of the company showing separately any commission or discount paid on the issue or sale of shares ;

(d) the names, addresses and descriptions of the directors, auditors, managing agents and managers, if any, and secretary of the company and the changes, if any, which have occurred since the date of the incorporation ;

(e) the particulars of any contract, the modification of which is to be submitted to the meeting for its approval, together with the particulars of the modification or proposed modification ;

(f) the extent to which underwriting contracts, if any, have been carried out ;

(g) the arrears, if any, due on calls from directors, managing agents and managers ; and

(h) the particulars of any commission or brokerage paid or to be paid in connection with the issue or sale of shares to any director, managing agent or manager or a partner of the managing agent if the managing agent is a firm or if the managing agent is a private company a director thereof.

(4) The statutory report shall, so far as it relates to the shares allotted by the company, and to the cash received in respect of such shares and to the receipts and payments of the company, be certified as correct by the auditors of the company.

(5) The directors shall cause a copy of the statutory report certified as required by this section to be delivered to the registrar for registration forthwith after the sending thereof to the members of the company.

(6) The directors shall cause a list showing the names, descriptions and addresses of the members of the company, and the number of shares held by them respectively, to be produced at the commencement of the meeting, and to remain open and accessible to any member of the company during the continuance of the meeting.

(7) The members of the company present at the meeting shall be at liberty to discuss any matter relating to the formation of the company or arising out of the statutory report, whether previous notice has been given or not, but no resolution of which notice has not been given in accordance with the articles may be passed.

(8) The meeting may adjourn from time to time, and at any adjourned meeting any resolution of which notice has been given in accordance with the articles, either before or subsequently to the former meeting, may be passed, and the adjourned meeting shall have the same powers as an original meeting.

(9) If a petition is presented to the Court in manner provided by Part V for winding up the company on the ground of default in filing the statutory report or in holding the statutory meeting, the Court may, instead of directing that the company be wound up, give directions for the statutory report to be filed or a meeting to be held, or make such other order as may be just.

(10) In the event of any default in complying with the provisions of this section every director of the company who is guilty of or who knowingly and wilfully authorises or permits the default shall be liable to a fine not exceeding five hundred rupees.

(11) This section shall not apply to a private company.

Amendment.

By the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936 this section has been substituted for the original s. 77. It follows generally the lines of s. 113 of the English Act of 1929. It extends the obligation to hold a statutory general meeting to all companies, other than private companies, having a share capital. In sub-s. (1) "not less than one month" has been added. In sub-s. (2) "twenty-one days" has been substituted for "ten days." In sub-s. (3) further requirements have been added by clauses (f), (g) and (h) and in cl. (d) the managing agents have been included. Provision has also been introduced authorising certification of the statutory report by the chairman of the directors. Under the old section the private companies were exempted only from forwarding and filing the statutory report with the registrar; but under the new section the exemption is extended to all the provisions of this section. The original section 77 was in the these terms:—

Statutory meeting of company.

77. (1) Every company limited by shares and registered after the commencement of this Act shall, within a period of six months from the date at which the company is entitled to commence business, hold a general meeting of the members of the company, which shall be called the statutory meeting.

(2) The directors shall, at least ten days before the day on which the meeting is held, forward a report (in this Act called "the statutory report") to every member of the company and to every other person entitled under this Act to receive it.

(3) The statutory report shall be certified by not less than two directors of the company or, where there are less than two directors, by the sole director and shall state—

(a) the total number of shares allotted, distinguishing shares allotted as fully or partly paid up otherwise than in cash, and stating in the case of shares partly paid up the extent to which they are so paid up, and in either case the consideration for which they have been allotted;

(b) the total amount of cash received by the company in respect of all the shares allotted distinguished as aforesaid;

(c) an abstract of the receipts of the company whether from its share capital or from debentures, and of the payments made thereout, up to a date within seven days of the date of the report, exhibiting under distinctive headings the receipts of the company from shares and debentures and other sources, the payments made thereout and particulars concerning the balance remaining in hand and an account or estimate of the preliminary expenses of the company;

(d) the names, addresses and descriptions of the directors, auditors (if any), managers (if any) and secretary of the company;

(e) the particulars of any contract, the modification of which is to be submitted to the meeting for its approval, together with the particulars of the modification or proposed modification.

(4) The statutory report shall, so far as it relates to the shares allotted by the company and to the cash received in respect of such shares and to the receipts and payments of the company on capital account, be certified as correct by the auditors (if any) of the company.

(5) The directors shall cause a copy of the statutory report, certified as by this section required, to be filed with the registrar forthwith after the sending thereof to the members of the company.

(6) Every director of the company who knowingly and wilfully authorises or permits a default in complying with the provisions of sub-section (2) or sub-section (5) shall be liable to a fine not exceeding twenty rupees for every day during which the default continues.

(7) The directors shall cause a list showing the names, descriptions and addresses of the members of the company, and the number of shares held by them respectively, to be produced at the commencement of the meeting, and to remain open and accessible to any member of the company during the continuance of the meeting.

(8) The members of the company present at the meeting shall be at liberty to discuss any matters relating to the formation of the company, or arising out of the statutory report, whether previous notice has been given or not, but no resolution of which notice has not been given in accordance with the articles may be passed.

(9) The meeting may adjourn from time to time, and at any adjourned meeting any resolution of which notice has been given in accordance with the articles, either before or subsequently to the former meeting, may be passed, and the adjourned meeting shall have the same powers as an original meeting.

(10) If a petition is presented to the Court in manner provided by Part V for winding up the company on the ground of default in filing the statutory report or in holding the statutory meeting, the Court may, instead of directing that the company be wound up, give directions for the statutory report to be filed or a meeting to be held, or make such other order as may be just.

(11) The provisions of this section as to the forwarding and filing of the statutory report shall not apply in the case of a private company.

The notice convening the meeting should state that it is to be the "statutory meeting [1].

For the circumstances under which a compulsory winding up order may be passed for failing to file the statutory report with the registrar, see the case noted below [2] and s. 162 cl. (ii).

Sub-s. (10). See notes to sub-s. (5) of s. 32 ante.

Calling of extraordinary general meeting on requisition.

78. (1) Notwithstanding anything in the articles, the directors of a company which has a share capital shall, on the requisition of the holders of not less than one-tenth of the issued share capital of the company upon which all calls or other sums then due have been paid, forthwith proceed to call an extraordinary general meeting of the company.

(2) The requisition must state the objects of the meeting, and must be signed by the requisitionists and deposited at the registered office of the company, and may consist of several documents in like form, each signed by one or more requisitionists.

(3) If the directors do not proceed within twenty-one days from the date of the requisition being so deposited to cause a meeting to be called, the requisitionists, or a majority of them in value, may themselves call the meeting, but in either case any meeting so called shall be held within three months from the date of the deposit of the requisition.

(4) Any meeting called under this section by the requisitionists shall be called in the same manner, as nearly as possible, as that in which meetings are to be called by directors.

(5) Any reasonable expenses incurred by the requisitionists by reason of the failure of the directors duly to convene a meeting shall be repaid to the requisitionists by the company, and any sum so repaid shall be retained by the company out of any sums due or to become due from the company by way of fees or other remuneration for their services to such of the directors as were in default.

Amendment.

By the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936, sub-s. (4) of the original section has been omitted, sub-s. (5) has been re-numbered as sub-s. (4) and the new sub-s. (5) has been added. The reason for omission of sub-s. (4) is that under the new definition a special resolution [vide s. 81 (2)] is not required to be confirmed at another meeting. The new sub-s (5) reproduces cl. (5) of s. 114 of the English Act of 1929. It provides for compensation to the requisitionists and a penalty for refusing to hold the meeting. The old sub-s. (4) ran as follows :

---

[1] Gardner v. Iredale [1912] 1 Ch. 700.

[2] Kent Outcrop Coal Co. [1912] W. N. 26.

(4) If at any such meeting a resolution requiring confirmation at another meeting is passed, the directors shall forthwith call a further extraordinary general meeting for the purpose of considering the resolution and, if thought fit, of confirming it as a special resolution and, if the directors do not call the meeting within seven days from the date of the passing of the first resolution, the requisitionists, or a majority of them in value, may themselves call the meeting.

"Articles."

It is very doubtful if a meeting which is valid under this section can be invalidated by an article 1. But there is nothing in the Act which requires that the articles must be rigid and may not provide for varying sets of circumstances 1.

Meaning of "requisition", and signing it.

The word "requisition" in sub-s. (2) means requisition signed by the holders of not less than one-tenth of the issued capital for the time being. The one-tenth referred to is that part of the issued share capital upon which all calls &c. have been paid, and not one-tenth of the issued share capital the holders of which one-tenth have paid all calls &c. 2.

The requisition in the case of joint holders of shares must be signed by all the holders 3. It seems that the preference shareholders may join in demanding a meeting, although they may not be entitled to vote at the meeting 3.

Date of requisition.

In case of calling a meeting on requisition, there is no presumption in law that the requisition is received on the date it bears 1.

What is "like from."

A number of resolutions in the following form were deposited at the registered office of a company : "We the undersigned hereby request you to call an extraordinary general meeting of the shareholders for the purpose of considering the reconstruction of the board and resolutions concerning the directorate and officers of the company." Other requisitions were deposited in the same form except that at the end there were added the words "in addition to the affairs of the company in general." It was held that these requisitions were in "like form" and that they sufficiently stated the objects for which the requisitionists desired to have the meeting called 2.

Secretary's power.

The secretary however cannot, on receipt of the requisition, summon a meeting without the sanction of the board 4.

If the directors convene a meeting to consider part only of the specified matters, the requisitionists may ignore it and call their own meeting 5.

Directors' duties and rights.

The directors have a duty as well as a right to circularize the members for the purpose of advising them as to the wisdom of any proposed resolution and may use the company's money for this purpose or for procuring proxies in their own favour 6.

Notice.

The notice of an extraordinary general meeting must disclose all facts necessary to enable the shareholder to determine whether he should attend the meeting, and the pecuniary interest of a director in a special resolution to be

As to general meetings generally, see ss. 76, 77, 79 and 81 and regs. 45 to 70 of Table A.

79. (1) The following provisions shall have effect with respect to meetings of a company other than a private company not being a subsidiary of a public company and the procedure thereat, notwithstanding any provision made in the articles of the company in this behalf :—

Provisions as to meetings and votes.

(a) a meeting of a company other than a meeting for the passing of a special resolution may be called by not less than fourteen days' notice in writing ; but with the consent of all the members entitled to receive notice of some particular meeting that meeting may be convened by such shorter notice and in such manner as those members may think fit ;

(b) notice of the meeting of a company with a statement of the business to be transacted at the meeting shall be served on every member in the manner in which notices are required to be served by Table A and for the purpose of this clause the expression 'Table A' means that table as for the time being in force ; but the accidental omission to give notice to, or the non-receipt of notice by, any member shall not invalidate the proceedings at any meeting ;

(c) five members present in person or by proxy, or the chairman of the meeting, or any member or members holding not less than one-tenth of the issued capital which carries voting rights shall be entitled to demand a poll : Provided that in the case of a private company if not more than seven members are personally present, one member, and if more than seven members are personally present, two members shall be entitled to demand a poll ;

(d) an instrument appointing a proxy, if in the form set out in regulation 67 of Table A, shall not be questioned on the ground that it fails to comply with any special requirements specified for such instruments by the articles ; and

(e) any shareholder whose name is entered in the register of shareholders of the company shall enjoy the same rights and be subject to the same liabilities as all other shareholders of the same class.

(2) The following provisions shall have effect in so far as the articles of the company do not make other provision in that behalf :—

(a) two or more members holding not less than one-tenth of the total share capital paid up or, if the company has not a share capital, not less than five per cent. in number of the members of the company may call a meeting ;

(b) in the case of a private company two members and in the case of any other company five members personally present shall be a quorum ;

(c) any member elected by the members present at a meeting may be chairman thereof ;

(d) in the case of a company originally having a share capital, every member shall have one vote in respect of each share or each hundred rupees of stock held by him, and in any other case every member shall have one vote ;

(e) on a poll votes may be given either personally or by proxy ;

(f) the instrument appointing a proxy shall be in writing under the hand of the appointor or of his attorney duly authorised in writing, or if the appointor is a corporation, either under seal or under the hand of an officer or an attorney duly authorised ; and

(g) a proxy must be a member of the company.

(3) If for any reason it is impracticable to call a meeting of a company in any manner in which meetings of that company may be called or to conduct the meeting of the company in manner prescribed by the articles or this Act, the Court may, either of its own motion or on the application of any director of the company or of any member of the company who would be entitled to vote at the meeting, order a meeting of the company to be called, held and conducted in such manner as the Court thinks fit, and where any such order is given may give such ancillary or consequential directions as it thinks expedient, and any meeting called, held and conducted in accordance with any such order shall for all purposes be deemed to be a meeting of the company duly called , held and conducted.

This section has been substituted for the original s. 79 by the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936. It is based on s. 115 of the English Act of the 1929, but whereas that section allows its provisions being overridden by the articles, the section here makes the provisions of sub-s. (1) incapable of variation. For effect of this new section see Introduction. The old s. 79 was in these terms :

Provisions as to meetings and votes.

79. In default of, and subject to, any regulations in the articles,—

(i) a meeting of a company may be called by fourteen days' notice in writing, served on every member in manner in which notices are required to be served by Table A in the First Schedule ;

(ii) five members may call a meeting ;
(iii) any person elected by the members present at a meeting may be chairman thereof ; and (iv) every member shall have one vote.

Meaning of "fourteen days."

Sub-s. (1). "Fourteen days" means fourteen clear days between the day on which the members would receive the notice in ordinary course of post and the day of the meeting [1].

Insufficiency of notice.

When the notice convening a meeting is insufficient, the business, in the absence of a special provision in the articles, cannot be validly transacted, and the directors elected at the meeting are not directors [2]. A shareholder who by his conduct shows that he knew the real effect of or work to be transacted at a meeting, cannot complain of the notice on the ground of insufficiency [3].

What the notice should contain.

Special notice should be given of a resolution involving pecuniary advantage to a director [4]. A notice omitting to state the particulars of the advantage is insufficient and the consequent resolutions are bad [5]. But in the case noted below Cotton L. J. observed : "I do not think that the notice calling a meeting ought to be treated very critically inorder to see whether we cannot pick out some defect in it" [6].

As to notices generally, see notes to s. 76 and reg. 49 of Table A.

For the manner in which notices are required to be served see regs. 112 to 116 of Table A.

Effect of irregularity in procedure.

Irregularity in the procedure at a meeting of shareholders is not a matter for interference by the Court, but for a majority of shareholders to deal with [7]. A Court will interfere only if the rights of the shareholders are infringed or if a case of fraud or ultra vires action is made out [8].

Shareholders' right to speak.

A shareholder is not entitled to speak at a meeting as much as he pleases, but has a right to be heard in reasonable terms for a reasonable time [8]. As to whether the denial of this right vitiates the resolution, the proper test is to consider the facts and circumstances of each case [9].

Point of order.

A point of order which is a request to the chairman to hold that the meeting is not competent to consider and confirm an arrangement contained in the resolution and which is long enough to form a decent speech against the resolution is properly rejected as a point of order, as it is for the shareholders to consider whether to accept or reject the resolution [8].

Amendments can be allowed ; but it must depend upon the nature of the resolution and the nature of the amendment, whether it could be or should be allowed by the chairman 1. Any proper amendment should be put to the meeting for consideration, and if the chairman rules out any such amendment, the resolution is liable to be set aside 2. But if an amendment, though in form an amendment, is really a counter proposal of a different nature involving either adjournment of the consideration of the resolution or rejection thereof or goes beyond the scope of the subject matter of the resolution, it should be ruled out 2.

Amendments.

Under sub-s. (2), cl. (d) every member of a company originally having a share capital shall have one vote in respect of each share or each Rs. 100 stock held by him. But under reg. 60 of Table A on a show of hands every member present in person shall have one vote.

Votes.

A point of order objecting to the validity of votes tendered for a resolution must be handed to the chairman before he commences to take the poll ; also it should be directed to the particular votes. It is futile for any member to raise a general objection without indicating the nature of the objection and without any attempt to particularize the votes objected to 2. The chairman may close the doors during the taking of the poll, if it is advisable under the circumstances of the case 1.

Objections.

When the plaintiff disputes the validity of votes recorded at a meeting, he is entitled to inspection of the documents concerned. But when such inspection will cause delay and when the plaintiff cannot show that the inspection would yield any result in his favour, refusal of inspection is not wrong so far as to merit reversal by the superior Court 2. For other cases relating to general meeting see notes to s. 76.

A general meeting can be called either by the directors in accordance with the provision of the articles of association, or by the shareholders on requisition, also in accordance with the articles. There is only one other way, viz., by a direction of the Court. Meeting called or held in any other way are not meetings of the company 3.

Meeting—how called.

80. A company which is a member of another company may, by resolution of the directors, authorise any of its officials or any other person to act as its representative at any meeting of that other company, and the person so authorised shall be entitled to exercise the same powers on behalf of the company which he represents as if he were an individual shareholder of that other company.

Representation of companies at meetings of other companies of which they are members.

A person appointed under this section as a representative can be taken into account in considering whether or not there is a quorum of shareholders present 4. A vote given by such a representative can be properly admitted by the chairman of the meeting on the evidence afforded by a copy of the authorizing resolution 5.

Extraordinary and special resolutions.

81. (1) A resolution shall be an extraordinary resolution when it has been passed by a majority of not less than three-fourths of such members entitled to vote as are present in person or by proxy (where proxies are allowed) at a general meeting of which notice specifying the intention to propose the resolution as an extraordinary resolution has been duly given.

(2) A resolution shall be a special resolution when it has been passed by such a majority as is required for the passing of an extraordinary resolution and at a general meeting of which not less than twenty-one days' notice specifying the intention to propose the resolution as a special resolution has been duly given :

Provided that, if all the members entitled to attend and vote at any such meeting so agree, a resolution may be proposed and passed as a special resolution at a meeting of which less than twenty-one days' notice has been given.

(3) At any meeting at which an extraordinary resolution or a special resolution is submitted to be passed a declaration of the chairman on a show of hands that the resolution is carried shall, unless a poll is demanded, be conclusive evidence of the fact without proof of the number or proportion of the votes recorded in favour of or against the resolution.

(4) At any meeting at which an extraordinary resolution or a special resolution is submitted to be passed a poll may be demanded. * * *

(5) In a case where, if a poll is demanded, it may in accordance with the articles be taken in such manner as the chairman may direct ; it may, if the chairman so directs, be taken at the meeting at which it is demanded.

(6) When a poll is demanded in accordance with this section, in computing the majority on the poll, reference shall be had to the number of votes to which each member is entitled by the articles of the company, or under this Act.

(7) For the purposes of this section notice of a meeting shall be deemed to be duly given and the meeting to be duly held when the notice is given and the meeting held in manner provided by the articles, or under this Act.

Amendment.

By the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936, the new sub-s. (2) has been substituted for the old one, in sub-ss. (3) and (4) for the words "is submitted to be passed or a special resolution is submitted to be passed or confirmed" after the words "extraordinary resolution," the words in italics have been substituted, in sub-s. (4) after the words "a poll may be demanded," the words "by three persons for the time being entitled according to the articles to vote, unless the articles of the company require a demand by such number of such persons, not in any case exceeding five, as may be specified in the articles" have been omitted, and at the end of sub-ss. (6) and (7) the words in italics have been added. These amendments are on the lines of s. 117 of the English Act of 1929. The new sub-s. (2) abolishes the necessity for the confirmation of a special resolution by a second general meeting, but requires 21 days' notice to be given of the meeting at which the special resolution is passed.

The old sub-s. (2) was as follows :

> (2) A resolution shall be a special resolution when it has been—
> (a) passed in manner required for the passing of an extraordinary resolution ; and
> (b) confirmed by a majority of such members entitled to vote as are present in person or by proxy (where proxies are allowed) at a subsequent general meeting, of which notice has been duly given, and held after an interval of not less than fourteen days, nor more than one month, from the date of the first meeting.

The alterations in sub-ss. (3) and (4) have been necessitated by the new definition of special resolution.

Where a special resolution is necessary.

A special resolution is necessary for the exercise of the following powers : to change the company's name [s. 11 sub-s. (4)] ; to change the place of its registered office from one province to another or alter its objects as stated in the memorandum of association (s. 12) ; to alter or add to its articles of association (s. 20) ; to reorganize its share capital (s. 54) ; to reduce the share capital in any way (s. 55 and s. 66) ; to turn an existing liability on shares into a reserve liability (s. 69) ; to alter the memorandum of association so as to make the liability of the directors or of any director unlimited (s. 71) ; to assign office by a director (s. 86-B) ; to sanction additional remuneration of a managing agent (s. 87-C) ; to appoint inspectors to investigate the affairs of the company (s. 142) ; to initiate on its own account a winding up by the Court [s. 162. cl. (i)] ; to wind up voluntarily [s. 203, cl. (2)] ; to confer authority on the liquidator in a voluntary winding up to enter into any arrangement with a transferee company (s. 208-C) and to alter the form of constitution of a company registered under Part VIII by substituting a memorandum and articles for a deed of settlement (s. 267).

Taking powers to pass.

A company which had not the power by its articles to reduce its capital, could take the power by passing a special resolution and could exercise the power at the second meeting for confirming the resolution 1. But a confirmatory meeting is no longer necessary.

Where an extraordinary resolution is necessary.

An extraordinary resolution is necessary for the following purposes : to remove a director (s. 86-G.) ; to wind up voluntarily when the company cannot by reason of its liabilities continue its business [s. 203, sub-s. (3)] ; to sanction an arrangement between a company and its credirors (s. 215) and to sanction certain acts to be done by the liquidator in a voluntary winding up (s. 212).

Validity of special resolution.

A special resolution passed in conformity with the provisions of this section will be a valid one, even though the articles of the company contain further requirements which have not been complied with[1]. It should be remembered that under the old sub-s. (2) there must be an interval of not less than fourteen days and not more than one month between the two meetings[2], that a quorum was essential[3]. The voting is in the first instance by a show of hands[4], proxies are only to be counted on a poll[5]. Under the old sub-s. (2) at the second meeting no amendment could be put[6]. "Fourteen-days" meant fourteen clear days[2].

Under the new sub-s. (2) the period of "not less than twenty-one days' notice" means a period of not less than 21 clear days, exclusive of the day of service of the notice and exclusive of the day on which the meeting is to be held[7].

Where a confirmatory meeting was convened for a date within the prescribed period and being duly held was adjourned to a date beyond the prescribed period, a confirmation at such an adjourned meeting was held to be valid on the ground that the adjourned meeting was a continuation of the original meeting[8].

A meeting summoned to confirm a special resolution to wind up might appoint a different liquidator from the one named in the notice[9]. It was not necessary that the resolution at the first meeting should follow the exact terms of the notice[10].

Votes, how taken.

Unless a poll is demanded, the vote is by show of hands, and on such a show the hands are to be counted and not the votes conferred by the shares represented[11]. The ruling of the chairman that a resolution has been passed by show of hands cannot be challenged, if not challenged at the time[12]. But if the chairman's declaration itself contains intrinsic evidence that it is wrong, as for instance, where the chairman states that he has taken proxies into account no poll having been demanded, it will not be conclusive[13]. It has been held in England that the declaration of the chairman under s. 51 of the Act of 1862[14], that the special resolution has, on a show of hands, been carried is not conclusive evidence of the fact so as to preclude a shareholder from disputing the validity of the resolution by legal proceedings on the ground, for instance, that it has not been carried by the statutory majority[15]. For the number of members who can demand a poll see the new s. 79, (1) (c).

Apart from fraud the chairman's declaration is conclusive 1, unless in making it he states the figures for and against and they show that he erroneously declared the resolution as duly passed 2. The last noted case has been distinguished by Blackwell, J. who has held that the chairman's declaration on a show of hands is conclusive and the minutes of the meeting are not admissible to prove the contrary 3.

Rights of chairman at common law.

At common law, and where the taking of a poll is not governed by statute or special rule, the chairman is the proper authority to fix the time and place for the taking of a poll, and a poll is properly and correctly taken immediately after the termination of the meeting 4. The same rule applies to meetings of registered companies, unless the articles prescribe some other procedure. The object of a poll is to ascertain the true sense of the meeting, and it is not to give the absent members a further opportunity of voting, unless a contrary intention is expressly or impliedly to be gathered from the articles of association. There is no presumption for construing a doubtful article in the latter sense 5.

The chairman must not declare that the poll shall be taken in any way inconsistent with the articles, e. g., by voting papers, because personal attendance of the voter or his proxy is necessary 6. When the poll is taken, each person voting signs a paper "for" or "against" the resolution and proxies are counted 7.

Demand for poll.

If after rightful demand of a poll the poll is not taken, the resolution becomes void 8. A poll is a mere enlargement of the meeting at which it is demanded 9. If there are several resolutions before the meeting, they must not be put en bloc : each resolution must be put separately 10.

Cl. (5) is not in the English Act.

Notice of meeting.

Where an extraordinary resolution is proposed to be passed, the notice of the general meeting must not merely indicate, but must actually specify, the intention to pass the resolution as an extraordinary resolution 11 ; and the exact resolution must be set out in the notice 12. But reasonable amendments within the scope of the notice are permissible.

In the case of a special resolution the notice must state that it will be a special resolution 13. The notice must give sufficiently full and frank disclosure of the facts and the effect of the resolution. If that is not done, the resolution is inoperative and not binding upon the company 14.

So that the two meetings required for passing a special resolution under the old sub-s. (2) might be convened by one notice, the articles of many companies provided as follows:—"Whenever it is intended to pass a special resolution, the two meetings may be convened by one and the same notice and it shall be no objection that the notice only convenes the second meeting contingently on the resolution being passed by the requisite majority at the first meeting." In such a case one notice convening the two meetings was valid 1. But a conditional notice was bad 2. The notice might however state that the second meeting would be held in any case unless notice to the contrary was given 3.

Power to convene the two meetings by one notice.

A notice of two meetings to considar seriatim two alternative resolutions (one at each meeting) was not rendered invalid where there was an express provision that the second meeting would be held in the event of the first resolution not being passed at the first meeting 4.

At the first meeting amendments within the notice might be made, but the resolution confirmed at the second meeting must be in the same form as that passed at the first meeting 5. Clause (a) of old sub-section (2) referred only to the passing of the resolution, and not to the calling together of the meeting for the purpose of passing it 6.

Amendments.

It is competent for all shareholders acting together to waive the formalities required by this section as to notice of intention to propose a resolution as an extraordinary resolution 7. A company however cannot by an ordinary resolution or by conduct make good an invalid special resolution, nor is it an objection to an action by a single shareholder to say that the company ought to be plaintiff on the ground that it can ratify the resolution, for this is not the case 8.

Shareholders' right to waive notice.

Sub-s. (2). Where a meeting held for the purpose of confirming a special resolution was adjourned for bona fide reasons to a date more than a month from the date of the meeting at which the extraordinary resolution was passed and the resolution was confirmed at the adjourned meeting, it was a valid special resolution; for an adjourned meeting is a continuation of the previous meeting 9. The new sub-s. (2) came into force on 15th January, 1937. So where a meeting for passing a special resolution was called by 7 days' notice according to the articles of the company fixing a date before 15th January, 1937 but the meeting on objection by some shareholders was adjourned to a date after the 15th January, 1937, the question was whether the resolution passed was a valid special resolution. It was held by the Peshwar Court that it was. The first meeting was regularly called because 7 days' notice was all that was required before the amendment came into operation. The second meeting was clearly a continuation of the first meeting which was adjourned. The fact that the section was amended in the meantime had no effect on the second meeting so far as the procedure for convening it was concerned. The resolution passed at that meeting was therefore in order. But as the old section was no longer law when the second meeting was held, the decision passed at that meeting became final and no further confirmatory meeting was necessary 1.

Notice by advertisement. In the case of notice by advertisement, the date on which the advertisement appears is the date from which the days are to be counted 2. The date on which the notice is given is excluded 3.

Chairman's declaration. Sub-s. (3). The conclusiveness of the declaration of the chairman contemplated by this sub-section attaches to the declaration where the chairman does not find by his declaration the figures for or against the resolution. But where he finds the figures and erromeously in point of law holds that the resolution has been duly passed, the resolution cannot be held to have been passed according to law 4.

Show of hands. In such meetings the declaration by the chairman of the result of a show of hands is an essential preliminary basis for all subsequent procedure including the demand for and the taking of the poll 5. In the last cited case Lord Blanesburgh observed : "It is true that the chairman at the deferred shareholders' meeting said that only deferred shareholders were to hold up their hands. No one however can say, the chairman perhaps least of all, whether all of the shareholders present, not being deferred shareholders, were obedient to his command.........A show of hands is the constitutional method of declaring the will of a meeting. It stands as the resolution of the meeting, unless the declaration of the chairman that the proposed resolution is thereby carried or lost is subsequently displaced by the result of a poll thereafter duly demanded and taken. But from the very nature of the case there can, I suggest, be no valid demand for a poll unless there has been a valid show of hands."

Section is self-contained. Save and except in the matter of notice as stated in sub-s. (7), this section seems to be self-contained as regards proceedings of the general meetings, and independent of any regulations in the Table A or other articles of association, but is subject to the provisions of the new s. 79. For the provisions for notice of meeting see the new s. 79 (1) (a) and (b).

Registration and copies of special and extraordinary resolutions. 82. (1) A copy of every special and extraordinary resolution shall, within fifteen days from the passing thereof be printed or type-written and duly certified under the signature of an officer of the company and filed with the registrar who shall record the same.

embodied in or annexed to every copy of the articles issued after the date of the resolution.

(3) Where articles have not been registered, a copy of every special resolution shall be forwarded in print to any member at his request, on payment of one rupee or such less sum as the company may direct.

(4) If a company makes default in so filing with the registrar a copy of a special or extraordinary resolution, it shall be liable to a fine not exceeding twenty rupees for every day during which the default continues.

(5) If a company makes default in embodying in or annexing to a copy of its articles or in forwarding in print to a member when required by this section a copy of a special resolution, it shall be liable to a fine not exceeding ten rupees for each copy in respect of which default is made.

(6) Every officer of a company who knowingly and wilfully authorises or permits any default by the company in complying with the requirements of this section shall be liable to the like penalty as is imposed by this section on the company for that default.

Amendment.

By the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936, in sub-s. (1) for the words, "the confirmation of the special resolution or the passing of the extraordinary resolution, as the case may be" after the words "fifteen days from" the words "the passing thereof" have been substituted, and after the word "typewritten" the words in italics have been inserted.

Registrar's powers.

In registering the alteration of articles under this section the registrar has a discretion similar to that which he has under s. 22 in registering the memorandum and articles of association. So where a company by altering its articles of association proposes to carry on a business which amounts to a lottery, the registrar can refuse to register such alteration. It is better to stop it at the threshold rather than to allow it to proceed on the lines and then wind it up as an illegal company after several persons have put their money into the scheme 1.

Minutes of proceedings of general meetings and of its directors.

83. (1) Every company shall cause minutes of all proceedings of general meetings and of its directors to be entered in books kept for that purpose.

(2) Any such minute, if purporting to be signed by the chairman of the meeting at which the proceedings were had, or by the chairman of the next succeeding meeting, shall be evidence of the proceedings.

(3) Until the contrary is proved, every general meeting of the company or meeting of directors in respect of the proceedings whereof minutes have been so made shall be deemed to have been duly called and held, and all proceedings had thereat to have been duly had, and all appointments of directors or liquidators shall be deemed to be valid.

(4) The books containing the minutes of proceedings of any general meeting of a company held after the commencement of the Indian Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936, shall be kept at the registered office of the company and shall during business hours (subject to such reasonable restrictions as the company may by its articles or in general meeting impose so that no less than two hours in each day be allowed for inspection) be open to the inspection of any member without charge.

(5) Any member shall at any time after seven days from the meeting be entitled to be furnished within seven days after he has made a request in that behalf to the company with a copy of any minutes referred to in sub-section (4) at a charge not exceeding six annas for every hundred words.

(6) If any inspection required under sub-section (4) of this section is refused or if any copy required under sub-section (5) of this section is not furnished within the time specified in sub-section (5) the company and every officer of the company who is knowingly and wilfully in default shall be liable in respect of each offence to a fine not exceeding twenty-five rupees and to [a further fine not exceeding twenty-five rupees] for every day during which the default continues.

(7) In the case of any such refusal or default, the Court may by order compel an immediate inspection of the books in respect of all proceedings of general meetings or direct that the copies required shall be sent to the persons requiring them.

Sub-ss. (4) to (7) have been added by the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936. They reproduce the provisions of s. 121 of the English Act of 1929. As to their effect see Introduction. In sub-s. (6) the words within square brackets have been substituted for the words "a further fine to twenty-five rupees" by the Repealing and Amending Act XXXIV of 1939 which received the assent of the Governor-General on 28th September, 1939.

Amendment.

The new sub-s. (4) provides that the minutes of proceedings of general meetings held after the commencement of the Amending Act of 1936, i.e., 15th January, 1937 must be kept at the registered office of the company and shall be open to inspection of any member without charge. The new sub-s. (5) gives the members a right to obtain copies of such minutes on payment of the charges mentioned therein. The new sub-s. (6) lays down the consequences of refusal or default by the company, and the new sub-s. (7) gives the aggrieved member a right to apply to the Court for an injunction to comply with the requirements of sub-ss. (4) and (5).

As to the right of inspection under the common law and the right to take copies of the minutes, see Rameswar v. Calcutta Wheat & Seed Assn. 1, and notes to regulation 105 of Table A post.

Minutes.

"Directors ought", as observed by Kekewich J., "to place on record either in formal minutes or otherwise the purport and effect of their deliberations and conclusions; and if they do this insufficiently or inaccurately they cannot reasonably complain of inferences different from those which they allege to be right" 2.

Entries made in a number of loose leaves fastened together in two covers are not admissible in evidence as minutes within the meaning of this section. In such a physical condition at any moment, if any one wishes to do so, he can take any number of leaves out and substitute any number of other leaves. It is a thing with which any one disposed to be dishonest can easily tamper. Further, it is not a book within the meaning of the section 3.

It is usual to "confirm" the minutes of the previous board meeting. The word "confirm" sometimes means merely to verify. It is commonly used in that sense at the meetings of public bodies which confirm the minutes of the last meeting, not meaning thereby that they have given them force but merely that they declare them to be accurate 4.

The adoption of the minutes at a subsequent meeting of directors does not make those taking part in such adoption responsible for the acts done at the earlier meeting 5.

After the chairman has signed the minutes, they cannot be altered 6.

The minutes of a meeting are not the exclusive evidence of what took place at the meeting, and an unrecorded resolution may be proved aliunde 7. If the books of a company show the record of a transaction, e.g., forfeiture of shares, the Court will presume that such a resolution has been passed 8. The minutes are however prima facie evidence of what happened at the meeting 9. Courts will incline more in favour of validity of the proceedings, if facts invalidating the proceedings are not established beyond doubt 9. A case of fraud or overbearing influence is necessary for interference by the Court 10.

The minutes, to be valid, must be made within a reasonable time 11. The directors cannot make any disposition of the minute-book which is inconsistent with the articles 12.

Resolution.

The articles of association often provide that a letter signed by all the directors shall have the same effect as a resolution of the board. In the absence of such a provision, the directors cannot act without a meeting 13.

Position and duties of secretary.

It is usually the duty of the secretary to prepare the minutes of the proceedings of the general as well as the directors' meetings. He may be regarded as a servant of the company[1]. It was at one time thought that a master was not liable for the wrong of his servant or agent, if it was not committed for the master's benefit[12]; but it has afterwards been held by the House of Lords that the language of Willes J. in Barwick v. English Joint Stock Bank[2] has been misunderstood ; the true principle is, their Lordships declare, that a principal is liable for the acts of his agent acting within the scope of his authority, whether the fraud is committed for the benefit of the principal or for the benefit of the agent[3]. "If the agent," as observed by Lord Loreburn L. C., "commits the fraud purporting to act in the course of business such as he was authorized, or held out as authorized, to transact on account of his principal, then the latter may be held liable for it. And if the whole judgment of Willes J., be looked at instead of one sentence alone, he does not say otherwise"[4]. The general rule and the reason therefor were however correctly laid down by Willes J., in the above case : "The general rule is that the master is answerable for every such wrong of the servant or agent as is committed in the course of the service and for the master's benefit, though no express command or privity of the master be proved...It is true he has not authorized the particular act, but he has put the agent in his place to do that class of acts, and he must be answerable for the manner in which the agent has conducted himself in doing the business which it was the act of his master to place him in"[5]. But where a secretary forged the signature of directors to a cheque which was paid by the bank, the company was held entitled to repudiate the cheque and recover the amount from the bank[6].

A statement in the articles of association that a certain person shall be the secretary or other officer of the company will not be treated as a contract[7]. Such person should see that the appointment be made by a resolution or by an agreement duly executed after incorporation of the company.

The secretary being a servant of the company is precluded from accepting presents or bonuses from the promoters. If he does so, he will have to account for them[8].

The secretary is the agent of the company through whom the clerical work is done. He must obey the orders of the directors and give effect to their resolutions by issuing notices, sending circulars, writing letters and the like. He will also prepare the agenda for the directors' meetings and general meetings of the company, and usually write up minutes either from his own notes or from those of the chairman of the meeting. He will conduct the ordinary correspondence of the company and answer enquiries or direct clerks to do so[9]. But it is no part of his duties to answer enquires about moneys owing from the company or to make representations on behalf of the company in any matters except those that fall directly within the scope of the company's business [1]. If an agent does an act within the scope of his authority, it binds the principal even if the motive was wrongful and the act was done with a view to his private advantage provided the other party has no knowledge of the wrong [2].

The duty of the secretary includes certifying transfers and receiving and registering notices on behalf of the company. But where the same man is the secretary to two companies, knowledge acquired by him for one company is not notice to the other [3].

A secretary as such has no authority to bind the company by contract or to make representations as to the company's affairs, so as to induce people to take shares [4], or to register a transfer until it is passed by the company's directors [5]. He can certify a transfer, but if he does so fraudulently, the company will not be liable [6]. If a secretary give untrue answers to inquiries for his own private ends, the company will not be liable [7]. "A secretary is a mere servant ; his position is that he is to do what he is told and no person can assume that he has any authority to make representations binding on the company, nor can any one assume that statements made by him are necessarily to be accepted as trustworthy without further inquiry any more than in the case of a merchant it can be assumed that one who is only a clerk has authority to make representations io induce persons to enter into contracts" [8].

A secretary, unless authorized by the board of directors, cannot convene a general meeting [9], or strike a name off the register of members [10]. An act done by the secretary after mentioning the matter to some of the directors, but without any express approval of the directors and without a board meeting being held to consider the question, will not be considered the act of the directors [11].

A secretary who has in fact acted as a manager is liable for negligence in preparing balance sheets and accounts whereby he has caused dividend to be paid out of capital [12].

A secretary will be liable for misfeasance if he receives an improper commission [13], but he will not be personally liable for misapplication of the company's funds though he may have been aware of it [14].

The resolution to dismiss a secretary, even if defective for want of proper notice, is a matter within the powers of the company, and the secretary cannot treat it as void [15].

A secretary may be paid out of profits by contract [1].

If the secretary, having plenary powers under the articles to enter into a mortgage on behalf of the company, think it advisable to take direct sanction of the directors, but does not disclose to them his interest in the mortgage which he is bound to disclose, he cannot afterwards take shelter in the fact that he could himself have sanctioned the mortgage [2].

*Directors.

Directors obligatory.

83A. (1) Every company shall have at least three directors.

(2) This section shall not apply to a private company except a private company being a subsidiary company of a public company.

* This heading and sections 83A and 83B were inserted by s. 2 of Act XI of 1914. Sub. s. (1) has been substituted for the original sub-s. (1) and the words in italics have been added to sub-s. (2) by the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936. The original sub-s. (1) was as follows :

(1) Every company registered after the commencement of this Act shall have at least two directors.

Under the previous Acts it was not obligatory upon a company to have directors [3].

Number &c. of directors.

The number, appointment, powers and duties and the proceedings of the meetings of directors are regulated by the company's articles of association, and where the articles are not registered, by Table A in the First Schedule of the Act [4]. The section does not set any limit to the maximum number of directors of a company. The articles usually provide that until otherwise determined by a general meeting, the number of directors shall not be less than, say five, nor more than, say nine. In such cases it is open to the shareholders to vary the number of directors without altering the article itself [5].

True position of directors.

The true position of directors seems to be that of agents for the company with powers and duties of carrying on the whole of its business subject to the restrictions imposed by the articles and the statutory provisions [6]. But they are not agents for the shareholders [7].

Cozens-Hardy L. J. observed : "I do not think it true to say that the directors are agents. I think it more nearly true to say that they are in the position of managing partners appointed to fill that post by a mutual arrangement between all the shareholders" [8]. Upon a careful consideration it will appear that the directors are, strictly speaking, neither agents nor trustees for the company [9].

Directors are not trustees for third parties who have made contracts with the company[1]. They are however trustees for the company of their power of approving transfers, issuing and allotting shares and making calls[2]. But the directors are not trustees in the strict sense of the term as observed by Lord Justice James : "A trustee is a man who is the owner of property and deals with it as principal, as owner and as master, subject only to an equitable obligation to account to some persons to whom he stands in the relation of trustee and who are his cestui que trust. The same person may fill the office of director and also be trustee having property, but that is rare, exceptional and casual circumstance. The office of a director is that of a paid servant of the company. A director never enters into a contract for himself, but for his principal, that is, for the company of which he is a director and for whom he is acting. He cannot sue on such contracts, nor be sued on them (unless he exceeds his authority). This seems to me to be the broad distinction between trustees and directors"[3].

A director is not in the position of a trustee of his shares for the general body of shareholders, and under ordinary circumstances he may deal with them as freely as any other shareholder provided he does not part with his qualification. But he is a trustee of making calls for the general body of shareholders, and must not use it for his own benefit without regard to their interests[4].

A director or a managing director is not a servant of the company[5].

Director's fiduciary position.

Generally speaking a director stands in a fiduciary position to the company[6], and cannot retain a profit made by him[7], but the constitution of the company may permit him to do so[8] and even to override the wishes of the majority of the shareholders[9]. In any event he can exercise his individual rights as a corporator[10]. Directors are not trustees for individual shareholders, and in the absence of unfair dealing may buy shares from or sell shares to the members without giving them information relating to the prospects of the company known to them but not to the members[11]. If there is any misrepresentation in acquiring the shares or options over them, the directors may be trustees of the profit they make in the transaction[12]. Directors, who so use their powers as to obtain benefits for themselves at the expense of the other shareholders without informing them of the facts, can not be allowed to retain those benefits and must account for them to the company[13]. The law in this respect has been clearly laid down by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the following passages : "They view the transaction as one wholly detrimental to the interests of the old company. Moreover even if (contrary to their Lordships' opinion) some benefit did accrue to the old company from the transaction, the overriding fact remains that the old company (acting through its directors and not by its shareholders in general meeting) purported to apply its property for the benefit of those directors. In such a case it is well settled that the Court will treat the transaction as unenforceable, and refuse even to enquire whether the company has derived any benefit from it : and on that ground the company has not received the protection to which it is entitled. In Aberdeen Railway Co. v. Blakie [1854] 1 Macq. 365 Lord Cranworth, L. C. used the following language which seems appropriate to the present case :

"'This therefore brings us to the general question whether a director of a railway company is or is not precluded from dealing on behalf of the company with himself or with a firm in which he is a partner. The directors are a body to whom is delegated the duty of managing the general affairs of the company. A corporate body can only act by agents and it is of course the duty of those agents so to act as best to promote the interests of the corporation whose affairs they are conducting. Such agents have duties to discharge of a fiduciary nature towards their principal. And it s a rule of universal application, that no one, having such duties to discharge, shall be allowed to enter into engagements in which he has, or can have, a personal interest conflicting, or which may conflict, with the interests of those whom he is bound to protect. So strictly is this principle adhered to, that no question is allowed to be raised as to the fairness or unfairness of a contract so entered into............So inflexible is the rule that no inquiry on that subject is permitted............' "

"The language used by Atkin L. J. in Underwood v. Bank of Liverpool [1929] 1 K. B. 775 at p. 796 may well be cited in this connection : 'It was contended that the fact that Underwood was the sole director and practically the sole shareholder, gave him, in pursuance of the articles, actual authority. He was entrusted with all the powers of the company, the company can only act through its directors, and the directors or director, if only one, could do what they willed with the company's assets. If this means anything, it means that a board of directors, acting as such, have actual authority to defraud the company by using the company's assets to pay debts due to butchers or money-lenders by the individual directors. Such an act is quite outside the class of acts—management of the company's business—authorized to be done by the board. The directors, whether collectively or singly, have not actual authority to steal the company's goods' " 1. In the matter of disposal of shares, the directors are merely trustees for the company and if they dispose of the shares at a premium, they are liable to account to the company for the profits with interest. They will not be allowed to retain the profits even on the ground of the acquiescence of the shareholders to be inferred from the presumed knowledge of the share book 2. But directors are not trustees in whom the property of the company has become vested in trust for any specific purpose within the meaning of s. 10 of the Limitation Act 3. Although the position of directors differs from that of trustees in some respects, yet to the extent of their being entrusted with the moneys of the company, they are trustees and are jointly and severally liable for breach of trust 4. The assets of a company are entrusted to the directors to be applied to certain defined objects, and they are responsible as for a breach of trust, if they apply them to other objects 5.

If a director lends money to the company and becomes its creditor, the transaction is not a contract entered into between two independent persons. It is in the nature of a contract between the trustee and his cestui que trust. It is not therefore right that the director of an insolvent company about to go into liquidation should be allowed the privileged position of a secured creditor by merely discharging a small portion of the company's indebtedness[1]. A director is not entitled to recover money from the company, advanced at the request of its secretary, where the latter has no power to borrow on behalf of the company and where the request is not made or confirmed by a properly constituted meeting of the directors, even if the company derived some benefit[2].

Directors' powers.

If the directors act outside their powers but within those of the company, the members can ratify and make such act valid[3]. But if they act ultra vires the company, the members cannot ratify or acquiesce in such act[4], articles being a contract between the members inter se[5]. When a company has delegated its powers and duties to directors and there is a deadlock which prevents the directors fulfilling their duties, the company can then act[6]. A company cannot take the control of its affairs out of the hands of the directors and give powers to a committee except in the manner provided in the articles ; so, if there be no power to remove directors, the company will have to wait until the articles are altered or the obnoxious directors retire in due course[4]. "A company is an entity," observed Lord Justice Greer in a recent case, "distinct alike from its shareholders and its directors. Some of its powers may, according to its articles, be exercised by directors, certain other powers may be reserved for the shareholders in general meeting. If powers of management are vested in the directors, they and they alone can exercise these powers. The only way in which the general body of shareholders can control the exercise of the powers vested by the articles in the directors is by altering their articles, or if opportunity arises under the articles, by refusing to re-elect the directors of whose actions they disapprove. They cannot themselves usurp the power which by the articles are vested in the directors any more than the directors can usurp the powers vested by the articles in the general body of shareholders"[7].

The company is bound by contracts made by the directors acting within the scope of their authority, even if they are influenced by some improper motive or intention to derive profit for themselves[8]. The remedy of the company in such a case is against the directors[9]. If they act outside their powers, but within those of the company, the shareholders can ratify their action by an ordinary resolution[10]. It has been held that where an agent accepts or endorses a bill or note "per pro" the taker is bound to inquire as to the extent of the agent's authority ; but where the agent has such authority, his abuse of it does not affect a bona fide holder for value 1. A company is liable for all the acts done by its directors, even though unauthorized by it, provided such acts are within the apparent authority of the directors and not ultra vires of the company 2. Where by the articles the directors were directed forthwith to execute by affixing seal of the company to the scheduled agreement entered into with a firm, strangers to the company are entitled to assume that that direction has been carried out, and that as a consequence the firm is entitled to act as managing agents with the power conferred by the scheduled agreement 3. Where money had been paid to A by B in circumstances such that A by action could not have recovered moneys from B, but such that there is nothing unconscionable or improper in A, having been in fact paid, retaining the money, B cannot sue A to recover the amount so paid though not legally due by him 4.

Where one of the directors of a company acknowledged a debt of the company by signing his name and affixing a rubber stamp bearing the company's name and the word "director" appearing below his signature, but this director had no formal authority from the board, the acknowledgment however being in the ordinary course of business, it was held that such an acknowledgment was sufficient to save limitation within the meaning of s. 19 of the Limitation Act 5.

The general clause in the articles giving the directors powers of management and all the powers of the company which are not otherwise dealt with, cannot be construed ejusdem generis, but it is valid and effectual 6. The directors are the only persons who can deal with the matters thus assigned to them and their decision cannot be overruled by a general meeting of the shareholders (see note 4 of last page), unless the directors act in their own interest against the interest of the company 7. They should however communicate their policy to the shareholders and are bound to do so, if it is attacked by a member 8.

If a director sell a property, already his own, to the company at an enhanced price, the latter cannot claim the profits ; its remedy is to rescind the contract returning the property. But if that is impossible, it cannot claim either the profit or damages 9. Where the benefit of a contract belongs in equity to the company, the directors cannot validly use their voting power to vest it in themselves 10.

In the absence of fraud or oppression the votes of interested directors in general meeting are valid, and a minority cannot sue to set aside the transaction 11. But if the directors are seeking to appropriate to themselves the company's property, not even a resolution of the general meeting carried by their votes will protect them, and a single member can sue 12.

The directors are however the proper persons for instituting a suit and the company is the proper plaintiff in such an action 1. But effect should be given to the wishes of the majority of shareholders. When they desire that proceedings should be taken, an action may be commenced in the company's name as plaintiff by such majority, or even in case of urgency, by one or more shareholders who believe that they have the support of the majority and subsequently obtain the sanction of a resolution of a general meeting 2.

When it comes to the knowledge of the Court that a suit has been brought without the authority of the plaintiff named on the record, the action will be struck out and any order made in the course of the proceedings will be discharged 3.

The directors are not entitled to use their power of issuing shares for the purpose merely of retaining control of the company's affairs or defeating the wishes of the existing shareholders 4.

Where a director is a shareholder of another company, whether beneficially or as a trustee, he is precluded, without regard to the quantum of his holding, from dealing, on behalf of the company of which he is a director, with the other company, unless and so far as he is authorized by the articles 5. If the second company has notice of the irregularity, the first company may obtain rescission, even after completion, provided that rescission is still possible 5.

Limitation of powers.

Persons dealing with a company are deemed to have notice of such limitations of the powers of the directors or of the company as are contained in the memorandum or articles of association 6. So they cannot rely upon ignorance of the limitations 7. A person dealing with the directors must take the articles of association to be such as appear at the office of the registrar of companies 8.

Ultra vires acts of directors.

A company is not bound by acts ultra vires of its directors, unless such acts have been expressly ratified by all the shareholders, or unless all with knowledge or notice have acquiesced in what has been done 9. "To render valid", observed their Lordships of the Privy Council, "an act of the directors of a company which is ultra vires, the acquiscence of the shareholders must be of the same extent as the consent which would have given validity from the first, viz., the acquiescence of each and every shareholder of the company. Of course the acquiescence cannot be presumed unless knowledge of the transaction can be brought home to every one of the remaining shareholders......By knowledge of the transaction Lord Chelmsford clearly meant knowledge of the invalidity of the transaction......There can in truth be no ratification without an intention to ratify, and there can be no intention to ratify an illegal act without knowledge of the illegality"[1], following Irvine v. Union Bank of Australia[2] where Sir Barnes Peacock delivering the judgment of the Privy Council said : "Their Lordships think that it would be competent for a majority of the shareholders present......at an extraordinary meeting convened for that object, and of which object due notice had been given, to ratify an act previously done by the directors in excess of their authority, and they are not prepared to say that if a report had been circulated before a half-yearly meeting distinctly giving notice that the directors had done an act in excess of their authority, and that the meeting would be asked by confirming the report to ratify the act, this might not be sufficient notice to bring the ratification within the competency of the majority of the shareholders present at the half-yearly meeting." Mere acquiescence of the shareholders would not amount to ratification[1].

The assets of a company cannot be disposed of by a resolution of the directors only. They can only be disposed of after the resolution of the shareholders passed at a special meeting called for the purpose of winding up the company. A resolution of the directors for the purpose of such disposal is ultra vires[3]. Where in respect of the policy-holders' trust fund the articles of association empowered the directors by an unanimous resolution to purchase property, it was held that the resolution of the directors authorizing the construction of a building was ultra vires and opposed to the articles of association, purchase of property not being the same thing as the erection of a house[4].

Directors' remuneration.

Directors are not entitled to any remuneration[5], as of right, unless the articles provide for it and fix the amount[6]. In the absence of a provision to that effect, any remuneration given them is in the nature of a gratuity[7]. In a going company a general meeting may vote a gratuity beyond the amount prescribed in the articles ; but upon liquidation this cannot be done[7]. If the director's appointment has not been validly made, he cannot recover any remuneration, although he may have served for a long time[8]. If the articles provide that a director will receive remuneration at the rate of so much per annum, he will be entitled to a proportionate amount for a broken period[9], but if it is a payment for a year, he cannot get it if he does not serve for the whole year[10]. Where the articles declare that the fees are to be divided among the directors in such proportions as they shall determine, no director can sue for his fees until the directors have determined the proportion[11]. The continuing directors may determine that a retiring director shall not receive any part of the remuneration[12]. When the remuneration is by a percentage of profits, it does not include a share of the profits made on the sale of the whole business of the company [1]; but it will include profits which exist in specie, even though not converted into cash until after liquidation [2]. The sale of the bulk of the company's properties, so that the directors' duties are greatly reduced, does not disentitle them to their full remuneration [3].

Where the articles are silent, a general meeting may vote the directors' remuneration which is in the nature of a gratuity [4]. This cannot however be done after the company has gone into liquidation [5]. But where remuneration is allowed, it may be proved as a debt on winding up in competition with the ordinary creditors [6].

Where one of the objects of a company is to promote other companies, a director is not entitled to claim any remuneration for performing any duties in connection with the promotion of a new company over and above what has been fixed as his remuneration by the articles [7]. A resolution passed by the directors, while the company is a going concern, to forego or postpone their fees will be binding [3]. A company cannot ratify the payment by directors of remuneration in excess of that allowed by the articles without first altering the articles or passing a special resolution [8]. Directors cannot pay the income-tax on their remuneration out of the company's assets [8].

Unless authorized by the articles the directors cannot vote themselves remuneration or make present to themselves, or to one of their body, out of the company's funds [9].

Compensation for loss of office.

As to the claim for compensation for loss of office by a governing director see T. N. Farrer Ltd. [1937] 1 Ch. 352 where it has been held that such a claim of a life director on a voluntary liquidation was not maintainable as his employment as such was conditional on the continued existence of the company and ceased automatically when it was wound up.

Resignation.

Subject to the provisions in the articles a director can resign his office [10], and the resignation takes effect from the date on which notice is given which cannot be withdrawn without the consent of the company, even though no acceptance has taken place [10]. A company cannot be compelled to employ a director against his will [11]. The remedy lies in damages for breach of contract, if there be any [11]. A director who is unsatisfactory may be removed by the company, but the power of removal is governed entirely by the articles [12] and s. 86-G.

Indemnification.

A director who incurs liability in acting as an agent of the company is entitled to be indemnified by the company [13]. Being agents of the company, the directors are not liable to strangers for the acts and defaults of the company [14], unless they pledge their personal credit [15]. Where a director gave an undertaking in writing expressed to be made "jointly and severally" for payment of salary to an employee of the company followed by the signature of the director as "managing director," there was no remedy under the contract against him personally 1. An indemnity clause in the articles such as "the directors or auditors shall not be answerable for any loss, damage &c. unless they shall happen by or through their own wilful neglect or default" saves them from a misfeasance summons 2.

Directors' powers and liabilities.

A director can compromise an action against the company in the interest of the company although the action may be ill-founded 3. Directors cannot by a contract deprive themselves of the power to control a manager so as to confer powers on him to the exclusion of themselves 4. But if they have power of delegation, a stranger may assume that it has been properly exercised 5; and this applies to persons having apparent though not actual authority 6. Actual or constructive notice of the irregularity will however deprive the party dealing with the company of this protection 7.

Where shareholders know that their directors have been exceeding their legal powers and take no steps in the matter, but allow the things done to remain unimpeached for years, they must be taken to have retrospectively sanctioned what has been done 8. But a company is not bound by acts ultra vires of its directors unless such acts have been expressly ratified by all the shareholders, or unless all with knowledge or notice have acquiesced in what has been done 9.

A director is liable for misapplication of the company's money though it has not gone into his pocket. But he has the protection of s. 281, even if the act is ultra vires, but done in good faith 10. Directors are not liable for fraud or misconduct (e.g., issuing fraudulent prospectus) of their co-directors or other persons employed by the company 11, unless they have expressly or tacitly permitted its commission 11.

A director is not responsible for declaring a dividend unwisely. He is liable if he pays it out of capital, but the onus of proving that he has done so lies upon the person who alleges it 12. The directors cannot be made liable for an infringement of patent by the company merely by reason of their position as directors, even in a case where they are the sole directors and shareholders of the infringing company 13.

Where it is provided in the articles of association that the directors shall not be liable for "wilful default", they must be shown to have known that they were doing wrong 14. For the meaning of the expression "wilful default" see notes to s. 25-A ante. A director is entitled to rely on his subordinates doing their duty, in the absence of any ground for suspicion, and is not liable if the company sustains damage owing to the fraud and neglect of such subordinates 1. On this question in the case of the National Bank of Wales 2 Lindley M. R. observed: "Business cannot be carried on upon principles of distrust. Men in responsible positions must be trusted by those above them, as well as those below them, until there is reason to distrust them. We agree that care and prudence do not involve distrust; but for a director, acting honestly himself, to be held legally liable for negligence in trusting the officers under him not to conceal from him what they ought to report to him, appears to us to be laying too heavy a burden on honest business men." This case was taken to the House of Lords in Dovey v. Cory 3 where Lord Davey said: "I think the respondent was bound to give his attention to and exercise his judgment as a man of business on the matters which were brought before the board at the meetings which he attended and it is not proved that he did not do so. But I think he was entitled to rely upon the judgment, information and advice of the chairman and general manager, as to whose integrity, skill and competence he had no reason for suspicion. I agree with what was said by Sir George Jessel in In re Hallmark's case 4, by Chitty J. in In re Denham & Co. 5, that directors are not bound to examine entries in the company's books, it was the duty of......... and (possibly) of the chairman to go carefully through the returns from the branches, and to bring before the board any matter requiring their consideration; but the respondent was not, in my opinion, guilty of negligence in not examining them for himself, notwithstanding that they were laid on the table of the board for reference."

Where a director purchased property without a mandate from the company and under such circumstances as did not make him a trustee thereof for the company, and thereafter resold the same to the company at a profit, it was held that whether or not the company was entitled to a rescission of the contract of resale, it was not entitled to affirm it and at the same time to treat the director as trustee of the profits made 6.

A Civil Court can grant an injunction on the application of a director restraining his co-directors from wrongfully excluding him from acting as a director 7.

As the shareholders leave all the business of the company in the hands of the directors, it is highly incumbent on them that they act without raising the slightest suspicion of dishonesty 8.

Duties of directors.

The manner in which the work of a company is to be distributed between the board of directors and the staff, is a business matter to be decided on business lines. The larger the business carried on by the company, the more numerous and the more important the matters, they must of necessity be left to the managers, the accountants and the rest of the staff 9.

In ascertaining the duties of a director it is necessary to consider the nature of the company's business and the manner in which the work of the company is, reasonably in the circumstances and consistently with the articles, distributed between the directors and the other officials of the company. In discharging those duties a director (a) must act honestly, (b) must exercise such degree of skill and diligence as would amount to the reasonable care which an ordinary man might be expected to take in the circumstances on his own behalf; but (c) he need not exhibit in the performance of his duties a greater degree of skill than what can reasonably be expected from a person of his knowledge and experience; in other words, he is not liable for mere errors of judgment; he is (d) not bound to give continuous attention to the affairs of his company; his duties are of an intermittent nature to be performed at periodical board meetings and at meetings of any committee to which he is appointed, and though not bound to attend all such meetings, he ought to attend them when reasonably able to do so; and (e) in respect of all duties which, having regard to the exigencies of business and the articles of association, may properly be left to some other official, he is in the absence of suspicious grounds justified in trusting that official to perform such duties honestly [1].

A director who signs a cheque that appears to be drawn for a legitimate purpose is not responsible for seeing that the money is in fact required for that purpose, or that the cheque comes before him for signature in the regular way, having regard to the usual practice of the company. A director must of necessity trust the officials of the company to perform properly and honestly the duties allocated to them [1].

Before any director signs a cheque or parts with a cheque signed by him, he should satisfy himself that a resolution has been passed by the board or committee of the board authorizing the signature of the cheque; and where a cheque has to be signed between meetings, he should obtain the confirmation of the board subsequently [1].

The authority given to the board or committee should not be for the signing of numerous cheques to an aggregate amount, but a proper list of the individual cheques mentioning the payee and the amount of each should be read out at the board or committee meetings and subsequently transcribed into the minutes of the meeting [2].

It is the duty of each director to see that the company's moneys are, from time to time, in a proper state of investment, except so far as the articles of association may justify him in delegating that duty to others [3].

Directors' duties cannot be shirked by leaving everything to others [4].

Before presenting the annual report and balance sheet to the shareholders and before recommending a dividend, directors should have a complete and detailed list of the company's assets and investments prepared for their own use and information and ought not to be satisfied as to the value of the company's assets merely by the assurance of their chairman, however apparently distinguished and honourable, nor with the expression of belief of their auditors, however competent or trustworthy [3].

It is not the duty of a big insurance company to supervise personally the safe custody of the securities of the company. It would be impracticable on every purchase of securities for actual delivery thereof to be made to the directors, or on every sale for the delivery to the brokers of the securities sold, to await a meeting of the board or a committee of directors. The duty of seeing that the securities are in safe custody must of necessity be left to some official of the company in daily attendance at the office of the company, such as the manager, accountant or secretary [3].

An outsider dealing with a company cannot be compelled to search the register and find for himself whether a person who was permitted to act as a director for any length of time was also its director de jure 1.

General observations.

The articles of association, though not themselves a contract between the company and the director, must be regarded as showing the terms upon which on the one hand he agrees to act as a director and on the other hand the company agrees to pay him remuneration for his services 2. But the articles do not constitute a contract with the vendor 3.

One company may be a director or manager of another company 4. A director cannot make any profit out of his agency without the knowledge and consent of his principal—the company 5.

If there is no power to remove a director, the articles must first be altered to give such a power before he can be removed 6. But see the new s. 86-G.

A director can, if qualified, sustain an action in his own name against the other directors on the ground of individual injury to himself and for an injunction to restrain them from wrongfully excluding him from acting as a director 7.

A company is liable in an action of deceit for the fraud of its directors in managing the affairs of the company to the same extent as if the fraud were its own 8.

As to the powers, duties, remuneration &c. of the directors and proceedings of their meetings, see regs. 68 to 94 of Table A and notes thereto. See also notes to ss. 83 and 83 B.

Knowledge.

The knowledge of a director is not necessarily the knowledge of the company 9. The knowledge of a common director 10, secretary 11, or manager 12, or other officer 13, is not necessarily a notice to the company. In order to prove such a notice it must be shown that it was his duty to the first company to communicate the fact to the second 11.

Suit for removal.

A suit challenging the position of a particular board of directors and to remove the directors from the directorate is wrongly constituted. But a suit for a declaration that the plaintiff is a director and for the protection of his rights qua director is competent 14.

Appointment of directors.

(ii) the directors of the company shall be appointed by the members in general meeting ; and

Provided that nothing herein contained shall apply to a company incorporated before the commencement of the Indian Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936, where by virtue of the articles of the company the number of directors whose period of office is liable to determination at any time by retirement of directors in rotation falls below the two-thirds proportion mentioned in this section.

This section also was inserted by the amending Act 11 of 1914. It does not apply to a private company. See reg. 68 of Table A and notes.

By the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936 the original s. 83B has been numbered as sub-s. (1), and sub-s. (2) with its proviso has been added. For the effect of the amendment see Introduction. The Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936 came into force on 15th January, 1937. See Introduction.

Appointment of directors.

If the first directors are not named in the articles, their appointment may be made by the subscribers to the memorandum of association, either by the majority at a meeting of the subscribers or by a writing signed by all the subscribers 1.

As to the restrictions on the appointment of directors by the articles or advertisement thereof in the prospectus, see the next section.

Where the shareholders alone have the right to appoint directors, they cannot by agreement give another company a power to nominate a director 2 ; but if the articles authorize delegation of the power to a third party, the Court will recognize the right so delegated 3. A mere right of nomination will not necessarily amount to an appointment of the directors nominated, and the Court may grant or refuse specific performance of the agreement 4.

Where the express power of appointing additional directors is vested in the board, it excludes any implied concurrent power to the same effect in the company 5. Where the power is given by the articles to the shareholders alone to appoint a managing director, the directors cannot by an agreement give him power to nominate a director 1. See notes to reg. 85 of Table A.

When a director's office will be vacated.

The office of a director will be ipso facto vacated 2 on happening any of the events provided in s. 86-I and in the articles, such as, if he becomes bankrupt or insolvent 2 ; but this does not prevent a person who is a bankrupt at the time of his appointment from holding the office 3. As to the meaning of the word insolvent see Sissons v. Sissons 4. Various facts and admissions showing that the director knows that he cannot meet his liabilities constitute evidence on which the Court may find him to be disqualified under such an article 5. Absence through sickness however is not a disqualification 6. See reg. 77 of Table A and notes thereto.

If the vacating director's place is not validly filled up at the first or the adjourned meeting, they will continue in office 7. But where no meeting is held during the year, the directors who ought to have retired at the meeting for that year cease to be directors on the expiration of the year 8. See regs. 81 and 82 of Table A and notes thereto.

Appointment of managing director.

Directors cannot appoint one of themselves to an office of profit or delegate powers to a managing director unless expressly empowered by an article or by a resolution of the company 9. If the articles give the power of appointing a managing director to the board, the company in general meeting cannot make the appointment even if there is another article empowering them to manage only subject to such regulations as the company may prescribe 10.

Managing director's remuneration.

If the managing director's commission is on "net profits,' or "profits earned by the company," this means the excess of the receipts of the year over the current expenses and out-goings of the year, i.e., the fund which but for such commission might for that year be lawfully applied in payment of dividend, and any liability for excess profits duty for that year must be deducted in arriving at the "net profits" 11. See reg. 72 of Table A and notes thereto.

Chairman of the board of directors.

If the articles empower the directors to elect a chairman and determine the period for which he is to hold office, and the directors appoint a chairman, they appoint him for such time as they think fit and there is no contract that he shall remain chairman until he ceases to be a director, but it is open to the directors at any time to substitute another chairman at his place 12. See reg. 90 of Table A and notes thereto.

The result of non-compliance of sub-sec. (1) is not stated. Probably the appointment is void and the person responsible is liable in damages.

What is good payment.

The shares to be taken by a director need not be paid for in cash. Any honest payment in money's worth is a good payment 2. A person who acts as a director is sometimes deemed to have agreed to take his qualification shares 3.

Qualification of director.

85. (1) Without prejudice to the restrictions imposed by section 84, it shall be the duty of every director who is by the articles required to hold a specified share qualification, and who is not already qualified, to obtain his qualification within two months after his appointment, or such shorter time as may be fixed by the articles.

(2) If, after the expiration of the said period or shorter time, any unqualified person acts as a director of the company, he shall be liable to a fine not exceeding fifty rupees for every day between the expiration of the said period or shorter time and the last day on which it is proved that he acted as a director.

Amendment.

By the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936 the original sub-s. (2) has been omitted and sub-s. (3) has been renumbered as sub-s. (2). The reason for the omission is that the provision has been transferred to the new s. 86-I (1) (a). The original sub-s (2) was as follows :

> (2) The office of director of a company shall be vacated if the director does not, within two months from the date of his appointment, or within such shorter time as may be fixed by the articles, obtain his qualification, or if after the expiration of such period or shorter time he ceases at any time to hold his qualification ; and a person vacating office under this section shall be incapable of being re-appointed director of the company until he has obtained his qualification.

Agreement to take qualification shares.

Unless the articles require it, a director need not hold any qualification ; for there is nothing in the Act making obligatory on a director to hold shares 4. Even where the articles require a qualification, they may be amended so as to enable persons to be directors without any share qualification 5. Where the articles require a director to have a share qualification, the fact of a person becoming a director may be evidence of an agreement to take the qualification shares 6. But the prospectus is not a satisfactory proof of an agreement binding the company to allot and the director to accept such shares 1. In the last cited cases the director was held not liable either on the ground of agreement or on the ground of estoppel. Where the articles do not require such a qualification and the directors pass a resolution fixing the qualification, a director who is afterwards elected and act in that capacity does not thereby enter into an implied contract to take or hold the qualification shares 1. The prospectus is not a satisfactory proof of an agreement binding the company to allot and the directors to accept such shares 2. The articles can be altered under s. 20 ante so as to include non-shareholders as directors 1.

Where a person has been given shares or shares have been transferred to him as qualification for his directorship, he becomes a member of the company; and if such person hold out that he is a shareholder, he is estopped from denying that he is one (when the company goes into liquidation) on the ground that the transfer was a colourable transaction 3.

How they are to be taken.

Shares taken as a qualification need not be taken from the company, unless the director is named in the articles 4. It is enough if they are taken in the open market or from a friend. They even need not be shares for which the qualifying director has paid 5. Even beneficial ownership is not necessary 6. The registered holder of the shares, though he has transferred them to another is eligible 6. Shares taken as a present from the promoters is a breach of trust 7, and the director must account to the company for the amount 8; but he is nevertheless qualified 9. The bearer of a share warrant may be a member, if the articles so provide, but he shall not be qualified 10.

The holding of shares as one of several joint holders constitutes a good qualification 11 ,unless the articles require a sole holding 12. If the holding of shares is a condition precedent, the election of an unqualified director is void and he may by acting incur liabilities 13. But where it is not a condition precedent, he may act before he acquires the qualification shares 14. The ceasing to hold the qualification shares involves vacation of office 15.

Holding qualification shares in trust for promoters.

If a director accepts and holds the necessary shares in trust for the promoters, he will be liable to pay up the amount of his qualification 16. It is a misfeasance for the directors to hold such shares, as this puts them entirely at the mercy of the promoters. The measure of damages in such cases will be the highest value of the shares during their holding 16.

The qualification must be obtained within two months after the appointment 1.

Not qualified before registration. Where transfers to the directors of their qualification shares were passed at a board meeting and they were forthwith elected as directors, though the transfers were actually registered on a subsequent date, it was held by Astbury J. that before their appointment the transferees had acquired an absolute right to registration, but they were not qualified persons before actual registration and their appointment as directors was invalid 2.

Increase of qualification. If after a director has acquired his qualification shares the qualification is increased, he does not vacate office for not acquiring it 3. A director acting without acquiring his qualification shares is however entitled to the remuneration prescribed in the articles 4.

Sub-s. (2). The High Court has no jurisdiction to take cognizance of and try an offence under this or any other section of the Act 5. See notes under s. 278.

When summary proceedings are commenced against a director under this subsection, he can apply to the Court which hears the case for relief under s. 281 post 6. See notes to that section.

Validity of acts of directors. 86. The acts of a director shall be valid notwithstanding any defect that may afterwards be discovered in his appointment or qualification : Provided that nothing in this section shall be deemed to give validity to acts done by a director after the appointment of such director has been shown to be invalid.

English Act. This section corresponds to s. 143 of the English Act of 1929 which runs thus : "The Acts of a director or manager shall be valid notwithstanding any defect that may afterwards be discovered in his appointment or qualification." In the Indian Act the word "manager" has been omitted and the proviso is new.

Section based on English decisions. The section seems to be based upon the principles of the decisions noted below 7, where it was held that if the articles so provide, the acts of the directors should be valid notwithstanding any irregularity subsequently discovered regarding their appointment 8. The resolutions of a general meeting convened by de facto directors are not invalidated by an irregularity in the constitution of the board 9.

Validity of acts of the directors. Acts bona fide done by a director are valid and this is so not only between the company and outsiders, but also between the company and its members 10. Where a person in good faith thinking himself to be a director so acts and signs a plaint on behalf of the company, he is regarded as a de facto director and his act is validated by this section[1]. Where in the course of proceedings in Court a mere doubt is raised as to the validity of the position of such a director, such raising of doubt is not enough to "show" that his appointment was invalid. The appointment cannot be considered to be "shown" to be invalid until the Court has come to a definite decision on the point[1].

A director, who has been such from the formation of the company and has taken an active part in the management, will not be allowed to set up that the directors were illegally appointed, so that everything done by them was ab initio void or that notice of his own acts were not served upon him[2]. A defect in the formation of the board cannot adversely affect the right of a person who has no knowledge of the infirmity[3].

Where a company is shown to have accepted a certain person for many years as its director and has never on any occasion repudiated any of his acts as such, it is not open to a shareholder or any other person to challenge the appointment of such a director[4].

When a defect has been discovered, subsequent acts are not valid[5]. The section may however validate acts of the director not only as between the company and the outsiders, but as between the company and the members or between the members inter se[6]. While it validates the director's acts, it does not entitle him to the remuneration attached to the office[7].

It has been held by the Lahore High Court that a director invalidly appointed cannot, in the absence of a provision in the articles, bind the shareholders unless the defect is unknown at the time[8].

provision shall, notwithstanding anything to the contrary contained in the said provision, be of no effect unless and until it is approved by a special resolution of the company:

Provided that the exercise by a director of a power to appoint an alternate or substitute director to act for him during an absence of not less than three months from the district in which meetings of the directors are ordinarily held, if done with the approval of the board of directors, shall not be deemed to be an assignment of office within the meaning of this section:

Provided always that any such alternate or substitute director shall ipso facto vacate office if and when the appointor returns to the district in which meetings of the directors are ordinarily held.

Explanation.—For the purposes of the provisos to this section, the presidency-towns of Calcutta and Madras shall be deemed to be part of the 24-Parganas and Chingleput districts, respectively, and the presidenty-town of Bombay shall be deemed to be part of the Bombay Subarban and the Thana districts.

See notes at the end of s. 86-I. post.

Avoidance of provisions relieving liability of directors.

86C. Save as provided in this section, any provision, whether contained in the articles of a company or in any contract with a company or otherwise, for exempting any director, manager or officer of the company or any person (whether an officer of the company or not) employed by the company as auditor from or indemnifying him against any liability which by virtue of any rule of law would otherwise attach to him in respect of any negligence, default, breach of duty or breach of trust of which he may be guilty in relation to the company shall be void:

Provided that—

(a) in relation to any such provision which is in force at the date of the commencement of the Indian Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936, this section shall have effect only on the expiration of a period of six months from that date, and

(b) nothing in this section shall operate to deprive any person of any exemption or right to be indemnified in respect of anything done or omitted to be done by him while any such provision was in force, and

(c) notwithstanding anything in this section, a company may, in pursuance of any such provision as aforesaid, indemnify any such director, manager, officer or auditor against any liability incurred by him in defending any proceedings, whether civil or criminal, in which judgment is given in his favour or in which he is acquitted, or in connection with any application under section 281 of this Act in which relief is granted to him by the Court.

This section has been inserted by the Amending Act XXII of 1936. It closely follows the provisions of s. 152 of the English Act of 1929. In the articles of association of many companies a provision is made for indemnifying directors. managers, officers and auditors. This section makes such provisions void except in cases where cl. (c) of the Proviso applies. If the provision is made in a separate contract it will also be void.

Indemnity. Where the articles provide for indemnity to directors for anything done by them, except where loss has been incurred as the result of wilful neglect or default on their part, inorder to be guilty of wilful negligence the director must not only be guilty of, but he must know that he is committing, a breach of duty or is recklessly careless in the matter. A director is justified in trusting the integrity, skill and competence of the officials unless he has grounds of suspicion. Insolvency of an official does not necessarily mean that he is dishonest 1. As to what is a wilful default see notes to s. 25-A ante.

Proviso, cl. (a). The date of commencement of the Indian Companies (Amendment) Act XXII of 1936 is 15th January, 1937. See Introduction.

Loans of directors.

86D. (1) No company shall make any loan or guarantee any loan made to a director of the company or to a firm of which such director is a partner [or to a private company of which such director is a member or director].

(2) In the event of any contravention of sub-section (1) any director of the company who is a party to such contravention shall be punishable with fine which may extend to five hundred rupees, and if default is made in repayment of the loan or in discharging the guarantee shall be liable jointly and severally for the amount unpaid.

(3) This section shall not apply to a private company (except a private company which is the subsidiary company of a public company) or to a banking company.

This section has been inserted by the amending Act XXII of 1936. Sub-s. (1) prohibits companies to make or guarantee loans to their directors or the firms or private companies of the latter. Sub-s. (2) lays down the consequences of contravention of sub-s. (1). Sub-s. (3) makes the provisions of the section inapplicable to private companies other than subsidiary companies of public companies as well as to banking companies.

In Sub-s. 1 the words within square brackets have been substituted for the words "or to a private company of which such director is a director", by the Indian Companies (Amendment) Act II of 1938.

Director not to hold office of profit.

86E. No director or firm of which such director is a partner or private company of which such director is a director shall without the consent of the company in general meeting hold any office of profit under the company except that of a managing director or manager or a legal or technical adviser or a banker:

(1) The company may by extraordinary resolution remove any director, whose period of office is liable to determination at any time by retirement of directors in rotation, before the expiration of his period of office and may by ordinary resolution appoint another person in his stead. A director so removed shall not be reappointed a director by the board of directors.

(c) he is adjudged an insolvent, or

(d) he fails to pay calls made on him in respect of shares held by him within six months from the date of such calls being made, or

(e) he or any firm of which he is a partner or any private company of which he is a director without the sanction of the company in general meeting accepts or holds any office of profit under the company other than that of a managing director or manager or a legal or technical adviser or a banker, or

(f) he absents himself from three consecutive meetings of the directors or from all meetings of the directors for a continuous period of three months whichever is the longer without leave of absence from the board of directors, or

(g) he or any firm of which he is a partner or any private company of which he is a director accepts a loan, or guarantee from the company in contravention of section 86 D, or

(h) he acts in contravention of section 86 F.

(2) Nothing contained in this section shall be deemed to preclude a company from providing by its articles that the office of director shall be vacated on grounds additional to those specified in this section.

Amendment.

Sections 86A to 86I are new and have been inserted by the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936, for the better control of directors. S. 86A follows s. 142 of the English Act of 1929. Section 86B follows s. 151 of the said Act in controlling the practice of directors assigning their responsibilities. S. 86C follows s. 152 of the said English Act. S. 86D prohibits the making of loans &c., to directors. S. 86E prevents directors from holding office of profit under the company. S. 86F requires sanction of the directors for a director entering into certain contracts. S. 86G provides for the removal of directors. S. 86H puts restrictions on powers of directors and s. 86-I includes in the Act provision for vacation of office by directors instead of leaving these matters to be provided for in the articles.

In cl. (a), sub-s. (1) of s. 86-I the figure "84" was a mistake which has been corrected by substituting for it the figure "85" by the amending Act II of 1938.

For the effects of these new sections, viz., ss. 86A to 86I, see Introduction.

Register of directors, managers and managing agents.

87. (1) Every company shall keep at its registered office a register of its directors, managers and managing agents containing with respect to each of them the following particulars, that is to say:—

(a) in the case of an individual, his present name in full, any former name or surname in full, his usual residential address, his nationality and, if that nationality is not the nationality of origin, his nationality of origin and his business occupation, if any, and if he holds any other directorship or directorships the particulars of such directorship or directorships ;

(b) in the case of a corporation, its corporate name and registered or principal office; and the full name, address and nationality of each of its directors ; and

(c) in the case of a firm, the full name, address and nationality of each partner, and the date on which each became a partner.

(2) The company shall within the periods respectively mentioned in this sub-section send to the registrar a return in the prescribed form containing the particulars specified in the said register and a notification in the prescribed form of any change among its directors, managers or managing agents or in any of the particulars contained in the register.

The period within which the said return is to be sent shall be a period of fourteen days from the appointment of the first directors of the company and the period within which the said notification of a change is to be sent shall be fourteen days from the happening thereof.

(3) The register to be kept under this section shall during business hours (subject to such reasonable restrictions as the company may by its articles or in general meeting impose, so that not less than two hours in each day be allowed for inspection) be open to the inspection of any member of the company without charge and of any other person on payment of one rupee or such less sum as the company may impose for each inspection.

(4) If any inspection required under this section is refused or if default is made in complying with sub-section (1) or sub-section (2) of this section, the company and every officer of the company who is knowingly and wilfully in default shall be liable to a fine of fifty rupees.

(5) In the case of any such refusal, the Court on application made by the person to whom inspection has been refused and upon notice to the company may by order direct an immediate inspection of the register.

By the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936, this section has been substituted for the original s. 87. It follows the provisions of s. 144 of the English Act of 1929. As to the effect of this new section see Introduction. The old s. 87 was as follows :

List of directors to be sent to registrar.

87. (1) Every company shall keep at its registered office a register containing the names and addresses and the occupations of its directors, and file with the registrar a copy thereof, and from time to time file with the registrar notice of any change among its directors or managers.

(2) If default is made in complying with this section, the company shall be liable to a fine not exceeding fifty rupees for every day during which the default continues; and every officer of the company, who knowingly and wilfully authorises or permits the default, shall be liable to the like penalty.

Although sub-s. (1) of the old s. 87 contained such vague expression as "from time to time," the period of 30 days prescribed in form XXVI, of the Company Rules, 1914 (repealed), was not meant to supplement it and was not mandatory; hence no offence was committed if a company failed to file notice of the change among directors within 30 days from the date of occurence [1]. The company was entitled to the time until a new director had been appointed [2]. But now a definite time limit has been fixed by sub-s. (2).

Meaning of "manager."

Unless a person is in charge of the entire business of a company, he cannot be deemed to be the "manager" thereof. A person in charge of a branch bank therefore does not come within the purview of the term "manager" as used in this section [3].

Outsiders not bound to search registers.

Outsiders are not affected with notice of all that is contained in the register of directors kept under this section [4]. Notwithstanding the provisions of this section, the appointment of a director still remains part of "the indoor management" of the company, and outsiders are not bound to search the register for ascertaining whether a person acting as a director for some length of time is also a director de jure [4].

For form of the register, see Form No. XII, App. E.

Managing Agents.

Duration of appointment of managing agent.

87A. (1) No managing agent shall, after the commencement of the Indian Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936, be appointed to hold office for a term of more than twenty years at a time.

(2) Notwithstanding anything to the contrary contained in the articles of a company or in any agreement with the company a managing agent of a company appointed before the commencement of the Indian Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936, shall not continue to hold office after the expiry of twenty years from the commencement of the said Act unless then reappointed thereto or unless he has been reappointed thereto before the expiry of the said twenty years.

(3) A managing agent whose office is terminated by virtue of the provisions of sub-section (2) shall upon such termination be entitled to a charge upon the assets of the company by way of indemnity for all liabilities or obligations properly incurred by the managing agent on behalf of the company subject to existing charges and encumbrances, if any.

Conditions applicable to managing agents.

87B. Notwithstanding anything to the contrary contained in the articles of the company or in any agreement with the company—

(a) a company may, by resolution passed at a general meeting of which notice has been given to the managing agent in the same manner as to members of the company, remove a managing agent if he is convicted of an offence in relation to the affairs of the company punishable under the Indian Penal Code, and being under the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, non-bailable; and for the purposes of this clause, where the managing agent is a firm or company an offence committed by a member of such firm or a director of or an officer holding a general power of attorney from such company shall be deemed to be an offence committed by such firm or company:

Provided that a managing agent shall not be liable to be removed under the provisions hereof if the offending member, director or officer as aforesaid is expelled or dismissed by the managing agent within thirty days from the date of his conviction or if his conviction is set aside on appeal;

(b) the office of a managing agent shall be vacated if he is adjudged insolvent;

(c) a transfer of his office by a managing agent shall be void unless approved by the company in general meeting:

Provided that in the case of a managing agent's firm a change in the partners thereof shall not be deemed to operate as a transfer of the office of managing agent, so long as one of the original partners shall continue to be partner of the managing agent's firm. For the purpose of this proviso 'original partners' shall mean, in the case of managing agents appointed before the commencement of the Indian Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936, partners who were partners at the date of the commencement of the said Act, and in the case of managing agents appointed after the commencement of the said Act, partners who were partners at the date of the appointment;

(d) a charge or assignment of his remuneration or any part thereof effected by a managing agent shall be void as against the company;

(e) if a company is wound up either by the Court or voluntarily, any contract of management made with a managing agent shall be thereupon determined without prejudice however, to the right of the managing agent to recover any moneys recoverable by the managing agent from the company: Provided that where the Court finds that the winding up is due to the negligence or default of the managing agent himself the managing agent shall not be entitled to receive any compensation for the premature termination of his contract of management; and

(f) the appointment of a managing agent, the removal of a managing agent and any variation of a managing agent's contract of management made after the commencement of the Indian Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936, shall not be valid unless approved by the company by a resolution at a general meeting of the company notwithstanding anything to the contrary in section 86E:

Provided that nothing herein contained shall apply to the appointment of a company's first managing agent made prior to the issue of the prospectus or statement in lieu of prospectus where the terms of the appointment of such managing agent are there set forth.

Cl. (d). The object of the restriction imposed by this clause is to prevent the managing agent from making a voluntary charge or assignment of his remuneration to the detriment of the company. This does not disentitle a creditor to recover his debt by attaching the remuneration to which the managing agent is entitled. A restraint on voluntary alienation does not bar a compulsory sale at the instance of a creditor [1].

Remuneration of managing agent.

87C. (1) Where any company appoints a managing agent after the commencement of the Indian Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936, the remuneration of the managing agent shall be a sum based on a fixed percentage of the net annual profits of the company, with provision for a minimum payment in the case of absence of or inadequacy of profits, together with an office allowance to be defined in the agreement of management.

(2) Any stipulation for remuneration additional to or in any other form than the remuneration specified in sub-section (1) shall not be binding on the company unless sanctioned by a special resolution of the company.

(3) For the purposes of this section 'net profits' means the profits of the company calculated after allowing for all the usual working charges, interest on loans and advances, repairs and outgoings, depreciation, bounties or subsidies received from [any Govern- ment] or from a public body, profits by way of premium on shares sold, profits on sale proceeds of forfeited shares, or profits from the sale of the whole or part of the undertaking of the company but without any deduction in respect of income-tax or super-tax, or any other tax or duty on income or revenue or for expenditure by way of interest on debentures or otherwise on capital account or on account of any sum which may be set aside in each year out of the profits for reserve or any other special fund.

(4) This section shall not apply to a private company except a private company which is the subsidiary company of a public company or to any company whose principal business is the business of insurance.

This section has been inserted by the amending Act XXII of 1936. In sub-s. (3) the words within square brackets have heen substituted for the word "Government" by the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937 which came into operation on 1st April, 1937.

Sub-s. (1) provides for remuneration of the managing agents appointed by a company after the commencement of the amending Act XXII of 1936, i.e., after 15th January, 1937 (see Introduction) on the basis of a fixed percentage of the net annual poofits of the company with provision for a minimum payment in the case of absence or inadequacy of profits together with an office allowance to be defined in the agreement of management. Sub-s. (2) provides that stipulation for any additional remuneration will not be binding on the company unless sanctioned by a special resoluction. Sub-s. (3) lays down the meaning of "net profits" for the purposes of this section. Sub-s. (4) makes the provisions of this section inapplicable to private companies other than a subsidiary company of a public company as well as to insurance companies.

Loans to managing agents.

87D. (1) No company shall make to a managing agent of the company or to any partner of the firm, if the managing agent is a firm, [or to any member or director of the private company], if the managing agent is a private company, any loan out of moneys of the company or guarantee any loan made to a managing agent.

(2) Nothing contained in this section shall apply to any credit held by a managing agent in a current account maintained subject to limits previously approved by the board of directors by the company with the managing agent for the purposes of the company's business.

(3) In the event of any contravention of sub-section (1) any director of the company who is a party to the making of the loan or giving of the guarantee shall be punishable with fine which may extend to five hundred rupees, and if default is made in repayment of the loan or discharging the guarantee shall be liable jointly and severally for the amount unpaid.

(4) Nothing in this section shall apply to a private company

except a private company which is the subsidiary company of a public company.

(5) Except with the consent of three-fourths of the directors present and entitled to vote on the resolution, a managing agent of the company, or the firm of which he is a partner, or any partner of such firm, or, if the managing agent is a private company, a member or director thereof, shall not enter into any contract for the sale, purchase or supply of goods and materials with the company, provided that nothing herein contained shall affect any such contract for such sale, purchase or supply entered into before the commencement of the Indian Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936.

In sub-s. (1) of this section the words within square brackets have been substituted for the words "or to any director of the private company" by the Indian Companies (Amendment) Act II of 1938.

Loans to or by companies under the same management.

87E. (1) No company incorporated under this Act after the commencement of the Indian Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936, which is under the management of a managing agent shall make any loan to or guarantee any loan made to any company under management by the same managing agent, and no company shall after the expiry of six months from the commencement of the said Act except by way of renewal of an existing loan or guarantee given make any loan to or guarantee any loan made to any such company :

Provided that nothing herein contained shall apply to loans made or guarantees given by a company to or on behalf of a company under its own management or loans made by or to a company to or by a subsidiary company thereof or to guarantees given by a company on behalf of a subsidiary company thereof.

(2) In the event of any contravention of the provisions of this section, any director or officer of the company making the loan or giving the guarantee who is knowingly and wilfully in default shall be liable to a fine not exceeding one thousand rupees and shall be jointly and severally liable for any loss incurred by the company in respect of such loan or guarantee.

Purchase by company of shares of company under same managing agent.

87F. A company other than an investment company, that is to say, a company whose principal business is the acquisition and holding of shares, stocks, debentures or other securities, shall not purchase shares or debentures of any company under management by the same managing agent, unless the purchase has been previously approved by a unanimous decision of the board of directors of the purchasing company.

Restriction on managing agent's powers of management.

87G. A managing agent shall not exercise in respect of any company of which he is a managing agent a power to issue debentures or, except with the authority of the directors, and within the limits fixed by them, a power to invest the funds of the company, and any delegation of any such power by a company to a managing agent shall be void.

Where a managing agent who is not authorized to borrow has borrowed money which is not necessary and neither bona fide nor for benefit of the company, the company is not liable for the amount borrowed 1.

Managing agent not to engage in business competing with the business of managed company.

87H. A managing agent shall not on his own account engage in any business which is of the same nature as and directly competes with the business carried on by a company under his management or by a subsidiary company of such company.

Limit on number of directors appointed by managing agent.

87I. Notwithstanding anything contained in the articles of a company other than a private company the directors, if any, appointed by the managing agent shall not exceed in number one-third of the whole number of directors.

Amendment.

Sections 87A to 87I have been inserted by the Companiee (Amendment), Act, 1936, for the purpose of controlling the appointments, powers and actions of the managing agents. For a discussion of these new provisions see Introduction.

Contracts.

Form of contracts.

88. (1) Contracts on behalf of a company may be made as follows (that is to say) :—

(i) any contract which, if made between private persons, would be by law required to be in writing, signed by the parties to be charged therewith, may be made on behalf of the company in writing signed by any person acting under its authority, express or implied, and may in the same manner be varied or discharged ;

(ii) any contract which, if made between private persons, would by law be valid although made by parol only, and not reduced into writing, may be made by parol on behalf of the company by any person acting under its authority, express or implied, and may in the same manner be varied or discharged.

1. Equity Insurance Co. v. Dinshaw & Co. [1940] O. 202, 15 Luck. 515, [1940] O.W.N. 285.

(2) All contracts made according to this section shall be effectual in law and shall bind the company and its successors and all other parties thereto, their heirs, or legal representatives, as the case may be.

Contracts made by manager.

A company which has appointed a manager of its business is bound by contracts made by him in the usual course of business, although sufficient powers have not been delegated to him [1]. Where goods are supplied to the orders of unauthorized persons, the company is liable if the goods are received and used for the purposes of its trade (see the last case). Where in a suit to enforce a contract entered into by the managing agent, the plaintiff joins both the managing agent and the principal, only one of them can be held liable ; but if the agent stands alone as agent for an undisclosed principal both would be liable [2].

Tort.

But as regards tort the position is different. "In a sense, every tort is ultra vires, for no corporation is formed for the purpose of committing wrongs ; but a company is not thereby exempted from liability ex delicto. It is liable for torts such as for instance malicious prosecution, libel or fraudulent misrepresentation committed by its agents, although no express command or privity of the company is proved. It may sometimes be liable for the acts of its liquidators" [3].

Power to borrow.

A trading or commercial company, but not a literary or scientific society, has an implied power to borrow and to mortgage or charge all or any part of its property [4], and the contract need not be under seal [5]. Where the chairman of a company as principal officer, while carrying on business of the company, executed a declaration creating a lien on the company's property in respect of a loan sanctioned by the board, but the articles of association were silent as to the authority of the person entering into agreement on behalf of the company, it was held that the chairman had implied authority to execute the declaration [6]. Any other company may also borrow, if so authorized by its memorandum [7]. If there is no power to borrow, a loan is irrecoverable as a debt, and any security given for the debt is void [8]. But where the lender is a company without power to lend and the borrower is a company without power to borrow, the latter by borrowing is a party to a breach of trust, and the money lent is recoverable [9].

An overdraft at a company's bankers is a loan [10].

Ultra vires payment.

A payment which is ultra vires is a breach of trust and the directors or other persons making the payment are liable to make good the money [11].

Where borrowing power is limited.

Where the borrowing powers of a company are limited, any security given for any amount lent to the company beyond the limit is void, even though the limit is subsequently increased [1]. Where the borrowing powers of directors are limited to a certain amount, they cannot borrow beyond that amount, so as to bind the company [1]. If however the borrowing is not in excess of the powers of the company, it may be ratified by the company in a general meeting [2] by an ordinary resolution [3].

Ultra vires contracts.

It may be generally stated that a contract ultra vires the company is wholly void and cannot be enforced [4]; and a contract not ultra vires the company, but ultra vires the directors, may be ratified by the shareholders [5]. But if the company ratifies the contract without knowledge of the fact that it was entered into by the directors ultra vires, the company will not be bound by it [6]. In England a contract made before the incorporation of a company by some person professing to act on its behalf cannot be ratified by the company after incorporation [7]. The Indian law is different (see notes to s. 23). There is nothing however to prevent the company from entering into a new contract to carry into effect the terms of the pre-incorporation contract [8]. Mere acting on the old contract does not make it binding on the company [9], not taking benefit under the same [10]. A public company cannot make a binding contract until it is entitled to commence business complying with the provisions of s. 103.

Manager's powers.

If the directors appoint a manager or other official, he may be given authority by some resolution of the board or by an instrument under the company's seal [11]. The mere appointment of a manager under a power for that purpose, will only operate as a delegation to such manager of the ordinary commercial business of the company [12].

Contract may be made without seal.

This section enables a company, as a general rule, to make a contract without affixing the company's common seal thereto, as is in some cases under the English Act and was the case under the Indian Act of 1882, s. 67. If a document under seal is not necessary, then a mere defect in the manner of affixing the seal will not render the document invalid [13].

As to the seal, see notes to s. 29 and reg. 76 of Table A.

Where company is undisclosed principal.

If an agent of a company other than a private company enters into a contract in which the company is the undisclosed principal, he must make a memorandum in writing of the terms of the contract and other particulars and file it in the office of the company, and the said memorandum shall be laid before the directors at the next board meeting 1.

Termination of contract.

There is no ground in law for saying that where a written contract has been made which required a written notice on either side before it could be terminated, it cannot be terminated by word of mouth by mutual agreement between the parties; and it makes no difference if the contract of service is one between a company and its directors 2.

Once the rights of parties dealing with a company have become fixed by a contract, the company cannot by a resolution subsequently passed by it alter those rights 3.

Bills of exchange and promissory notes.

89. A bill of exchange, hundi or promissory note shall be deemed to have been made, drawn, accepted or endorsed on behalf of a company if made, drawn, accepted or endorsed in the name of, or by or on behalf or on account of, the company by any person acting under its authority, express or implied.

Power of company to accept bills &c.

Whether a company can make, accept, indorse or issue bills of exchange, promissory notes and other negotiable instruments depends on its objects as stated in the memorandum of association. It cannot do any such thing unless it has express or implied power under the memorandum 4. Where the memorandum of association stated that one of the objects of the company was to make promissory notes and in the articles power was given to the managing agents to make contracts and sign receipts on behalf of the company, it was held that the managing agent had no power to make promissory notes on behalf of the company and that the company was not liable on such notes 5.

Implied power to borrow.

In the case of a trading company there is an implied power to borrow 6 and accept and issue bills and notes; and there are other commercial concerns which may also have an implied power 7, but a railway company cannot accept or indorse bills of exchange 7.

Company's liability on bills &c. and endorsements.

The question as to the liability of a company on a particular endorsement on a bill is in every case one of construction. If on the true construction the bill or note is that of the company, it will be liable upon the bill, and not the individuals whose names appear on it. On the other hand if on the true construction the bill or note is not the bill or note of the company, the persons whose names are on it will be liable whether they intended to be so or not 1. It is of the utmost importance that the name of a person or firm to be charged upon a negotiable instrument should be clearly stated on the face or back of the document, so that the responsibility is made plain and can be instantly recognized 2. In order to make the company liable on a bill or note it must appear on the face of such bill or note that it was intended to be drawn, accepted or made on behalf of the company 3.

Where the endorsement was "M. & Sons, Managing Agents of L. A. Co. Ltd.", it was held by Sanderson C. J. and Rankin J., that it would not necessarily be clear to any one that the responsibility of L. A. Co. Ltd. was involved, and that L. A. Co. Ltd. was not therefore liable 1. The words "managing director" or "director" may be treated as words of description only 4. In such cases the Court is entitled to look at the surrounding circumstances under which the bill is signed 4. "We the directors of X.Y. & Co. do promise to pay" &c. signed by the directors will make them personally liable 5.

If the directors of a company, which has no power to accept bills, purport to accept them on behalf of the company, they will be personally liable 6.

Indorsement "per pro."

Where an agent accepts or indorses 'per pro.' the taker of the bill or note so accepted or indorsed is bound to inquire as to the extent of the agent's authority. Where the agent has such authority his abuse of it does not affect a bona fide purchaser for value 7.

Personal liability of agents.

If the company is liable on a bill, its authorized agents are not personally liable, although using words apparently sufficient for that purpose, such as "I promise" or "we promise" 8, provided that the signatures are expressed to be on behalf of a principal or in a representative capacity 9. Words describing them as being officers of the company may not themselves exempt them from the liability 10 ; but where the name of the signatory appears as a director, or managing director, he is not personally liable 8. Directors are however personally liable on a bill which does not state the name of the company correctly 11.

Managing director's power.

If the managing director could have been authorized under the articles to draw and accept a bill of exchange, a holder in due course is entitled to assume that he had authority and the holder is not bound to inquire into the internal management of the company or to prove an actual authority 12.

Manager's power. The manager of a bank has authority to make [illegible] transfer of a negotiable instrument on behalf of the bank [1].

Power of delegation. In a suit by the holders of a bill of exchange in due course it was held following Houghton & Co. v. Nothard, Lowe & Wills [2] that as it did not appear that the plaintiff knew of the existence of the power of delegation contained in the defendant's articles of association, they were not entitled to rely upon its supposed exercise [3]. It was further held that the bills of exchange were forgeries and, therefore, applying Ruben v. Great Fingall Consolidated [4], it was held that the plaintiffs could not in any event invoke the principle that they would not be bound to enquire into the indoor management of the defendant company [3].

As to the mode in which authority to accept bills may be given, see Overend Gurney & Co. [5].

Where a resolution of the directors required bills of exchange to be signed by a director and the secretary, it was held that a bill signed by a director only was not binding on the company, even in the hands of a holder who did not know of the resolution [6].

Party to suit. Where a promissory note, executed in favour of a bank which went into liquidation, was endorsed in favour of another bank, the latter in a suit on the promissory note might properly ask for permission to make the bank in liquidation a party to the suit [7].

90. Execution of deeds. A company may, by writing under its common seal, empower any person, either generally or in respect of any specified matters, as its attorney, to execute deeds on its behalf in any place either in or outside British India; and every deed signed by such attorney, on behalf of the company, and under his seal, where sealing is required, shall bind the company, and have the same effect as if it were under its common seal.

By the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936, the words in italics have been substituted for the words "not situate in British India."

91. Power for company to have official seal for use abroad. (1) A company whose objects require or comprise the transaction of business beyond the limits of British India may, if authorised by its articles, have for use in any territory, district or place not situate in British India, an official seal which shall be a facsimile of the common seal of the company, with the addition on its face of the name of every territory, district or place where it is to be used.

(2) A company having such an official seal may, by writing under its common seal, authorise any person appointed for the purpose in any territory, district or place not situate in British India to affix the same to any deed or other document to which the company is party in that territory, district or place.

(3) The authority of any such agent shall, as between the company and any person dealing with the agent, continue during the period (if any) mentioned in the instrument conferring the authority, or if no period is there mentioned, then until notice of the revocation or determination of the agent's authority has been given to the person dealing with him.

(4) The person affixing any such official seal shall, by writing under his hand, on the deed or other document to which the seal is affixed, certify the date and place of affixing the same.

(5) A deed or other document to which an official seal is duly affixed shall bind the company as if it had been sealed with the common seal of the company.

Disclosure of interest by director.

91A. (1) Every director who is directly or indirectly concerned or interested in any contract or arrangement entered into by or on behalf of the company shall disclose the nature of his interest at the meeting of the directors at which the contract or arrangement is determined on, if his interest then exists, or in any other case at the first meeting of the directors after the acquisition of his interest or the making of the contract or arrangement :

Provided that a general notice that a director is a director or a member of any specified company or is a member of any specified firm, and is to be regarded as interested in any subsequent transaction with such firm or company, shall as regards any such transaction be sufficient disclosure within the meaning of this sub-section and after such general notice, it shall not be necessary to give any special notice relating to any particular transaction with such firm or company.

(2) Every director who contravenes the provisions of sub-section (1) shall be liable to a fine not exceeding one thousand rupees.

(3) A register shall be kept by the company in which shall be entered particulars of all contracts or arrangements to which sub-section (1) applies, and which shall be open to inspection by any member of the company at the registered office of the company during business hours.

(4) Every officer of the company who knowingly and wilfully acts in contravention of the provisions of sub-section (3) shall be liable to a fine not exceeding five hundred rupees.

This section was inserted by the amending Act XI of 1914.

Amendment.

By the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936, in sub-s. (1) the words in italics have been substituted for the words "member of any specified firm or company" after the words "a director is a." By the same Act the new sub-sections (3) and (4) have been added. For the effect of the amendments see Introduction.

Principle.

This as well as ss. 91 B, 91 C and 91 D did not occur in the English Act of 1908. They were introduced in the present Act by the amending Act No. 11 of 1914. These sections are founded upon the principle that "a director is precluded from dealing on behalf of the company with himself and from entering into engagements in which he has a personal interest conflicting, or which possibly may conflict, with the interest of those whom he is bound by fiduciary duty to protect, and this rule is as applicable to the case of one of several directors as to a managing or a sole director" [1]. A director is in a fiduciary position towards the company, and if he makes any profit on account of transactions of business when he is acting for the company, he must account for them to the company [2]. So, if acting for himself, he proposes to the company a contract from the execution of which he will derive a profit, that profit belongs to the company [2].

"The liability of a director", observed Lord Blaneshburgh in a recent case, "in respect of profits made by him from a contract in which his company is also concerned is one thing: his liability, if any there be, in respect of his profits from a contract in which the company has no interest at all is quite another. In the first case, unless by the company's regulations the director is permitted, subject to or without conditions, to retain his profit, he must account for it to the company. In the second case the company has no concern in his profit and cannot make him accountable for it unless it appears—this is the essential qualification—that in earning that profit he has made use either of the property of the company or of some confidential information which has come to him as a director of the company" [3].

Disclosure of interest.

Sub-s. (1). The contracts contemplated by this sub-section in respect of which every director must disclose his interest, if any, on pain of the penalty provided for in sub-s. (2) are not only contracts entered into at a meeting of directors, but all contracts entered into at such meeting or otherwise [4]. Such contracts include small purchases from another firm in which the purchasing director is interested, the only difference being that the method of disclosure is that laid down in the proviso to sub-s. (1) [4]. A letter addressed to the chairman of the board of directors signed by him with the remark "noted" and included in one of the files of the directors' correspondence, but not referred to in the minutes of any meeting, does not, of itself, prove disclosure as required by this section [4].

Nature of interest.

The interest which a director is bound to disclose is any interest which conflicts with his duty to the company. Whether the interest is of such a nature or not must be a question of fact in each case and decided on a reference to the wording of each statute [5]. The interest requiring disclosure is not only a pecuniary interest, but every relation which can reasonably be regarded as capable of affecting the directors' decision 1. Where the real nature of the interest is known to all the directors, there is no necessity to make a formal disclosure 1.

Rule of equity will also apply.

Where the articles declared that if a director had any interest in a contract proposed for acceptance by the company, he should declare his interest or his place as director should be vacated and that having declared it he should not vote on the proposal, it was held first, that the expression "declare his interest" meant declare the nature of his interest 2, and that the words were not satisfied by a mere declaration that he had an interest in the matter, and secondly that the vacating of the seat would not prevent the contract itself from being treated as one made for the benefit of the company; for the rule of equity would apply to such a case in addition to the penalty specially mentioned by the articles 2 (of last page).

If the words are "if he is concerned in any contract", the director will be disqualified even though he could not make any profit out of the contract 3.

Directors holding shares in any other company.

Unless and so far as authorized by the articles, the board cannot make a binding contract with any other company in which a member of the quorum holds shares 4. This rule applies whether the shares are held in trust or beneficially. If the second company has notice of the irregularity, the first company may obtain rescission of the transaction, even after completion, provided that rescission is still possible 4.

Where vendors become directors.

Where vendors become directors, they usually enter into agreements to manage for a term of years and agree not to trade in competition with the company. If the company wrongfully discharges such a manager either directly or by going into liquidation, he is freed from his covenant and may at once start a competing business 5.

Terms of articles must be strictly complied with.

Modern articles usually authorize directors to make contracts in which they are personally interested, on disclosing their interest to their fellow-directors. Such a clause is valid under the English law but the terms must be strictly complied with 6, and the disclosure must be to directors who are independent and not to other directors who are equally interested in the contract in question 7.

Breach of ss. 91 A, 91 B and 91 C.

A Breach of the provisions of ss. 91 A, 91 B and 91 C by which a director is bound to disclose any interest he has personally in a transaction that the company is entering into does not ipso facto render the transaction void 8.

Sub-s. (2). Where the managing director of a book-selling company makes a small purchase of books from another concern in which he is interested and does not disclose his interest as required by this section, he is guilty under sub-s. (2) 9.

Prohibition of voting by interested director.

91B. (1) No director shall, as a director, vote on any contract or arrangement in which he is either directly or indirectly concerned or interested nor shall his presence count for the purpose of forming a quorum at the time of any such vote ; and if he does so vote his vote shall not be counted :

Provided that the directors or any of them may vote on any contract of indemnity against any loss which they or any one or more of them may suffer by reason of becoming or being sureties or surety for the company.

(2) Every director who contravenes the provisions of sub-section (1) shall be liable to a fine nor exceeding one thousand rupees.

(3) This section shall not apply to a private company :

Provided that where a private company is a subsidiary company of a public company, this section shall apply to all contracts or arrangements made on behalf of the subsidiary company with any person other than the holding company.

Amendment.

This section was inserted by the amending Act XI of 1914, and sub-s. (3) was added by the amending Act XLII of 1920. By the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936, the words in italics have been inserted in sub-s. (1), and the new proviso (in italics) have been added to sub-s. (3). For the effect of these amendments see Introduction.

Application.

Sub-s. (1). Where a director has an interest as shareholder in another company, or is in a fiduciary position towards and owes a duty to another company which is proposing to enter into a transaction with the company of which he is the director, he comes within the rule laid down in this section and the transaction is voidable at the instance of the company with which it is entered into. He has a personal interest in the matter and owes a duty which conflicts with his duty to the company of which he is the director. It is immaterial whether the conflicting interest belongs to him beneficially or as a trustee for others [1].

Voting on the question at general meeting.

Unless specially authorized by the articles, directors cannot make contracts with the company either on their own behalf or on behalf of any company or firm, without the sanction of the company in general meeting [2]. This does not necessarily prevent them from voting on the same question at a meeting of shareholders [3]. They cannot even issue debentures to themselves as security for money advanced [4], or allot shares to themselves [5].

Voting at directors' meeting.

Where the directors vote in favour of a resolution allotting shares to themselves and other persons, such a resolution is bad so far as it relates to any allotment to the directors voting in respect thereof and an interlocutory injunction will be granted restraining such directors from exercising voting powers in respect of the shares so allotted to them, but the resolution as a whole is not bad and the allotments to persons other than directors are valid 1. Voting by an interested director for a transaction in which he is interested, will not per se render the contract either void or voidable. But non-disclosure or voting, when but for the vote the contract would not have been sanctioned, will in all cases render the interested director liable to account for "secret profits" 2.

No director is entitled to join in forming a quorum for the consideration of matters in respect of which he is not entitled to vote 3.

If two directors are interested in a transaction, the objection will not be removed by splitting up the resolution and each director voting only on the part affecting the other 4. A resolution reducing the quorum for the purpose of enabling those not interested to pass the resolution is invalid 4.

A resolution authorizing the issue of debentures in which the directors are personally interested is a nullity; but the company may be estopped by circumstances from alleging the invalidity of the debentures 5.

Articles under Act VI of 1882.

Although this section and the previous one impose a penalty, articles adopted under the Act of 1882, though unamended after the passing of the present Act, are not rendered ultra vires nor the contract void thereby 6.

Effect of non-disclosure of interest.

Non-disclosure of the interest of a director or voting by him will not per se render the contract voidable, but will render the interested director liable to account for secret profits 7.

Where the interest of a director in the contract is such that it is likely to produce a conflict between his duty to the company and his duty or interest in the other party to the contract, he is bound to disclose it; but if the whole body of the directors was already aware of such interest, formal disclosure is not necessary 8.

Pleading.

In a charge of non-disclosure by a director of his interest in a particular contract or transaction the pleading must not only include allegations of existence of such interest, but also the fact or allegation of non-disclosure, or in other words, the breach of the obligation 9.

Internal management. The principle of the English law as to internal management applies to a case of disability of directors arising under this section. The reason for the rule is that it would be disastrous in a business community if contracts made with companies would be impeached on account of matters known to the company, but not known to the other contracting party 1. So this section will not deprive of the benefit of his contract with the company a third party who has no notice of the defect in the director's authority. Such a person will be entitled to assume that the internal management of the company is properly conducted. But if the third party is shown to have knowledge of the real state of affairs, the transaction is voidable as against him 2.

Disclosure to members in case of contract appointing a manager.

91C. (1) Where a company enters into a contract for the appointment of a manager or managing agent of the company in which contract any director of the company is directly or indirectly concerned or interested, or varies any such existing contract, the company shall, within twenty-one days from the date of entering into the contract or the varying of the contract, send an abstract of the terms of such contract or variation, as the case may be, together with a memorandum clearly indicating the nature of the interest of the director in such contract, or in such variation, to every member; and the contract shall be open to the inspection of any member at the registered office of the company.

(2) If a company makes default in complying with the requirements of sub-section (1), it shall be liable to a fine not exceeding one thousand rupees; and every officer of the company who knowingly and wilfully authorises or permits the default shall be liable to the like penalty.

This section was inserted by the amending Act XI of 1914.

In sub-s. (1) the words in italics have been inserted by the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936. For effect of the amendment see Introduction.

What is a contract within this section. The appointment by the directors of one of their body as chairman or as managing director without remuneration is not a contract within the meaning of this section, being merely a delegation of power; but where a resolution is passed at a board meeting that one of the directors be appointed managing director at a remuneration and that director is present and accepts the appointment, there is a contract between the company and the director, and the latter should not vote in support of the resolution 3. Allotment of shares has also been held to be such a contract 4.

Interest. The interest requiring disclosure is not only pecuniary interest, but every relation that can reasonably be regarded as capable of affecting the directors' decision 5.

A breach of this section does not ipso facto render the transaction void or voidable [1].

91D. (1) Every manager or other agent of a company other than a private company not being the subsidiary company of a public company who enters into a contract for or on behalf of the company in which contract the company is an undisclosed principal shall, at the time of entering into the contract, make a memorandum in writing of the terms of the contract, and specify therein the person with whom it has been made.

(2) Every such manager or other agent shall forthwith deliver the memorandum aforesaid to the company and send copies to the directors, and such memorandum shall be filed in the office of the company and laid before the directors at the next directors' meeting.

(3) If any such manager or other agent makes default in complying with the requirements of this section—

(a) the contract shall, at the option of the company, be void as against the company; and

(b) such manager or other agent shall be liable to a fine not exceeding two hundred rupees.

Prospectus.

92. (1) Every prospectus issued by or on behalf of a company or in relation to any intended company shall be dated, and that date shall, unless the contrary be proved, be taken as the date of publication of the prospectus.

Filing of prospectus.

(2) A copy of every such prospectus, signed by every person who is named therein as a director or proposed director of the company, or by his agent authorised in writing, shall be filed for registration with the registrar on or before the date of its publication, and no such prospectus shall be issued until a copy thereof has been so filed for registration.

(3) The registrar shall not register any prospectus unless it is dated, and the copy thereof signed, in manner required by this section.

(4) Every prospectus shall state on the face of it that a copy has been filed for registration as required by this section.

(5) If a prospectus is issued without a copy thereof being so filed, the company, and every person who is knowingly a party to the issue of the prospectus, shall be liable to a fine not exceeding fifty rupees for every day from the date of the issue of the prospectus until a copy thereof is so filed.

"Prospectus."

For the definition of "prospectus" in every part of this section the Court must go back to s. 2 (14). To hold that a prospectus is a prospectus only if it conforms to the terms of s. 93 would mean that in regard to s. 92 the penalty for failure to file the prospectus could be avoided by allowing it to lack any of the requisites laid down by s. 93 1.

Meaning of "issuing to the public."

A circular placed in the hands of friends of the proposed directors, even to the number of forty and intended to be shown to their friends, has been held to be not an invitation to the public 2. It has also been held that printing of 200 copies of a prospectus and circulation thereof by the directors and promoters among their friends is not such an invitation 3. It has however been held that an offer to a limited class may be an offer to the public 4. A proof prospectus circulated before incorporation may not amount to an issue of the prospectus 5.

In this connection the observations of their Lordships in Nash v. Lynde 6 are interesting: "In my judgment it is sufficient in order to bring s. 81 (of English Act of 1908 corresponding to s. 93 of the Indian Act) into operation that the prospectus in question should be proved to have been shown to any person as a member of the public and as an invitation to that person to take some of the shares referred to in the prospectus on the terms therein set out" 7.

Lord Sumner however observed: "Though literally it is true that the issue is not expressly said in the section to be an issue to the public, I think that it must be so in substance, otherwise any private letter, written by a person engaged in forming a company and advising his correspondent to take shares, would become an issued prospectus if other letters were issued by him asking others to do the same" 8. Then again: "The point is that the offer is such as to be open to any one who brings his money and applies in due form, whether the prospectus was addressed to him on behalf of the company or not" 8. "In the present case", observed Lord Sumner, "all that constituted the 'issue' was that one of the directors, in the course of a general endeavour to find money, was furnished with some copies of these type-written documents, and gave one of them to a friend who, as requested, passed it on to a friend of his own. I cannot believe that any one in business would call this the issue of a prospectus" 9.

Lord Buckmaster made the following observations on the point: "The first thing necessary to notice is that s. 81 (of the English Act of 1908 corresponding to s. 93 of the Indian Act) contains no reference of any issue to the public. It is sufficient that the prospectus should be issued. The question of what does or does not amount to an issue is a question of fact in each case and is not capable of a rigid and exact definition ; but in my opinion it certainly does not necessarily involve a general application impartially made to all members of the public. A distribution of a prospectus among a well defined class of the public would be an issue within the meaning of s. 81" 1.

Then again : "A prospectus, the distribution of which was so limited, would none the less be issued and this is the meaning of the statute is, I think, made plain by considering that sub-s. 7 of s. 81 (sub-s. 3 of s. 93 of the Indian Act) excludes from the application of the section a circular inviting existing members of a company to subscribe for shares. This would be unnecessary if an issue to such limited class were not prima facie included. The definition gives rise to greater difficulty. A document is not prospectus unless it is an invitation to the public, but if it satisfied this condition it is not the less a prospectus because it is issued to a defined class of the public" 2.

In the case of a reconstruction, shares issued to the members of the old company are not in the same position as shares issued to the public. The circular offering them would appear not to be a prospectus within the meaning of this section 3.

Prospectus when false.

In a prospectus no misstatement or concealment of any material fact or circumstance is allowed 4. A prospectus may be false in "material particulars" within the meaning of s. 8 of the English Larceny Act, 1861, if by a number of statements a false impression with regard to the financial position of a company is intentionally conveyed, although each statement taken by itself is true 5.

Where a prospectus described a contract for the construction of a railway line and entered into it at "a price considerably within the available capital of the company" and the facts were that from the nominal capital of £50,000 was to be deducted £50,000 as the price of purchasing the concern to make the railway and the contract price for making it was £420,000, the representation was held to be untrue and deceptive 6. The phrase "available capital of the company" was not a true but a deceptive description of capital which might be raised under the borrowing powers conferred on the directors 6.

Remedies of allottees.

In respect of the liability incurred by a person for issuing a prospectus, the remedies open to an allotee of shares are : (1) rescission of the contract to take shares ; (2) defence of misrepresentation or fraud to an action for call ; (3) rectification of the register of members and consequential relief ; (4) damages in an action of deceit ; (5) damages under the statutory provisions, and (6) criminal proceedings.

Effect of fraud and misrepresentation.

A person who has been misled by misrepresentation and whose shares have been forfeited for non-payment of calls, ceases to be a shareholder. As a debtor to the company he stands on a different footing and may repudiate the contract and defend an action for calls on the ground of fraud 7.

Rescission of contract to take shares.

The contract to take shares may be rescinded on the ground of misrepresentation made by the company's directors or agents acting within the scope of their authority[1], but not by unauthorized persons making promises purporting to be made on its behalf[2]. For examples of misrepresentation and non-disclosure entitling a shareholder to rescission see the cases noted below[3].

Defence to action of rescission.

Where there is a material misrepresentation, it is no defence to an action for rescession of the contract that the person to whom the representation was made had the means of discovering, and might with reasonable diligence have discovered, that it was untrue[4]. It is no defence to such an action that the person made a cursory and incomplete inquiry into the facts, for if a material misrepresentation is made to him, he must be taken to have entered into the contract on the faith of it, and inorder to take away his right to have the contract rescinded, it must be shown either that he had knowledge of facts which showed it to be untrue, or that he stated in terms or showed clearly by his conduct that he did not rely on the representation[4].

Forfeiture after rescission.

After proceedings for rescission have commenced, forfeiture of the shares for non-payment of calls will be restrained until trial, on the plaintiff giving an undertaking as to damages and paying the amount of calls with interest into the Court[5].

Claim for rescission and damages.

A person may combine in the same action his claim for rescission and damages for deceit or compensation under the Act[6] against the directors and other persons[7]. Where a prospectus contains a false representation as to a matter of fact made inorder to induce a person to act thereon, and acting on such representation he sustains damage, it may be recovered from the directors or promoters who authorized the issue of the prospectus[8]. The false statement must be as to matter of fact and not of law[9]. But a statement as to something expected to happen in the future is generally a matter of opinion[9]. The plaintiff must prove that the defendant was responsible for the prospectus[10]. If the false statement is made in the honest belief that it is true, it is not fraudulent and does not give ground for an action of deceit[11]; but see s. 100 and notes.

Damages.

A shareholder cannot retain his shares and bring an action for damages against the company 1. He must show that he has repudiated the shares and has not acted as a shareholder after discovering the misrepresentation 2. The right of rescission is lost by delay in repudiating the shares within a reasonable time, as well as by the commencement of winding up 3.

Measure of damages.

The plaintiff must prove actual damage to himself 4 and the measure of damages is the difference between what the shareholder paid for the shares and what they were worth when the shares were allotted to him 5.

The right of action for deceit survives to the personal representatives of the aggrieved person 6. The compensation should be estimated with reference to the loss sustained and does not resemble a penalty 7.

Director's liability.

A director is not liable in respect of false representations in a prospectus issued by his co-directors or any other agent of the company unless he has expressly authorized or tacitly permitted its issue, nor is a promoter liable if the misrepresentation is not made with his consent or by his agent 8.

Sub-s. (5). Where a prospectus fulfilling all requirements of law was filed with the registrar, but subsequently a prospectus was issued in Bengali which did not contain certain particulars required by s. 93 and was not a verbatim translation of the English prospectus filed with the registrar, it was held that the person issuing the Bengali prospectus was liable to be convicted under this sub-section 9.

Specific requirements as to particulars of prospectus.

93. (1) Every prospectus issued by or on behalf of a company, or by or on behalf of any person who is or has been engaged or interested in the formation of the company, shall state—

(a) the contents of the memorandum, with the names, descriptions and addresses of the signatories and the number of shares subscribed for by them respectively; and the number of founders or management or deferred shares (if any) and the nature and extent of the interest of the holders in the property and profits of the company and the number of redeemable preference shares intended to be issued with the date or, where no date is fixed, the period of notice required and the proposed method of redemption; and

(b) the number of shares (if any) fixed by the articles as the qualification of a director, and any provision amount or estimated amount of preliminary expenses, shall not apply in the case of a prospectus issued more than one year after the date at which the company is entitled to commence business :

Provided that the said requirements, except the requirement as to the amount or estimated amount of preliminary expenses, shall apply to a prospectus filed in pursuance of section 154.

(5) Nothing in this section shall limit or diminish any liability which any person may incur under the general law or this Act apart from this section.

Amendment. By the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936, the words in italics have been inserted in clauses (a) and (c) of sub-s. (1), the new clauses (ee) and (ff) have been introduced, for the words "or the rate of any such commission" in cl. (h) after the words "company" the words in italics have been substituted, in cl. (l) the words in italics have been inserted, in cl. (o) the words in italics have been inserted, and the new cl. (p) has been added. By the same Act the new sub-sections (1A) and (1B) have been inserted and sub-s. (1C) was added and to sub-s. (4) the proviso has been added. Some of these amendments were suggested by s. 35 and the Fourth Schedule of the English Act of 1929 which may be compared. As to the effects of these important amendments see Introduction. After cl. (p) in sub-s. (1) the word "and" and the new cl. (q) have been added by the Repealing and Amending Act XX of 1937 and by the same Act the new sub-s. (1C) has been omitted. The change is merely verbal as sub-s. (1C) was in the same terms as the new cl. (q) of sub-s. 1.

Prospectus not to be misleading. It is very important to remember that a prospectus should never be misleading. It should reveal the facts in their true colour, as men put their money in the company on the faith of its prospectus. Where a prospectus was issued which purported to invite persons to become shareholders in an old established business, but money was really being asked to feed and supply an ambitious gamble, it was held that the prospectus was false in material particulars. "To advertise that business," observed Lord Hewart C. J., "as a normal business seeking development when money is really being asked to feed and supply an ambitious gamble, is merely deceit. The argument is not that in this or that particular this prospectus is true; the argument is that its whole purpose and effect were to deceive" 1. For the penalty for issuing a false prospectus see. s. 282 post.

Meaning of "address." Sub-sec. 1, cl. (a). Address generally means residence ; it is not sufficient to state the place of business 2.

Founders' shares are generally few in number and of small nominal value. They are generally created for and appropriated to the remuneration of the founders or promoters of the company, they undertaking to pay the preliminary expenses and guarantee the placing of the shares which are offered for public subscription 3. Founders' shares are usually given a right to a share, say one-third of the surplus profits of the company, after paying a fixed dividend (say, seven per cent. per annum) on the other shares; and the reason why the founders' shares attain such high prices in some cases, is that such share of surplus profits, though not very large in itself, may, when spread over a few founders' shares, amount to a very large percentage [1]. The founders' or management shares are ordinarily deferred shares receiving no dividend until the preference and ordinary shares have been paid a fair dividend, the amount varying according to agreement. These shares are generally used to remunerate the promoters or founders of the company or the underwriters of the share capital. They are few in number and when surplus profits are large, these shares become very valuable [2]. In the case, noted below [3], there was only one management share in respect of which no dividend was payable, but it gave the holder thereof a majority of one over all other votes which could on any poll be cast by all other shareholders present in person or by proxy, so that the holder of the share had complete control of the voting power. The management share also conferred a right on a return of capital in a winding up to one-half of any surplus assets remaining after making provision for the claims of the preference shareholders. At a later date the management share was renamed reversionary share and its voting rights altered so that upon a poll on any special or extraordinary resolution (except a resolution for removing an elected director) the holder should have such a number of votes as should (together with any other votes exercisable by him) exceed by one-third the total votes which could be cast by all the other shareholders present in person or by proxy.

"Founders' or management shares."

It is not lawful to exchange the founders' [4] or deferred shares for a larger amount of ordinary shares, as this may be in the nature of issuing the ordinary shares at a discount [5]. Where additional shares are issued at a premium [6], the founders often claim the premium to be profit and demand their proportionate share, for it appears that the premium may be regarded as profit and may be applied in paying dividend [7].

Remuneration of directors.

Cl. (b). If the remuneration of directors is provided for in the articles it cannot be changed without a special resolution [8]. If the articles provide for the remuneration, it may be paid out of capital, in case there is no profit [9]. Directors however may waive their remuneration, and if they do so, they cannot claim it again [10]. Directors cannot get their travelling expenses, unless this is expressly provided for in the articles [11]. For fuller notes see s. 83A and reg. 69 of Table A.

Cl. (c). The words "and of the managers or proposed managers (if any)" were not in the English Act.

What is sufficient statement.

Cl. (d). When the amount of the minimum subscription stated in the prospectus and the memorandum or the articles of association has been subscribed within one hundred and eighty days after the first issue of the prospectus, and the sum payable on application has been paid to and received in cash, the company may proceed to allotment [12]. Ten per cent. of the shares offered was held to be a sufficient statement of the amount [13]. The statement of the minimum subscription must be an express statement and not one which can be implied from other statements in the prospectus 1. Now see the new sub-ss (1), (2) and (2A) of s. 101.

"Subsequent offer."

Where although the first prospectus was headed "for private circulation only", but contained a statement that it had been filed with the registrar, it was held that the circulation of the first prospectus was an offer to the public, and consequently the second prospectus was a "subsequent offer" and that the first offer ought to have been stated 2. The remedy of the allottee in such a case is in damages against the person responsible for the prospectus, and not by rescission 3. The term "friends" used in a prospectus includes business friends 4.

Instalment.

If the prospectus names the days upon which instalments of the shares are payable, the company cannot call up the amount more rapidly. But a general statement that "it is anticipated that no further call will be made" does not prevent the company calling up the whole unpaid amount, and an arrangement between the company and its members as to the times at which calls shall be made is not binding on the liquidator in winding up 5.

"Fully paid up shares."

Cl. (e). A contract to issue shares as fully paid up will not protect the allottee from having to pay up the whole amount of the shares unless there was good consideration for the contract, e. g., either existing debt which was extinguished, or a promise to make over property or to do future work 6.

Requirement of the clause.

Cl. (f). Where the company purchases the benefit of an existing contract, it will be necessary to state both the price paid for such benefit and the price payable under the contract 7. But this clause does not require that the prospectus should, in the case of a completed purchase, disclose the amount of the purchase money paid by the vendor upon his acquisition of the property. As to the disclosure of the name of the vendor's vendor, the test seems to be whether any of the cash paid by the company is paid to the original vendor or not 7.

Cl. (g). For the meaning of the word "cash" see notes to s. 105.

Cl. (h). As to the commission that may be paid to the underwriter see notes to s. 105.

If the terms of the prospectus are afterwards altered, the underwriting agreement may become void 8. See notes to s. 105.

What are preliminary expenses.

Cl. (i). Powers are generally taken in the memorandum of association to pay the preliminary expenses comprising preparation, printing, circulating and advertising the prospectus, and the preparation and printing of the memorandum and articles of association as well as the fees, stamps and registration expenses. But even without the powers a company may pay the preliminary expenses including commission for placing the shares 9. A promoter however cannot recover them if the company refuse to pay, even where there is a provision in the memorandum or the articles in this behalf [1]; for provisions thereof cannot be taken advantage of by the outsiders or even by the members in any other capacity than that of the members [2]. A statement in the articles of association that the company shall pay the preliminary expenses of forming the company does not give the promoters or the solicitor a right to be paid the expenses incurred by them [3].

Notice of contents of contracts.

Cl. (l). A prospectus, which merely specifies the dates of and names of parties to contracts, does not give notice of circumstances contained in the contracts which are material to be known and the omission causes the prospectus to give a false impression [4].

"Material contract."

A material contract under this clause appears to be one "which, upon a reasonable construction of its purport and effect, would assist a person in determining whether he would become a shareholder in the company [5], or one which is calculated to influence persons in making up their minds whether or not they will apply for shares [6]. In this connection see also Gluckstein v. Barnes [7].

A contract may be material although it has been wholly carried out. A mistaken view in this respect is no answer to an action based on non-disclosure, however honest the directors might have been [8].

Construction—estoppel.

Where a clause in a prospectus refers to an agreement and purports to set out its effect with the knowledge and acquiescence of the other contracting party or his duly authorized agent, the latter is thereby estopped from setting up any other construction of the agreement [9].

Effect of non-disclosure.

If the contract is not disclosed, any person who has taken shares on the faith of the prospectus can claim damages suffered by him [10]; but he must prove that if he had known the undisclosed contract, he would not have become a shareholder [11]. Where there is no fraud in fact and the non-disclosure is owing to an honest mistake, a subscriber of shares, who has agreed to waive any fuller compliance with the section than is contained in the prospectus, cannot maintain an action for damages [11].

Cl. (n). See s. 97 and notes.

Sub-s. (3). At the end of this sub-section the following words occur in the English Act of 1929, but not in this Act; viz., "but subject as aforesaid, this section shall apply to any prospectus whether issued on or with reference to the formation of a company or subsequently." See s. 35 (5) of that Act printed in the Appendices.

Effect of failure to comply with the provisions.

Sub-s. (5). Under this sub-section a company is not absolved from the liability under s. 100[1]. The failure to comply with the provisions of this section may in some cases give a right to rescind the contract to take shares, or to damages against the directors; but to establish such a right it is necessary to prove more than mere omission of one or more of the particulars[2] and in such a case the remedy is not against the company in rescission or damages but against the persons responsible for the omission[3].

Liability for breach of a statutory duty.

The law of liability for breach of a statutory duty has thus been stated by Fletcher-Moulton L. J: "If by a statute a duty is laid on any person, every member of the public has a right to have the duty performed. The breach of it does not give every member of the public a right of action, because damage is an essential part of such cause of action; but it is settled law that where damage has accrued to any person through breach of statutory duty by another person the latter is liable."[4].

Loss as a natural result of default.

It will be necessary for the complaining party to show that his loss has arisen as a natural result of the defendant's default in complying with his statutory duty. He must satisfy the Court that if the proper statements had been contained in the prospectus, he would not have taken the shares[5]. But the party alleging misrepresentations will be pinned down to the misrepresentations alleged in his pleadings[6].

Misrepresentation in prospectus.

No misrepresentation or concealment of any material facts or circumstances will be permitted in a prospectus. The public are entitled to have the same opportunity of judging of everything material to a knowledge of the true character of the undertaking[7]. Where a person has been, by the fraudulent misrepresentations of directors or by their fraudulent concealment of facts, drawn into a contract to purchase shares in a company, the directors cannot enforce the contract against him, and he may rescind it[8]. A contract induced by fraud is not void but voidable, and therefore though the persons who by their fraud induced it may not enforce it, other persons may, in consequence of it, acquire interests and rights which they may enforce against the party who has been so induced to enter into it[8]. Under the exception in s. 19 of the Indian Contract Act the contract, even if caused by misrepresentation, would not be voidable, if the defendant had the means of discovering the truth with ordinary diligence. The application of that exception is not restricted to cases where the party is fixed with constructive notice of the true state of affairs[6].

If there is a material misrepresentation in the prospectus upon which a shareholder relied when applying for shares, he is entitled, provided he seeks relief within a reasonable time after learning the truth and before the company is in liquidation, to have his name removed from the register and the amount paid upon the shares returned with interest[9]. Only original subscribers and not purchasers of shares can obtain damages[1], unless the prospectus was issued with a view to induce persons to become purchasers[2]. As to what should be proved to obtain rescission of the contract to take shares and to establish the company's responsibility, see the cases noted below[3]. A variance between a prospectus and the memorandum of association will not, necessarily and as a matter of course, relieve a member from his liability as a contributory[4].

The aggrieved party cannot, as against the company, retain the shares and claim damages[5]. The relief can be claimed even after the shares have been forfeited[6]. Where the forfeiture is not complete, the Court will restrain the company from forfeiting the shares pending an action for rescission, usually requiring the plaintiff to pay into Court the amount of the call[7]. The aggrieved party need not show that the statement in the prospectus was made fraudulently or was known to the person making it to be untrue[8].

If the statement is true at the time it is made and becomes untrue before allotment of the shares, as for instance, if a director named in the prospectus has meanwhile resigned, it will be a good ground for rescission[9].

What may amount to misrepresentation.

Omission of material facts may amount to a misrepresentation[10]. But "in an honest prospectus many facts and circumstances may be lawfully omitted, although some subscribers may be of opinion that these would have been of materiality as influencing the exercise of their judgment"[11]. On "the other hand, if by a number of statements you intentionally give a false impression and induce a person to act upon it, it is not the less false, although if one takes each statement by itself there may be a difficulty in showing that any specific statement is untrue"[12]. The prospectus must be taken as a whole, for "everybody knows that half a truth is no better than a downright falsehood"[13].

Estoppel.

Where a party having a right to rescind his contract, after having knowledge of such right does any act affirming his contract, he cannot afterwards set up his right to avoid the contract[14]. Therefore any act by a shareholder recognizing his position as a member after knowledge of the misrepresentation such as selling or trying to sell his shares, attending meetings, signing proxies, paying calls or accepting dividends will prevent him from obtaining rescission, even though done under a mistake as to his rights[15] unless he has meanwhile definitely elected to rescind the contract as by commencing proceedings[16].

Aggrieved party must seek relief within a reasonable time.

The complaining party should come within a reasonable time [1], as the rights and interests of other persons may intervene. "Where a person has contracted to take shares in a company and his name has been placed on the register, it has always been held that he must exercise his right of repudiation with extreme promptness after discovery of fraud or misrepresentation" [2]. He must also seek relief while the company is a going concern, for upon the commencement of liquidation, voluntary or otherwise, the creditors and other shareholders are interested in retaining his name on the register, and against them he has no claim to set aside the bargain [3].

Where no right of rescission.

Where there is omission to state some fact which ought under this section to be stated, and the omission does not falsify that which is stated, there is no right of rescission [4]. "Where parties are contracting with one another, each may, unless there is a duty to disclose, observe silence in regard to facts which he believes would be operative upon the mind of the other" [5]. "Simple reticence does not amount to legal fraud" [6]. An innocent misrepresentation in a prospectus may however be a ground for rescission [7]. In the following cases there is no right of rescission for misrepresentation and non-disclosure in the prospectus: Where the allottee subscribed for the shares before he saw the prospectus [8]; where the prospectus itself showed that the statements made therein were based on hearsay and were to be verified later on [9]; where the allottee did not rely on the statements, but made investigations himself [10]; where he is a man of such experience that he is not likely to be misled by the statements in the prospectus [11].

Simple notice of repudiation.

It is not enough to serve the company with a notice of repudiation. The aggrieved party must either procure the company to remove his name from the register, or commence proceedings to compel it to do so [12].

Remedy of persons taking shares from an allottee.

A person who takes shares not from the company, but from a person to whom they were allotted, has no remedy against the company [13]. But this rule does not apply where the prospectus is intended and used to induce purchasers in the market to buy the shares [14]. The statutory liability created by this section is cumulative and not in substitution of the law of deceit [15].

As to a shareholder's right against the directors or other persons who have issued a false prospectus, see notes to s. 100.

94. Meaning of "vendor" in section 93. For the purposes of section 93 every person shall be deemed to be a vendor who has entered into any contract, absolute or conditional, for the sale or purchase, or for any option of purchase, of any property to be acquired by the company, in any case where—

(a) the purchase-money is not fully paid at the date of issue of the prospectus; or

(b) the purchase-money is to be paid or satisfied wholly or in part out of the proceeds of the issue offered for subscription by the prospectus; or

(c) the contract depends for its validity or fulfilment on the result of that issue.

As to the circumstances in which a company may be deemed to be a sub-purchaser see Brookes v. Hansen 2.

Where it is simply stated that the vendor is to take "£ 50,000 worth of fully paid up shares", this means fully paid up shares of the market value of £ 50,000 3.

95. Application of section 93 to the case of property taken on lease. Where any of the property to be acquired by the company is to be taken on lease, section 93 shall apply as if the expression "vendor" included the lessor, and the expression "purchase-money" included the consideration for the lease, and the expression "sub-purchaser" included a sub-lessee.

96. Invalidity of certain conditions as to waiver or notice. (1) Any condition requiring or binding any applicant for shares or debentures to waive compliance with any requirements of section 93, or purporting to affect him with notice of any contract, document or matter not specifically referred to in the prospectus, shall be void.

(2) It shall not be lawful to issue any form of application for the shares in or debentures of a company unless the form is issued with a prospectus which complies with the requirements of section 93:

If any person acts in contravention of the provisions of this sub-section, he shall be liable to a fine not exceeding five hundred rupees.

Amendment. By the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936, the original section 96 has been renumbered as sub-s. (1), and sub-s. (2) has been added. For the effect of sub-s. (2) see Introduction.

97. Saving in certain cases of non-compliance with section 93. (1) If a prospectus is issued which does not comply with the provisions of section 93, every person who is knowingly responsible for the issue of such prospectus shall be liable to a fine not exceeding fifty rupees for every day from the day of the issue of the prospectus until a copy complying with the requirements of section 93 is filed.

(2) In the event of non-compliance with or contravention of any of the requirements of section 93, a director or other person responsible for the prospectus shall not incur any liability by reason of the non-compliance or contravention if he proves that—

(a) as regards any matter not disclosed, he was not cognisant thereof ; or

(b) the non-compliance or contravention arose from an honest mistake of fact on his part ; or

Provided that, in the event of non-compliance with or contravention of the requirements contained in clause (n) of sub-section (1) of section 93, no such director or other person shall incur any liability in respect of the non-compliance or contravention unless it be proved that he had knowledge of the matters not disclosed.

Amendment. By the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936, the original s. 97 has been renumbered as sub-s. (2) and the new sub-s. (1) has been inserted. The words in italics in sub-s (2) have been inserted by the same Act, and the new cl. (c) has been added thereby. For the effect of these amendments see Introduction.

Remedy of an aggrieved party. The mere fact of non-compliance with s. 93 does not entitle a person, who has taken shares on the faith of the prospectus, to have a rescission or rectification of the register. His remedy is in damages against those who are responsible for the prospectus 1.

Obligations of companies where no prospectus is issued.

98. (1) A company which does not issue a prospectus on or with reference to its formation shall not allot any of its shares or debentures unless before the first allotment of either shares or debentures there has been filed with the registrar a statement in lieu of prospectus signed by every person who is named therein as a director or a proposed director of the company or by his agent authorised in writing, in the form and containing the particulars set out in the form marked I in the Second Schedule.

(2) This section shall not apply to a private company or to a company which has allotted any shares or debentures before the commencement of this Act or, in so far as it relates to the allotment of shares to a company limited by guarantee and not having a share capital.

Amendment.

By the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936, the words in italics at the end of sub-s. (1) have been substituted for the words "set out in the second Schedule."

Statement in lieu of prospectus.

The requirements of this section about proceeding to allotment are satisfied by the mere filing of the statement in lieu of prospectus, whether the particulars are or are not sufficiently supplied or whether it contains misstatements and omissions; and an allotment is not vitiated by the want of accuracy [1]. Allotment of shares and debentures before a company has filed the statement in lieu of prospectus is not wholly illegal and void [2]. The allotee may also be estopped by conduct from denying that he is a member [3].

Effect of false statement.

If a person applying for shares inspects the statement in lieu of prospectus, the statement becomes the basis of the contract, and if it contains a false statement, he may have a right to rescind [4]. A person who subscribes for shares on the faith of a statement in lieu of prospectus cannot claim compensation under s. 100.

Any person who wilfully makes a false statement in a statement in lieu of prospectus is guilty of a criminal offence [5].

The last few words "or, in so far as..............share capital" of sub-s. (2) are not in the English Act.

shares or debentures had been offered to the public for subscription and as if persons accepting the offer in respect of any shares or debentures were subscribers for those shares or debentures but without prejudice to the liability, if any, of the persons by whom the offer is made in respect of mis-statements contained in the document or otherwise in respect thereof.

(2) For the purposes of this Act it shall, unless the contrary is proved, be evidence that an allotment of or an agreement to allot shares or debentures was made with a view to the shares or debentures being offered for sale to the public, if it is shown—

- (a) that an offer of the shares or debentures or of any of them for sale to the public was made within six months after the allotment or agreement to allot; or
- (b) that at the date when the offer was made the whole of the consideration to be received by the company in respect of the shares or debentures had not been so received.

(3) Section 97 shall apply to the person or persons making the offer as though they were persons named in a prospectus as directors of a company, and the provisions of section 93 shall have effect as if it required a prospectus to state, in addition to the matters required by that section to be stated in a prospectus,—

- (a) the net amount of the consideration received or to be received by the company in respect of the shares or debentures to which the offer relates, and
- (b) the place and time at which the contract under which the said shares or debentures have been or are to be allotted may be inspected.

(4) Where a person making an offer to which this section relates is a company or a firm, it shall be sufficient if the document aforesaid is signed on behalf of the company or firm by all directors of the company or not less than half of the partners, as the case may be, and any such director or partner may sign by his agent authorised in writing.

This section is new. It has been inserted by the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936, and reproduces s. 38 of the English Act of 1929. For the effect of the amendment see Introduction.

Restriction on alteration of terms mentioned in prospectus or statement in lieu of prospectus.

99. A company shall not, at any time, vary the terms of a contract referred to in the prospectus or statement in lieu of prospectus, except subject to the approval of the company in general meeting.

Liability for statements in prospectus.

100. (1) Where a prospectus invites persons to subscribe for shares in or debentures of a company, every person who is a director of the company at the time of the issue of the prospectus, and every person who has authorised the naming of himself and is named in the prospectus as a director or as having agreed to become a director either immediately or after an interval of time, and every promoter of the company, and every person who has authorised the issue of the prospectus, shall be liable to pay compensation to all persons who subscribe for any shares or debentures on the faith of the prospectus for all loss or damage they may have sustained by reason of any misleading or untrue statement therein, or in any report or memorandum appearing on the face thereof, or by reference incorporated therein or issued therewith, unless it is proved—

(a) with respect to every misleading or untrue statement not purporting to be made on the authority of an expert or of a public official document or statement, that he had reasonable ground to believe and did up to the time of the allotment of the shares or debentures, as the case may be, believe that the statement fairly represented the facts or was true;

(b) with respect to every misleading or untrue statement purporting to be a statement by or contained in what purports to be a copy of or extract from a report or valuation of an expert, that it fairly represented the statement, or was a correct and fair copy of or extract from the report or valuation : Provided that the director, person named as director, promoter or person who authorised the issue of the prospectus shall be liable to pay compensation as aforesaid if it is proved that he had no reasonable ground to believe that the person making the statement, report or valuation was competent to make it ; and

(c) with respect to every misleading or untrue statement purporting to be a statement made by an official person or contained in what purports to be a copy of or extract from a public official document, that it was a correct and fair representation of the statement or copy of or extract from the document :

or unless it is proved—

(i) that having consented to become a director of the company he withdrew his consent before the issue of the prospectus, and that it was issued without his authority or consent; or

(ii) that the prospectus was issued with his knowledge or consent, and that on becoming aware of its issue, he forthwith gave a reasonable public notice that it was issued without his knowledge or consent; or

(iii) that, after the issue of the prospectus and before allotment thereunder, he, on becoming aware of any misleading or untrue statement therein, withdrew his consent thereto, and gave reasonable public notice of the withdrawal, and of the reason therefor.

(2) Where a company existing at the commencement of this Act has issued shares or debentures, and for the purpose of obtaining further capital by subscriptions for shares or debentures issues a prospectus, a director shall not be liable in respect of any statement therein unless he has authorised the issue of the prospectus, or has adopted or ratified it.

(3) Where the prospectus contains the name of a person as a director of the company, or as having agreed to become a director thereof, and he has not consented to become a director, or has withdrawn his consent before the issue of the prospectus, and has not authorised or consented to the issue thereof, the directors of the company, except any without whose knowledge or consent the prospectus was issued, and any other person who authorised the issue thereof, shall be liable to indemnify the person named as aforesaid against all damages, costs and expenses to which he may be made liable by reason of his name having been inserted in the prospectus, or in defending himself against any suit or legal proceedings brought against him in respect thereof.

(4) Every person who, by reason of his being a director or named as a director, or as having agreed to become a director, or of his having authorised the issue of the prospectus, becomes liable to make any payment under this section, may recover contribution, as in cases of contract, from any other person who, if sued separately, would have been liable to make the same payment, unless the person who has become so liable was, and that other person was not, guilty of fraudulent misrepresentation.

(5) For the purpose of this section—

(a) the expression "promoter" means a promoter who was a party to the preparation of the prospectus, or the portion thereof containing the misleading or untrue statement, but does not include any person by reason of his acting in a professional capacity for persons engaged in procuring the formation of the company ;

(b) the expression "expert" includes engineer, valuer, accountant and any other person whose profession gives authority to a statement made by him.

This section reproduces the provisions of the Directors' Liability Act passed in England in 1890 for the purpose of strengthening the law as enunciated by the House of Lords in Derry v. Peek [1889] 14 App. Cas. 337 in respect of directors' liabilities. "Now the Directors' Liability Act was passed in 1890, the year after Derry v. Peek was decided in the House of Lords, and as it seems to me, for the express purpose of getting rid of the effect of that decision, so far and so far only as directors and promoters issuing a prospectus on the one hand and persons taking shares and debentures on the other hand are concerned" 1.

This section is confined to prospectus issued by or on behalf of the company and the directors are not liable to purchasers from third parties 2. But see the new s. 98A.

Scope.

Where the plaintiff succeeds on a cause of action under this section, he would be entitled to such "compensation" as he might prove in addition to any damages already recovered in respect of fraudulent misrepresentation 3.

This section as well as s. 93 have created new statutory liabilities in addition to the general law of deceit.

For the meaning of the word "prospectus" see notes to s. 2 (14) and s. 92.

Prospectus ought not to misrepresent facts.

A prospectus ought not to misrepresent actual and material facts or to conceal facts material to be known the misrepresentation or concealment of which may improperly influence and mislead the mind of the reader ; for if he is thereby deceived into becoming an allottee of shares and in consequence suffers loss, he is entitled to proceed against those who thus misled him 4. But mere non-disclosure of facts, unless such non-disclosure had the effect of making the disclosed facts absolutely false, would not be sufficient to sustain a proceeding which is really in the nature of an action for misrepresentation 5. Delay cannot be set up as an answer to such a suit 5.

A prospectus may be "false in material particulars" within the meaning of s. 84 of the (English) Larceny Act, 1861, if by a number of statements a false impression with regard to the financial position of a company is intentionally conveyed, although each statement taken by itself is true 6. See notes to s. 282 post.

Purpose when exhausted.

The proper purpose of a prospectus is to invite persons to become allottees of the shares. When the allotment is completed the office of the prospectus is exhausted and a person who has not become an allottee, but is only a subsequent purchaser of shares in the market, may not be so connected with the prospectus as to render those who issued it liable to indemnify him against losses suffered in consequence of the purchase[1]; for the vendee must show some direct connection between them and himself in the communication of the prospectus and its influence upon his conduct in becoming an allottee[1].

Meaning of "subscribe."

Subscription means application followed by allotment, and not subsequent purchase[2]. An "untrue statement" is a statement in fact untrue, and not a statement in the belief of the directors untrue[3]. It is immaterial that the statement was not fraudulent[4].

Compensation.

"Compensation" must be estimated and awarded with reference to the loss sustained, and does not resemble a penalty[5]. In the case of clark v. Urquhart, supra, Lord Sumner traced the history of the section from the decision of the House of Lords in Derry v. Peek[6] and held that the word "compensation" had no technical significance. The word was selected because it represented the difference between the actual value of the shares or debentures taken and the sums paid for them on the face of the prospectus and at the same time avoided the invidious association of "damages" with dishonesty in such connection[7]. On this point their Lordships reversed the judgment of the Court of Appeal in Urquhart v. Stracey[8]. As to the measure of damages and evidence thereof see Stevens v. Hoare[9].

Meaning of "promoter."

"The term 'Promoter,' says Lord Justice Bowen[10], "is not a term of law but of business usefully summarising up in a single word a number of business operations familiar to commercial world by which a company is generally brought into existence." It is a short and convenient way of designating those who set in motion the machinery by which the Act enables them to create an incorporated company[11]. It involves the idea of exertion for the purpose of getting up and starting a company or what is called "floating" it[12], and also the idea of some duty towards the company imposed by, or arising from, the position which the so-called promoter assumes towards it[13]. In Twycross v. Grant[14] Cockburn C.J. defined the word "promoter" as being one who undertakes to form a company with reference to a given project and to set it going and to take the necessary steps to accomplish that purpose. After referring to a number of authorities Sir Francis Palmer in his Company Precedents 15th ed. (1938) p. 110 observes : "It is obvious therefore that a person who originates the scheme for the formation of the company, has the memorandum and articles of association prepared, executed and registered, and finds the first directors, settles the terms (if any), and makes arrangement for advertising and circulating the prospectus and placing the capital, is emphatically a promoter in the fullest sense.

He controls the formation and future of the company, and it is this control which lies at the root of the fiduciary relation of the promoter to the company. Nor is he the less a promoter if all or most of these activities are performed nominally by a company which he controls. But a person who has done much less than this—takes a much less prominent part—may bring himself within the meaning of the term and may be held liable as promoter"[1].

Term ambiguous.

The term is however ambiguous and it is necessary to ascertain in each case what the so-called promoter really did, before his legal liabilities can be actually ascertained[2]. The question whether a person is or is not a promoter is a question of fact[3]. A person who as principal procures or aids in procuring the incorporation of a company is generally a promoter thereof[4], and he does not escape from liability by acting through agents[5]. But persons who act only professionally, such as counsel, solicitors, accountants, printers of prospectus and the like are not promoters[6].

Promoter.

It is a question of fact in each case as to at what time a person begins or ceases to be a promoter[7]. A promoter does not cease to be such by reason only of the formation of the company and the appointment of directors, but only when the directors take into their own hands what remains to be done in the way of forming the company[8].

Principles governing position of directors and promoters.

The principles governing the position of directors and promoters and their acts have thus been laid down by Lord Lindley[9]: "The first principle is that in equity the promoters of a company stand in a fiduciary relation to it and to those persons whom they induce to become shareholders in it, and cannot in equity bind the company by any contract with themselves without fully and fairly disclosing to the company all material facts which the company ought to know. Erlanger v. New Sombrero Phosphate Co. [1878] 3 App. Cas. 1218 is the leading authority in support of this proposition."

"The second principle is that a company when registered is a corporation capable by its directors of binding itself by a contract with themselves if all material facts are disclosed. Salomon v. Salomon & Co.[10] is the leading authority for this proposition."

"The third principle is that the directors of a company acting within their powers and with reasonable care and honesty in the interest of the company may suffer by reason of their mistakes or errors in judgment. Overend, Gurney & Co. v. Gibb[11] is the leading authority on this head."

"A fourth principle not confined to companies, but extending to them, is that a contract can be set aside in equity in proof that one party induced the other to enter into it by misrepresentations of material facts, although such misrepresentations may not have been fraudulent."

"A fifth principle is that a voidable contract cannot be rescinded or set aside after the position of the parties has been changed so that they cannot be restored to their former position. Fraud may exclude the application of this principle, but I know of no other exception."

Liabilities of directors and promoters.

A promoter cannot retain any profit made out of a transaction to which the company is a party, without full disclosure. The company can affirm the contract and sue for an account and profit with interest 1 or bring an action for rescission of the contract where the other contracting party can be restored to his original position 2. The liability of the promoter or director may also be enforced in a winding up proceeding 3. A gift of shares by a promoter to a director must be accounted for by the director to the company and the company has the option of claiming the thing given or its highest value when held by the director 4.

A promoter may however make a profit upon a sale to the company, even if he is also a director, if he makes full disclosure to the company 5. Whether a promoter is really acquiring any assets as a trustee for the company or the intended company is a question of fact. Where the scheme has throughout been that promoters are to sell to the intended company at a profit the assets they are acquiring, the natural inference of fact is that in respect of those assets he is not intending to be a trustee for the company, but is intending to occupy the position of a vendor. The relationship, when completed with promoters, involves certain fiduciary duties, but cannot be identified with ordinary trusteeship 6. If there is no intention of making a public issue of shares and no such issue is in fact made, the knowledge by all the directors and members of the fact will exonerate the promoters even where the purchase price has been greatly inflated 7. But promoters cannot relieve themselves of their general equitable obligations by any astuteness in the drafting of the articles 6.

Their fiduciary relation.

Persons who purchase property and then create a company to purchase from them the property they possess, stand in a fiduciary position towards that company and must fully state to the company 8 the facts which apply to the property and would influence the company in deciding on the reasonableness of acquiring it 9.

Principles of the law of agency and trustee apply.

Although strictly speaking a promoter cannot be considered an agent or trustee for the company, the company not being in existence at the time, yet the principles of law of agency and trustee-ship are applicable to his case and he is accountable for all moneys obtained by him from the funds of the company without its knowledge 10. The fact that the promoter is acting as agent for the vendors in getting up a company for the purchase of their property does not exonerate him from accounting to the company, when formed, for any secret profit made by him 10. In estimating the amount of the secret profit the promoter is however entitled to be allowed the legitimate expenses incurred by him in forming and bringing out the company, such as those for the reports of surveyors, the charges of solicitors and brokers, and the costs of advertisement, but not a sum of money which he has expended in obtaining from another person a guarantee for the taking of shares 1.

Promoter's liability to account.

Any profit which the promoter makes after he has begun to promote the company and the benefit of any contracts into which he enters during that period belongs to the company 2. Where a promoter is to account to the company for secret profits, the measure of damages is the amount of profit made by the promoter 3; but he is allowed to deduct all reasonable expenses and is liable only for the net profits made 4.

Immediately after registation of the company a promoter is under fiduciary obligations not only to the company as originally constituted, but also as consisting of future allottees and therefore the promoters and directors will not be protected by disclosures made before the public have joined the company 5. Even if all the facts are known to all the members of the company at the time the contract is made, but a misleading prospectus is subsequently issued by the promoters to the public inviting them to join the company, the promoters will be liable 6.

Personal liability of promoters.

A promoter, even though he expressly purports to act as agent or trustee, is personally liable upon all contracts made with him on behalf of the intended company 7, until the contract has been performed or rescinded by either party under some power in the contract or by the consent of all parties or until the company has, with the consent of the other contracting party, undertaken the promoter's liability 8.

Legitimate expenses when payable.

Although not bound to do so, the directors may pay a promoter legitimate expenses incurred by him in forming and bringing the company out 9. Even where there is a general power to pay preliminary expenses to a promoter, payment should not be made without vouchers or investigation 10. But if the memorandum or articles empower directors to pay a specific sum for the costs and expenses of promoters, payment may be made without taxation 11. Directors may be made personally liable for sums improperly paid to promoters 12.

Right of indemnity.

A promoter however has no right of indemnity against the company in respect of any obligation undertaken on its behalf before its incorporation, stipulating that he shall be paid a certain sum as the preliminary expenses 9. Thus inspite of such a provision, the solicitor who prepares a memorandum or articles of association cannot sue the company for his costs for doing so 13, and the promoter or his solicitor who has paid the fees on registering the company cannot recover them from the company 1. Nor is the promoter or any person employed by him entitled to sue the company in respect of any payment for services rendered or expenses incurred before its incorporation, unless after incorporation it expressly agrees with him to make such payment or from other facts the Court can infer a new contract to re-imburse him 2 ; for a company cannot ratify an agreement purporting to have been made on its behalf before its incorporation 3, and its act cannot be evidence of a "new agreement" to re-imburse the promoter if they can be shown to have been made with reference to the obligations of the company to idemnify a third person 4. Nor is a company bound in equity to pay the preliminary expenses because it has adopted and derived benefit from services previous to incorporation 5. Whether there is a fresh contract between the company and the promoters after incorporation is a question of fact 6.

To obtain damages from the directors or promoters an aggrieved shareholder may bring an action after the company has gone into liquidation; but he must show that he has suffered damage, for "fraud without damage or damages without fraud will not found an action" 7. But the Court will direct an inquiry as to damages upon proof of the falsity of material statements 8. If the company failed within a short time after the issue of the prospectus, that will be taken as prima facie evidence that the shares were not worth par 9.

A single debenture-stock holder cannot proceed in tort against persons who have acted as directors of a debtor company or of the company which owns all shares of the debtor company. In principle such an action cannot be sustained. A representative action on behalf of all the stock holders, an action in the name or on behalf of the company, proceedings to compel the trustees to do their duty and take steps to protect the security or proceedings against individual directors for misfeasance to the company give a sufficient well established body of remedies 10.

Liability is joint and several.

Promoters are jointly and severally liable in respect of secret profits 11. When two co-promoters join in the issue of a prospectus inviting subscription for shares with knowledge that a statement contained in that prospectus is untrue and damages are recovered by a person induced to take shares by that statement against one of them, he is entitled to contribution from the other 12 under this section.

Position of co-promoters.

Co-promoters are not partners, nor is one promoter necessarily the agent of the others or the act and admission of one evidence against the others 13. The death of a promoter does not release his estate from obligations he has undertaken to find capital 14, nor from liability in respect of breach of fiduciary duties or moneys secretly received and retained by him 15.

In the absence of an express contract one of several promoters cannot sue another for remuneration for his promoting services [1], but a person assisting promoters can sue for remuneration for his services, if there is a contract to pay for them [2]. Promoters are not, as such, agents or liable for the acts of each other; but an authority to act for each other may be inferred from the terms of a public prospectus or from contract [3].

When a person becomes promoter.

Company's right of rescission.

A man is not necessarily a promoter because at the time he acquires property he contemplates that at some future time he may form a company to purchase the property [4], and if he does not become a promoter until after the acquisition, his only duty is to see that the amount of his profit is known to the purchasing company; otherwise the company may rescind the contract [5]. But if he has disclosed that he is making a profit and fails to make known the amount, rescission is the only remedy for the company [4]. If that has become impossible, the profit cannot be recovered nor damages had [4].

If the purchase is not completed by conveyance of the property, recission may be had, whether the misrepresentation was made fraudulently or innocently [6]; but where the purchase has been completed, rescission can only be ordered when fraud is established [7].

If at the time of acquiring the property the vendor was also a promoter, the company can either rescind the contract or retain it reducing the purchase money to the amount the promoter actually spent upon the purchase in relation to the property [8].

Remedy against vendors.

If the company cannot restore the property in the same state as that in which it was bought, there is no remedy against the vendors except by an action for deceit [9]. Lindley M. R. said: "Fraud may exclude the operation of the principle that a voidable contract cannot be rescined or set aside after the position of the parties has been changed, so that they cannot be restored to their former position" [10].

Distinction between motive and intent.

In considering whether a statement is misleading, the prospectus must be considered as a whole, and if its tendency is to deceive, there is no need to point out some one or more statement which are absolutely false [11]. The motive with which the statement is made is immaterial, for a man is liable for a false statement knowingly made, even if he had no intent to defraud [12]. "If with intent to lead the plaintiff to act upon it they put forth a statement which they knew may bear two meanings, one of which is false to their knowledge, and thereby the plaintiff putting that meaning on it is misled, I do not think they can escape by saying he ought to have put the other" [13].

Construction of prospectus.

Lord Lindley said [1] : "If a man uses language which taken in its natural sense conveys a wrong impression, he can not be heard to say he did not intend to deceive." A man is answerable for what any one might reasonably suppose to be the meaning of the words he has used [2]. But the plaintiff must prove that he understood the statement in the sense in which it is false [3]. The prospectus is read as a whole and "people cannot be expected," as pointed out by Lord Halsbury L. C. "to analyze their own mental sensation so minutely as to be able to explain what particular statement had induced them to become subscribers," [4].

What is a false statement.

A general commendation however is not a false statement even if too highly coloured ; but to say that something is expected when in reality it is not, or that the directors have an intention to do something when they have not, is a mis-statement of fact [5]. A statement that property has been acquired, which has not in fact then been acquired, will be a ground for an action against directors, even if the property is acquired a few days after the allotment of shares [6]. The speeches of a chairman of directors at a meeting of the company or reports issued to shareholders or furnished by agents of the directors, are not evidence against the company [7].

Representation need not be direct.

It is not necessary that the representation should be directed to the person injured. It is sufficient if it be made to some one with the intent that it shall be repeated to and acted upon by the person who is subsequently injured [8].

Misrepresentation must be one of fact.

A misrepresentation, to entitle an allottee to relief, must be one of fact [9]. Where it was stated that more than one half of the first issue of shares had already been subscribed for when in fact such subscription was a sham one, this was held to be a misrepresentation entitling the applicant to recission [10]. This too was held in the following cases:—where it was falsely stated that the surplus assets as appearing by the last balance-sheet amounted to upwards of 10,000 l ; where it was falsely stated that a particular mine was in full operation and making large daily returns [11] ; where it was falsely represented that the patented articles were a commercial success [12] beyond the experimental stage [13] ; where a promoter who was to get a part of the purchase money was untruly put forward as one of the vendors [14] ; where it was stated untruly that the vendor was to pay all the preliminary expenses [1]; where it was stated untruly that the company was the sole manufacturer of asbestos in France and had a practical monopoly [2]; where it was stated that no promotion money was to be paid, while in truth a large sum was to be paid in this way [3].

What is fact.

The statement that something will be done is not a statement of an existing fact [4]; but a representation of belief, opinion, expectation or intention is a representation of fact, for "the statement of a man's mind is as much a matter of fact as the state of his digestion" as observed by Lord Justice Bowen [5]. There is no safety in ambiguous statements which in one sense are true, but in another sense are not true—"which keep the word of promise to the ear and break it to the hope," for the rule is that the applicant is entitled to put any reasonable construction on such a statement and if according to that construction it is untrue, he is entitled to relief [6].

Report of expert.

If the prospectus is based upon the report of an expert which contains false statements of fact, a person who applied for shares relying on the report may rescind the contract, unless the directors had clearly warned the public that they did not vouch for the accuracy of the report [7]. Concealment in a prospectus may amount to fraud [8].

What is a material statement.

A statement in a prospectus as to the persons who are to be directors is a material statement, and if untrue, a person subscribing on the faith of it is prima facie entitled to rescind [9]. So, if before the allotment some of the directors mentioned in the prospectus retire and the fact of retirement is not communicated to the allottee, he would be entitled to rescind the contract and claim a refund of the money paid by him [10]. It is misrepresentation to state in a prospectus that share capital has been "subscribed" when it has only been allotted in fully paid up shares [11], or that the company has contracted for purchase of a property, when in fact there is negotiation only [12].

What is "untrue statement."

A misleading statement in a prospectus is an "untrue" statement and the liability imposed by the section is absolute. Persons issuing such statements can only escape liability under the statute by proving that they had "reasonable ground" for believing and did in fact believe the statement to be true. The Court will refuse to give effect, as against a shareholder, to a tricky waiver clause in a prospectus or application form [13]. "I quite agree in this", observed Lord Blackburn, "that whenever a man inorder to induce a contract says that which is in his knoweldge untrue with the intention to mislead the other side, and induces them to enter into the contract, that is down right fraud......I further agree in this, that when a statement or representation has been made in the bona fide belief that it is true, and the party who has made it afterwards comes to find out that it is untrue, and discovers what he should have said, he can no longer honestly keep up that silence on the subject after that has come to his knoweldge thereby allowing the other party to go on, upon a statement which was honestly made at the time when it was made, but which he has not now retracted when he has become aware that it can be no longer honestly persevered in ; that would be fraud too...And I go on further still to say what is perhaps not quite so clear, but certainly it is my opinion, where there is a duty or an obligation to speak, and a man in breach of that duty or obligation holds his tongue and does not speak, and does not say the thing he was bound to say, if that was done with the intention of inducing the other party to act upon the belief that the reason why he did not speak was because he had nothing to say, I should be inclined myself to hold that that was fraud also" 1.

[12] Ross v. Estates Investment Co. [1868] 3 Ch. App. 682.

[13] Greenwood v. Leathershod Wheel Co. (supra).

A misstatement of intention is a misstatement of fact, and if the allottee was misled by it, an action of deceit may be founded on it. Where an allottee has been induced to take shares or debentures both by his own mistake and by a material misstatement by the directors, and the former receives injury thereby, the latter may be made liable in an action for deceit 2.

Notice.

The provisions in the articles or in Table A apply only to notices relating to the ordinary business of the company, and service in the way there pointed out is not sufficient for the purpose of fixing a shareholder with knowledge of a misrepresentation which would entitle him to repudiate his shares, unless he had been guilty of laches after notice of the misrepresentation 3.

If the prospectus states the effect or terms of a document and offers it for inspection, the intending subscriber is not bound to inspect it. Jessel M. R. observes : "When men issue a prospectus in which they make statements of the contracts made before the formation of the company, and state that the contracts may be inspected at the office of the solicitors, it has always been held that those who accepted these false statements as true, were not deprived of the remedy merely because they neglected to go and look at the contracts" 4. "It was argued for the company", said Lord Watson, "that inasmuch as the contracts for the purchase of the concession were generally referred to towards the end of the prospectus, the respondent must be held to have notice of their contents. This appears to be one of the most audacious pleas that ever was put forward in answer to a charge of fraudulent misrepresentation. When analysed it means simply that a person who has induced another to act upon a statement made with intent to deceive must be relieved from the consequences of his deceit, if he has given his victim constructive notice of a document the perusal of which would expose fraud" 5.

Non-disclosure.

In the case of non-disclosure however, says Eve J., "there must be something more than mere non-disclosure proved before misrepresentation is established ; it must, I think, be shown that the non-disclosure is the non-disclosure of something the disclosure of which would falsify some statement in the prospectus" 6.

An underwriter who takes shares relying on the names of the directors cannot obtain rescission on the ground of defects in the prospectus 1; but it is not necessary for him to show that the statement complained of was fraudulently made or was known to the directors to be untrue 2.

Effect of director's omission & adoption.

A director who was aware that a prospectus was being issued to the public, but did not trouble to read it, abstained from inquiry as to its contents and gave no notice under the Act, is responsible for the contents of the prospectus 3; and a director who subsequently adopted a prospectus he had not originally approved was also held liable 4.

Their duty.

If the directors discover a mistake in the prospectus, it is their duty to point it out in unambiguous terms, and not merely to send a new prospectus correctly stating the facts 5. As to the measure of damages, see the cases noted below 6.

If the misstatement is due to a mistake of law, the fact that the directors took the opinion of counsel will not protect them 7.

Where the directors make a statement to existing shareholders, they have a higher duty to such shareholders than to the general public and may come under liability for dereliction of that duty in a case falling short of actual fraud 8.

Who can sue.

Those persons who buy in the market cannot, as a general rule, sue under this section, nor will false report made by directors to a general meeting entitle a person who buys shares on the faith of it from a shareholder to rescind his contract 9. But this rule does not apply where it is shown that the prospectus was intended and used to induce purchasers in the market to buy the shares 10. Where however a person applied for shares on looking at a proof prospectus which was subsequently issued, it was held that he could not sue for loss sustained by reason of the statements alleged to be untrue, as he had agreed to underwrite the shares before the issue of the prospectus 11.

If one prospectus fulfils the statutory conditions, but another does not, only those who subscribed on the latter are entitled to relief 12.

Joinder of parties.

A number of persons who subscribe on the faith of the same prospectus may join as plaintiffs in one action; but each must prove separately that he was induced to take the shares by the untrue statements in the prospectus 13. Claims for rescission against the company and damages against the directors may also be included in one action 14.

Contribution. A director who has paid damages for loss arising out of misrepresentation in the prospectus can recover contribution from co-directors who might have been liable in the first instance 1. Where the directors know that one of their body is obtaining subscription for the shares, the company is responsible for representations made by him 2.

Actio personalis &c. The principle actio personalis moritur cum persona applies where no property, proceeds or value of property have been received by the deceased director and added to his estate 3. Where a person who has taken shares on the faith of a fraudulent prospectus dies, his executors however can commence or continue an action for the loss suffered by his estate 4; but where the director or promoter charged dies, executors cannot be sued unless his estate has benefited by the fraud 5, and the action will fail unless a complete judgment has been obtained for an ascertained amount before the defendant's death 6.

Criminal liability of director. Directors may be convicted of conspiracy by inducing persons to subscribe for shares or debentures by fraudulent statements 7. Statements made to the directors by the vendors or promoters do not alone afford reasonable grounds for believing the truth of the matter stated 8. If the statement complained of is contained in a report set out in the prospectus, the company is responsible if the report was fraudulent on the part of the company's agent 9.

The directors of a new company had conspired to deceive the members of the committee of the Stock Exchange and to induce them, contrary to the intent of certain of their rules, to order a quotation of the shares of the company in the official list of the Stock Exchange and thereby to induce members of the public to believe that the said company had complied with the said rules so as to entitle it to have shares quoted in the official list of the Stock Exchange: held, the averments, if proved, sufficiently supported the charge of criminal conspiracy 10.

Effect of misreading prospectus. Where a person applies for shares on the misreading of the prospectus and not on the faith of its representation, he is not entitled to resile from the contract 11. A person, who before the registration of a company applies for shares on the faith of a prospectus, ought to be treated as having become aware of any variations between the prospectus and the memorandum of association at the earliest possible opportunity 12.

Allotment.

Restriction as to allotment. 101. (1) No allotment shall be made of any share capital of a company offered to the public for subscription unless the amount stated in the prospectus as the minimum amount which in the opinion of the directors must be raised by the issue of share capital in order to provide the sums or, if any part thereof is to be defrayed in any other manner, the balance of the sum required to be provided in respect of the matters specified in sub-section (2) has been subscribed, and the sum of at least five per cent. thereof has been paid to or received in cash by the company.

(2) The matters for which provision for the raising of a minimum amount of share capital must be made by the directors are the following, namely :—

(a) the purchase price of any property purchased or to be purchased which is to be defrayed in whole or in part out of the proceeds of the issue ;

(b) any preliminary expenses payable by the company and any commission so payable to any person in consideration of his agreeing to subscribe for or of his procuring or agreeing to procure subscriptions for any shares in the company ;

(c) the repayment of any moneys borrowed by the company in respect of any of the foregoing matters, and

(d) working capital.

(2A) The amount referred to in sub-section (1) as the amount stated in the prospectus shall be reckoned exclusively of any amount payable otherwise than in cash and is in this Act referred to as the minimum subscription.

(2B) All moneys received from applicants for shares shall be deposited and kept in a scheduled bank as defined in the Reserve Bank of India Act, 1934, until returned in accordance with the provisions of sub-section (4) or until the certificate to commence business is obtained under section 103.

(2C) In the event of any contravention of the provisions of sub-section (2B) every promoter, director or other person knowingly responsible for such contravention shall be liable to a fine not exceeding five hundred rupees.

(3) The amount payable on application on each share shall not be less than five per cent. of the nominal amount of the share.

(4) If the conditions aforesaid have not been complied with on the expiration of one hundred and eighty days after the first issue of the prospectus, all money received from applicants for shares shall be forthwith repaid to them without interest, and, if any such money is not so repaid within one hundred and ninety days after the issue of the prospectus, the directors of the company shall be jointly and severally liable to repay that money with interest at the rate of seven per cent. per annum from the expiration of the one hundred and nintieth day : Provided that a director shall not be liable if he proves that the loss of the money was not due to any misconduct or negligence on his part.

(5) Any condition requiring or binding any applicant for shares to waive compliance with any requirement of this section shall be void.

(6) This section, except sub-section (3) thereof, shall not apply to any allotment of shares subsequent to the first allotment of shares offered to the public for subscription.

(7) In the case of the first allotment of share capital payable in cash of a company which does not issue any invitation to the public to subscribe for its shares, no allotment shall be made unless the minimum subscription (that is to say)—

(a) the amount (if any) fixed by the memorandum or articles and named in the statement in lieu of prospectus as the minimum subscription upon which the directors may proceed to allotment ; or has been subscribed and an amount not less than five per cent. of the nominal amount of each share payable in cash has been paid to and received by the company.

(8) Sub-section (7) shall not apply to a private company or to a company which has allotted any shares or debentures before the commencement of this Act.

Amendment. By the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936, sub-sections (1), (2), (2A), (2B) and (2C) have been substituted for the original sub-sections (1) and (2). This was suggested by s. 39 of the English Act of 1929. By the said amending Act in sub-s. (4) for the word "twenty" the word "eighty", for the word "thirty" the word "ninety" and for the word "thertieth" the word "ninetieth" have been substituted. For the effect of these amendments see Introduction.

The original sub-sections (1) and (2) ran thus :

Restriction as to allotment. 101. (1) No allotment shall be made of any share capital of a company offered to the public for subscription, unless the following conditions have been complied with, namely :—

(a) the amount (if any), fixed by the memorandum or articles and named in the prospectus as the minimum subscription upon which the directors may proceed to allotment ; or (b) if no amount is so fixed and named, then the whole amount of the share capital so offered for subscription, has been subscribed, and the sum payable on application for the amount so fixed and named, or for the whole amount offered for subscription, has been paid to and received in cash by the company.

(2) The amount so fixed and named and the whole amount aforesaid shall be reckoned exclusively of any amount payable otherwise than in cash, and is in this Act referred to as the minimum subscription.

Contract to take share.

A contract to take shares in a company is generally constituted by an application and an allotment notified 1 to the applicant, the application being an offer and the allotment being its acceptance. "The course of decisions has determined that to obtain a binding allotment, there must be application, an allotment and a communication of that allotment 2. A binding contract is not made until the acceptance is notified to the applicant 3. If the notice of allotment is sent by post, the acceptance is deemed to be notified when the notice is posted, even though it never reaches the applicant 4, provided the offer is one which can be accepted by a letter sent through post 5. An allottee will not be constituted a member unless he has notice of the fact of allotment. A formal notice is however not necessary if he is made aware of the fact 6. The mere entry of his name on the register of members is not sufficient for the purpose 6. Where allotment was made long after the application and notice of allotment was said to have been sent just before the company went into liquidation and it was not shown when the name of the applicant was put on the register of members, it was held that the applicant was not a member of the company [1]. Allotment should be made within a reasonable time and a person is not bound to accept an allotment made after the lapse of a reasonable time [2]. As to the meaning of allotment, see the cases noted below [3].

Allotment.

An allotment is none the less an allotment although money paid by the applicant is subsequently returned on its being found that the prospectus contained misleading statements [4]. Allotment once made and communicated cannot be cancelled [5], as that would be reducing the capital of the company [6].

Allotment and transfer.

An allotment of shares is an act of the company by which the applicant for shares becomes the holder of unappropriated shares. While shares standing in the name of A cannot be allotted to B even with A's consent, such shares may be transferred by A to B, the company's power of interference in respect of such transfer being determined by its articles of association [7].

Offer & acceptance may be oral.

The offer or the acceptance may be oral [3]. Before notification of the acceptance is received [8], or if sent by post, posted [9], the offer may be withdrawn and repayment of the deposit money claimed [10]. Even if the offer is made in writing, it may be withdrawn orally [11]. But an withdrawal is effective only when it reaches the company and not at the time of posting [12]. An allotment made without application, the allotment money not being paid, is illegal and the directors who make such allotment are guilty of misfeasance [13]. They are also guilty of misfeasance if they are party to a calculated and deliberate fraud in the floatation of the company and in the conduct of its business [13].

Effect of mistake.

There is no contract however where the offer to take shares is made by a man who believes it to be a totally different company [14].

Conditional allotment.

An allotment may be made conditionally. In such a case the allottee does not become a member, until the condition is performed, even if his name is (conditionally) registered [15]. But where there is a conditional application and an unconditional allotment, there is no contract, as the parties are not ad idem [16]. Where the application is conditional, the directors are not at liberty to allot unconditionally [17]. An allottee may be estopped from contending that the allotment is void on the ground of non-fulfilment of condition, when by his conduct, that is, by accepting the position as shareholder, by accepting dividend, by filing suit for it and by pledging the shares, he has waived the condition 1.

Where a person takes some shares on condition that he would be appointed chairman of the local board of directors, and he is allotted shares and appointed chairman, but subsequently there is a breach of the condition by his dismissal, his remedy is by an action for damages and not for getting his name removed from the register of members 2.

Contract through agent.

Where an application is made before, but allotment notice is sent after, incorporation of the company, they constitute a complete contract 3. An agent to apply for shares will not necessarily be deemed to have authority to receive notice of allotment 4. In ordinary circumstances the application for shares is a mere proposal which may be withdrawn before acceptance is communicated, communication to the agent through whom the application was made being sufficient 5. But where the authority given by the applicant to a person to apply for shares is a continuing and irrevocable authority coupled with an interest, the former is not entitled to withdraw 6. In the case of underwriting or sub-underwriting the filling up of an application form is neither necessary nor appropriate 5.

Withdrawal of proposal.

S. 6 of the Indian Contract Act IX of 1872 says: "A proposal is revoked—(1) by the communication of notice of revocation by the proposer to the other party; (2) by the lapse of time prescribed in such proposal for its acceptance, or, if no time is prescribed, by the lapse of a reasonable time, without communication of the acceptance." If the proposer revokes his offer before acceptance, sub-s. (1) mentioned above applies. Even if he does not revoke, sub-s. (2) applies after the lapse of a reasonable time unless of course the proposer's conduct amounts to a waiver of the revocation 7. Care should be taken that nothing is introduced in the letter of allotment differing from the terms of the prospectus or the application form, for in such a case the applicant may withdraw as there is no completed contract 8. If a new term is introduced the allotment letter is no longer an acceptance, but it is a new offer which must be accepted before there is a contract 9. Thus where a man applied for shares and got an allotment letter marked "not transferable", it was held that there was no contract and the applicant was allowed to repudiate the shares 10.

Contract where binding and where not.

To allot less than the number of shares applied for does not constitute a binding contract, unless words in the application authorize a partial allotment 11. Where the directors allotted shares on terms which were illegal, e. g., that they should be paid for by fees earned, it was held that there was no contract and the allottee was not a shareholder 12.

An allotment made on an application signed in a false name constitutes a good contract, if the applicant intended to get the benefit of the shares. In such a case he will be put in a winding up on the list of contributories in his true name[1]. But it will be otherwise if the application was not intended to be acted upon, as in the case in which the application was sent inorder to increase the supposed number of shares applied for[2].

Repudiation.

The allotment must be made within a reasonable time of the application, otherwise the applicant may repudiate the shares[3]. The Court has jurisdiction to specifically enforce a contract by a person to take and by a company to allot shares[4].

Who is to make allotment.

Unless the articles otherwise provide, the duty of making allotment primarily falls upon the directors and it cannot be delegated to a purely ministerial officer[5]. But where the articles do not specifically make such provision and state on the other hand that the general management of the company shall be by the secretaries and treasurers subject to the supervision of the directors, it was held that allotment by the secretaries and treasurers was valid[6]. Where the power of allotment is vested by the deed of settlement in the board of directors the quorum of which is three, they have no right to delegate such powers, e.g., to two directors[7].

Directors' duty in making allotment.

In making allotment the directors should bear in mind that they are trustees of the company and must allot the shares for its benefit. It is a breach of duty for directors to issue shares to themselves and their friends in more favourable terms than those offered to the public, unless the latter are expressly informed of the arrangement[8]. Although the directors are not bound to issue shares at a premium when they are above par in the market[9], they should not allot them at par to members of their own body or their friends, for they should always seek to obtain the benefit of the premium for the company[10]. If they make such allotment at par they must account to the company for the profits[10]. Directors should not also allot shares to themselves for the purpose of obtaining control of the voting power in the company. If they do so the Court will declare the allotment invalid and rectify the register and in the meantime will restrain the allottees from voting in respect of the shares thus allotted[11]. The directors may however purchase shares for the purpose of increasing their voting power[12]. An allotment by directors is valid even though they themselves have not paid the allotment money on the shares held by them, and such objection is not open after liquidation[13].

Remedy in case of irregular allotment.

Allotment of shares by an irregularly constituted board is prima facie invalid ; but if the articles validate an act done by a de facto director in a bona fide manner, the Court will uphold the act[14]. A person to whom shares have been irregularly allotted has the right to have his name taken off the register of members, but he cannot do so after he has accepted his share certificate[1]. The right to rescind an allotment on the ground of fraud and misrepresentation must be exercised at the earliest moment when the allottee becomes aware of them (see the last case). For other cases on this point see notes to s. 38.

Allotment in contravention of the section.

The Court has no jurisdiction to restrain directors by injunction from going to allotment in contravention of this section, the proper remedy being a suit against the directors for breach of their statutory duty[2]. If the directors proceed to make allotment in contravention of this section, the liability under the next section is substituted[3]. But a director who was not present at the meeting at which the board determined to go to allotment is not liable[4].

Amount payable on application.

Sub-s. (3) This sub-section lays down a mandatory requirement. The applicant for shares is under a statutory obligation to pay 5 per cent. of the nominal amount of the shares applied for along with his application, and the company is also under the obligation to see that he does so, and it is against public policy that any allotment should be made without compliance with this requirement. Hence an application for share, if not accompanied by any such payment, does not legally constitute a valid offer so as to entitle the company to demand the share money from the applicant[5]. This sub-section is applicable to all allotments whether at the time of floating the company or any subsequent period. Any allotment which is made without payment of at least 5 per cent. of the nominal value of the shares by the applicant is therefore invalid[6]. But although sub-s. (6) provides that sub-s. (3) is applicable to subsequent allotments also, Mr. Justice Panckridge of the Calcutta High Court has held in a later case that there is nothing in this section which forbids the directors to allot shares to applicants who neglect to pay the application money in terms of the prospectus, once the first allotment has been regularly made, although it may be that a provision in the prospectus empowering them to do this would be an infringement of the Act[7]. His Lordship says that this is a somewhat unsatisfactory conclusion. But it is submitted respectfully that this is due to the unsatisfactory drafting of the amendment. Sub-s. (1) which forbids an allotment where five per cent. of the amount of share subscribed has not been paid to or received in cash by the company, does not by reason of sub-s. (6), apply to subsequent allotments. Still by the retention of sub-s. (3) this difficulty has been created. This sub-section only says that the amount payable on application on each share shall not be less than five per cent. of the nominal amount of the share, but there is nothing in the section to show that a subsequent allotment without the payment of application money is void or voidable. The amount payable on application must be paid in cash or by cheque, but cheques that are subsequently dishonoured do not constitute payment, even though immediately replaced by other cheques[8], nor do cheques received and held over though subsequently honoured[9]. Allotment made before the money is "paid to and received by" the company is voidable and the money is not received until the cheques are cashed[8 & 9].

Consideration.

An agreement by a company to pay a sum of money at once for future services and to satisfy the amount by an issue of fully paid shares may be good consideration for the allotment 1. But a company cannot allot two hundred £ 1 shares for 10 s. each in consideration of the allottee making a loan of £ 100 to the company 2.

Allotment to vendor's nominee.

If an agreement is made that shares shall be allotted to a vendor "or his nominee," an allotment to the vendor without giving him an opportunity of making a nomination is bad 3.

Allotment of new shares.

When upon an issue of new shares offer is made to the existing shareholders, the acceptance by the latter completes the contract and no allotment is necessary. Sometimes the offer is coupled with a right to renounce the shares in favour of a third party. In such a case the directors cannot refuse to accept the person in whose favour the renunciation is made, relying upon a clause in the articles entitling them to reject transfers 4.

Allotment to minor.

If allotment is made to a minor he can at any time before or on attaining majority, repudiate the transaction ; but he cannot merely on the ground of infancy demand repayment of the amount paid 5.

Stamp.

A notice of allotment, though not stamped, is admissible in evidence to establish the fact that notice of the allotment has been given 6. For stamp see Appendix—"Stamp Duty."

A suit for allotment money is cognizble by a Court of Small Causes 7.

See notes to s. 30.

Effect of irregular allotment.

102. (1) An allotment made by a company to an applicant in contravention of the provisions of [section 98 or section 101] shall be voidable at the instance of the applicant within one month after the holding of the statutory meeting of the company and not later or in any case where the company is not required to hold a statutory meeting or where the allotment is made after the holding of the statutory meeting within one month after the date of the allotment and not later, and shall be so voidable notwithstanding that the company is in course of being wound up.

(2) If any director of a company knowingly contravenes or permits or authorises the contravention of any of the provisions of [section 98 or section 101] with respect to allotment, he shall be liable to compensate the company and the allottee respectively for any loss, damages or costs which the company or the allottee may have sustained or incurred thereby : Provided that proceedings to recover any such loss, damages or costs shall not be commenced after the expiration of two years from the date of the allotment.

Amendments.

By the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936, in sub-s (1) the words in italics have been inserted as a private company is not required to hold a statutory meeting [vide the new s. 77 (11)] and there may be allotments after the statutory meeting of a public company. In sub-ss. (1) and (2) the words and figures within square brackets have been substituted for the word and figure "section 101" by the amending Act II of 1938.

Remedy for irregular allotment and when it is lost.

As to the remedy of an allottee for irregular allotment, see notes to the previous section. Where an allottee after discovering that the allotment has been made in contravention of s. 98 or s. 101 treats the contract as subsisting, as for example by attempting to sell the shares 1, by executing a transfer deed of the shares 2, by paying calls &c. or taking dividends 3, or by attending and voting at a general meeting in person or by proxy 4, he may lose his right to avoid the allotment.

Allotment is voidable only.

Under this section the allotment is only voidable at the instance of the applicant. Until he elects to avoid the contract, it remains good 5. The Act recognizes that the observance of the formalities may be dispensed with, and irregular, as distinguished from void, transactions may be confirmed. Consequently a person may become shareholder to most, if not all, intents and purposes, without complying with all the formalities prescribed in that behalf by a statute, charter or constitution of the company, and although there may be irregularities in the issue of shares to him 6. So where the allottee pays allotment money and subsequently acts as a shareholder without objection, he will not be permitted to raise the question of validity of the allotment; for once the shares have been registered in the name of the allottee and he has done acts only consistent with his being a member, he will be taken to have agreed to take the shares, or at any rate he will be estopped from denying that he has so agreed 7.

Where allotment is valid.

Where allotment was made by the managing directors by virtue of a delegated authority from two other directors who had not paid their allotment moneys, there was no valid allotment 8.

Notice avoiding allotment.

It is not necessary that the dissatisfied applicant should take proceedings within the month after the statutory meeting or before liquidation is commenced, if he has given notice avoiding the allotment, within the month and commenced action within a reasonable time 9. But he will be precluded from avoiding the allotment, if he has expressly, or by conduct, affirmed it with knowledge of the irregularity 10. A small amount of acquiescence after knowledge will bar an allottee's right of rescission 10.

Sub-s. (2). If any director knowingly contravenes or permits or authorizes the contravention of any of the provisions of s. 101, he will be liable to compensate the allottee as well as the company 1.

Where director is not liable.

A director who was not present at the meeting making the allotment and did not know the irregularity is not liable, even though he was present and voted at a subsequent meeting confirming the minutes regarding the allotment 2.

Effect of a petition for winding up.

A member cannot be relieved from the shares upon the ground of misrepresentation in the prospectus, on a bill filed after the presentation of a petition for winding up on which an order was subsequently made 3.

As to cost see Barnett v. Eccles. Corpn. 4.

Limitation.

A special limitation of two years is prescribed by the section for instituting proceedings for damages against directors.

Restrictions on commencement of business.

103. (1) A company shall not commence any business or exercise any borrowing powers unless—

(a) shares held subject to the payment of the whole amount thereof in cash have been allotted to an amount not less in the whole than the minimum subscription ; and

(b) every director of the company has paid to the company on each of the shares taken or contracted to be taken by him, and for which he is liable to pay in cash, a proportion equal to the proportion payable on application and allotment on the shares offered for public subscription or, in the case of a company which does not issue a prospectus inviting the public to subscribe for its shares, on the shares payable in cash ; and

(c) there has been filed with the registrar a duly verified declaration by the secretary or one of the directors in the prescribed form, that the aforesaid conditions have been complied with ; and

(d) in the case of a company which does not issue a prospectus inviting the public to subscribe for its shares, there has been filed with the registrar a statement in lieu of prospectus.

(2) The registrar shall, on the filing of a duly verified declaration, in accordance with the provisions of this section certify that the company is entitled to commence business, and that certificate shall be conclusive evidence that the company is so entitled :

3. Kent v. Freehold Land Co. [1868] 3 Ch. App. 493.
4. [1900] 2 Q. B. 104.

Provided that, in the case of a company which does not issue a prospectus inviting the public to subscribe for its shares, the registrar shall not give such a certificate unless a statement in lieu of prospectus has been filed with him.

(3) Any contract made by a company before the date at which it is entitled to commence business shall be provisional only, and shall not be binding on the company until that date, and on that date it shall become binding.

(4) Nothing in this section shall prevent the simultaneous offer for subscription or allotment of any shares and debentures or the receipt of any money payable on application for debentures.

(5) If any company commences business or exercises borrowing powers in contravention of this section, every person who is responsible for the contravention shall, without prejudice to any other liability, be liable to a fine not exceeding five hundred rupees for every day during which the contravention continues.

(6) Nothing in this section shall apply to a private company, or to a company registered before the commencemet of this Act which does not issue a prospectus inviting the public to subscribe for its shares or, in so far as its provisions relate to shares, to a company limited by guarantee and not having a share capital.

Interference by Court.

The Court will not interfere to prevent the directors from commencing business on the ground that all the nominal capital has not been subscribed for, nor on the ground that the business actually commenced is on a much smaller scale than that contemplated by the prospectus [1].

Winding up before commencement of business.

If a company is wound up without having become entitled to commence business, persons who have supplied goods or rendered services will have no claim against the company [2]. Even the bank which received the application money cannot recover for its services [3].

Contract made before incorporation.

A contract can be made with a trustee for the company before its incorporation, in which case the trustee will be personally liable, unless he expressly protects himself from liability by including a power to rescind the contract [4]. It is usual in such a case to make it one of the objects in the memorandum of association and also to provide in the articles that the directors shall adopt the preliminary agreement. But this will not bind the company, unless a new contract is entered into by which the company agrees to be bound by the terms of the preliminary agreement [5]. See notes to s. 23, ante.

Adoption of agreement.

A resolution of the board of directors adopting the agreement will not however create a contract between the company and the vendor 1. A new contract in some cases may be inferred from the circumstances and the conduct of parties 2. But the mere fact that the directors think that they are bound by the contract with the trustee and act accordingly is not enough, even though large sums of money are expended and work is done in that mistaken belief 3.

Agreement should be executed after incorporation.

Where the contract is purported to be made with the company itself, it is sometimes prepared before its incorporation and then referred to in the memorandum of association and the articles as an "agreement already drawn up and intended to be executed," and for indentification, signed or initialled by some of the subscribers to the memorandum or by a solicitor. In such a case the agreement requires to be executed by the company and this must be done after due consideration by the directors who must exercise their judgment upon it, and if they are not an independent body, the company may repudiate the contract 4.

Borrowing powers.

As regards borrowing powers it should be remembered that every trading company has an implied power to borrow money and to charge its property as security for payment of the loan 5. A company which borrows money to pay off existing debts does not thereby increase its liability 6.

Payment in cash.

Sub-s. (1) (a) & (b). In order that a transaction between a company and an allottee of shares may amount to "payment in cash," each party must have an actual demand on the other for present payment 7. Any circumstance giving rise to a right of set off or an agreement to render services may be a good payment 8. "In Fothergill's case" 9, observed Lord Justice James, "the bargain in effect was to give paid up shares in satisfaction of the money which was to be paid for other shares. But if a transaction resulted in this, that there was on the one side a bona fide debt payable in money at once for the purchase of property, and on the other side a bona fide liability to pay money at once on shares, so that if bank notes had been handed from one side of the table to the other in payment of calls, they might legitimately have been handed back in payment for the property, it did appear to me in Fothergill's case 9 and does appear to me now, that this Act of Parliament did not make it necessary that the formality should be gone through of the money being handed over and taken back again ; but that if the two demands are set off against each other the shares have been paid for in cash" 10.

Certificate conclusive.

Sub-s. (2). The certificate of the registrar is conclusive and the Court will not take any evidence that there have been irregularities 11. Any allotment by a public company which neither issues a prospectus nor files a statement in lieu of prospectus is altogether void ; but if a statement has been filed and the registrar's certificate obtained, inaccurate or insufficient particulars do not render the statement a nullity or the allotment absolutely void 1.

Meaning of "provisional."

Sub-s. (3). The word "provisional" means that the contract is to be read as if it contained a provision that it shall not be binding on the company unless and until the company becomes entitled to commence business 2 ; so the company cannot be sued on a contract whether express or implied 2. A company does not by its adoption of a contract of purchase made before its formation by persons purporting to act on its behalf incur any contractual relation with or obligation to the vendor 3. A company cannot ratify a contract made before its incorporation, for it was not in existence at the time 4.

A contract made with the trustee for a company is not binding on the latter 5, unless a new contract is made after its incorporation 6. A resolution of the board adopting the contract will not suffice 7.

Sub-s. (5). The words "every person who is responsible for the contravention" would include directors, managers and other executive officers and possibly the secretary 8.

Sub-s. (6). The last portion of this sub-section, namely, "or in so far as its provisions relate" &c. does not occur in the English Act of 1908.

This section does not apply to a private company.

Return as to allotments.

104. (1) Whenever a company having a share capital makes any allotment of its shares, the company shall, within one month thereafter,—

(a) file with the registrar a return of the allotments, stating the number and nominal amount of the shares comprised in the allotment, the names, addresses and descriptions of the allottees and the amount (if any) paid or due and payable on each share ; and

(b) in the case of shares allotted as fully or partly paid up otherwise than in cash, produce for the inspection and examination of the registrar a contract in writing constituting the title of the allottee to the allotment together with any contract of sale, or for services or other consideration in respect of which that allotment was made, such contracts being duly stamped, and file with the registrar copies verified in the prescribed manner of all such contracts and a return stating the number and nominal amount of shares so allotted, the extent to which they are to be treated as paid up, and the consideration for which they have been allotted.

(2) Where such a contract as above-mentioned is not reduced to writing, the company shall, within one month after the allotment, file with the registrar the prescribed particulars of the contract stamped with the same stamp-duty as would have been payable if the contract had been reduced to writing, and these particulars shall be deemed to be an instrument within the meaning of the Indian Stamp Act, 1899, and the registrar may, as a condition of filing the particulars, require that the duty payable thereon be adjudicated under section 31 of that Act.

(3) If default is made in complying with the requirements of this section, every officer of the company who is knowingly a party to the default shall be liable to a fine not exceeding five hundred rupees for every day during which the default continues :

Provided that in case of default in filing with the registrar within one month after the allotment any document required to be filed by this section, the company, or any person liable for the default, may apply to the Court for relief, and the Court, if satisfied that the omission to file the document was accidental or due to inadvertence or that on other grounds it is just and equitable to grant relief, may make an order extending the time for the filing of the document for such a period as the Court may think proper.

(4) Nothing in this section shall apply to the issue and allotment by a company of shares which under the provisions of its articles were forfeited for non-payment of calls.

Amendment.

By the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936, the new sub-s. (4) has been added. The amendment excludes forfeited shares, subsequently re-issued, from the purview of the section.

Failure to file return of allotment.

Sub-s. 1, (a). The directors and managers are bound to furnish to the registrar the return of allotment as provided in this section, and their failure to do so renders them liable to the penalties provided in sub-s. (3). A plea of ignorance of the law will not be accepted as an excuse ; but where the default is not intentional, the full or a heavy penalty may not be exacted 1.

Contract for fully or partly paid up shares.

Sub-s. 1, (b). Inorder to comply with cl. (b) it is not necessary that within the four corners of the filed contract there should be a complete identification of the property other than cash which is the consideration given for the shares, provided the filed contract states plainly the nature of the consideration, and supplies the means of identification by reference to an unfiled contract which contains a full description of the consideration 1. Where there is a contract referred to in sub-s. 1 (b), but it is not filed with the registrar, the only consequence of the failure to file it will be the penalty under sub-s. (3), and the allottee is not responsible as a contributory for calls as though the shares were unpaid shares 2. On the other hand if the consideration payable for the shares is illusory, or permits an obvious money-measure to be made showing that discount has been allowed, filing the contract with the registrar will not relieve the allottee from the obligation to pay the nominal value of the shares or the amount of the discount in cash. But the Court is not bound to inquire in each case whether the price was reasonable or whether what was given for the shares had a cash value in the market equal to the nominal value of the shares 3.

Where contract for fully paid up shares is valid.

Although a limited company cannot release a shareholder from the obligation to pay for his shares either in money or money's worth and cannot therefore issue its shares at a discount, it can, provided the contract is duly registered, buy property at any price it thinks fit, and can pay for such property in fully paid up shares 4. The transaction will be valid and binding upon its creditors if the company has acted in it honestly and not colourably and has not been so imposed upon by the vendor as to be relieved from the bargain 4.

Value received by company.

The value received by the company is measured by the price at which the company agreed to buy the property, and whilst the transaction is unimpeached, that is the only value which the Court can take into consideration 4.

Payment in money's worth.

Payment in money's worth is sufficient payment 5, so is the extinguishment of debt due from the company to the shareholder 6, even though no call has been made and no debt is presently due to the company 7. It is not material that the company has not entered the payment in its books 8.

Set off.

Although a company may agree to accept some other form of payment or set off an existing debt 9 against a present liability to pay calls 10, a release without payment in money or money's worth or on payment of less than the full amount is ultra vires. But any circumstance creating a set off or an agreement to render service may be a good payment 11.

Ultra vires.

"It is beyond the power of a limited company to release a shareholder from his obligation without payment in money or money's worth. It cannot give fully paid up shares for nothing and preclude itself from requiring payment in money or money's worth" 12. An agreement to accept the supply of goods at a future time against calls is not valid 13. An agreement by the company to pay a sum of money at once for future services, e.g., erection of a building and to satisfy the amount by an issue of fully paid up shares, may however be a good consideration for the issue of those shares 1.

Consideration for issue of fully paid shares.

If the consideration be in kind, the Court will not inquire whether it was really of value equal to the nominal amount of shares issued (unless the consideration is illusory), or permitted of an obvious money value 2, but the written contract may go very far to establish that the consideration is not illusory, even if there is much to point to its being excessive 3. In fact a company can agree to purchase property and pay for services at any price it thinks proper and may make the payment in shares, provided that it does so honestly and not colourably, and has not been so imposed upon as to be entitled to repudiate the bargain 4.

Where under the condition of a debenture deed the debenture-holder is allotted some ordinary shares on surrender of his debenture, the allotment of fully paid up shares in exchange for his debenture is an allotment of shares "as fully paid up otherwise than in cash" within the meaning of sub-s. (I), clause (b) of this section 5.

A company cannot validly contrat for a fixed present consideration that upon every increase of capital a definite proportion of the new shares shall be issued as fully paid to the vendors 6.

The surrender of a right to payment of a sum or bonus payable out of profits only when no profits have been earned is not a good consideration either in cash or in kind for the issue of fully paid shares 7.

The Act does not require that the contract to be registered should identify the shares by numbers 8.

As to the meaning of the word "issue," see the cases noted below 9.

Proviso.

Under the proviso to sub-s. (3) particulars of inadvertence must be set out in the affidavit 10. When a document is sought to be filed with the registrar after expiry of the time, he should file it and inform the officer presenting it that unless within the time to be specified by the registrar the company obtains an order from the Court extending the time, he will take steps to prosecute the officer for default. The effect of accepting and filing the documents after time by the registrar does not relieve the defaulter from liabilities without proper relief being granted by the Court 11. The registration of the articles is not the registration of a contract within the meaning of this section. It must be a contract which shows what shares are to be issued as fully paid up and for what consideration 12.

"Contract in writing."

Ratification of previous contracts with vendors of business by the board of directors cannot be described as a contract in writing constituting the title of the allottee within the meaning of sub-s. (1) (b) 1.

Stamp.

If a liquidator finds that a contract for the allotment of shares has not been stamped and filed, it is his duty to stamp it at the expense of the company and file it when stamped 2. This section does not require that a duty payable on a conveyance should be levied on an agreement for allotment of shares in future 3. If after entering into a contract for sale the parties, inspite of the risk that either party may resile from the contract, refrain from getting an actual deed of conveyance executed, they can successfully evade the payment of a higher duty 3. In the last cited case the vendor company entered into an agreement on the 26th January, 1921 to sell all their business, undertaking and assets including goodwill &c., with effect from the 1st January, 1920. The agreement recited that the purchase shall be completed on such date as shall be mutually arranged. Afterwards a sale deed was executed by the vendors in respect of the immovable property but no deed of transfer was executed as regards the goodwill and movable property. The agreement deed was stamped as agreement with eight annas stamp: held that the agreement deed did not amount to a conveyance, but was merely a contract to sell, although the parties intended that when completed it should take effect from 1st January, 1920. So it was properly stamped.

Sub-s. (1) (b) of this section requires the particulars of a contract "constituting the title of the allottee" to be filed with the registrar. If this contract consists merely of an agreement to transfer properties in the future, the particulars thereof cannot be treated as a transfer of the properties in presentioe. Sub-s. (2) clearly lays down that the particulars would be liable to the same stamp duty as would have been payable if the contract of which the particulars are supplied had been reduced to writing 4. In the last cited case the contract was oral; but it does not make any difference if the contract is in writing 5.

Commissions and Discounts.

(b) in the case of shares not offered to the public for subscription, disclosed in the statement in lieu of prospectus, or in a statement in the prescribed form signed in like manner as a statement in lieu of prospectus and filed with the registrar and, where a circular or notice, not being a prospectus inviting subscription for the shares is issued, also disclosed in that circular or notice.

(2) Save as aforesaid and save as provided in section 105A, no company shall apply any of its shares or capital money either directly or indirectly in payment of any commission, discount or allowance, to any person in consideration of his subscribing or agreeing to subscribe, whether absolutely or conditionally, for any shares of the company, or procuring or agreeing to procure subscriptions, whether absolute or conditional, for any shares in the company, whether the shares or money be so applied by being added to the purchase-money of any property acquired by the company or to the contract price of any work to be executed for the company, or the money be paid out of the nominal purchase-money or contract price, or otherwise.

(3) Nothing in this section shall affect the power of any company to pay such brokerage as it has heretofore been lawful for a company to pay, and a vendor to, promoter of, or other person who receives payment in money or shares from, a company shall have and shall be deemed always to have had power to apply any part of the money or shares so received in payment of any commission, the payment of which, if made directly by the company, would have been legal under this section.

The words in italics in sub-s (2) have been inserted by the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936. For effect of the amendment see Introduction.

Company cannot issue shares at a discount.

Subject to the statutory provision as to paying commission for the underwriting of shares and as to paying the usual brokerage, a company cannot issue shares at a discount [1], even by way of compromise [2], or in any other indirect way [3]. Contract for doing so is void [4], and cannot be enforced [5]. If an arrangement for the issue of the shares is such that in the course of its due working out there is as much as a possibility that in the result the shares will have been issued at a discount, then the issue of the shares as fully paid cannot be justified 1. In a winding up proceeding the holder of shares issued at a discount must make good the deficiency 2. An agreement to issue bonus shares as fully paid up to subscribers to debentures is ultra vires the company and is void 3. Upon liquidation the holders of such shares will be liable to pay up the full amount in cash 3.

A company has no power to issue shares at a discount so as to render the shareholder liable for a smaller sum than that fixed for the value of the shares by the memorandum of association, and such issue shall be invalid, although the contract with the shareholder has been registered 4.

Set off may be valid.

An agreement by a shareholder with the company to set off against future calls a present liability of the company to pay cash may however be valid, if registered 5. An agreement by a company to grant its contractor shares on payment of the allotment, the balance to be recovered in cash or from value of goods supplied, does not contravene this section 6.

Allottee's liability.

It being ultra vires for a limited company to issue shares at a discount or by way of bonus, although authorized to do so by the articles, the holders of such shares are not thereby relieved from liability in a winding up to calls for the amounts unpaid on their shares 7.

"It is beyond the powers of a limited company", observed Lord Macnaghten, "to limit the liability of shareholders in a manner inconsistent with the conditions of the memorandum of association. The directors therefore had no authority from the company to issue shares at a discount or on any terms relieving the shareholder from liability to pay in full. The shareholders had no power to authorize the directors to do on behalf of the company that which the company itself could not authorize them to do. The articles of association no doubt empower the directors to issue shares on such terms as they think fit consistently with the provisions of the Companies Acts. The articles in express terms purport to authorize the directors to issue shares at a discount. That provision, however, is in contravention of the statute, and simply void ; neither the company, nor the shareholders, even if they had been unanimous, could have empowered the directors to do anything of the kind" 7.

To pay commission to a person for taking shares is akin to issuing shares at a discount ; but they are not the same things, for if the company goes into liquidation before the commission is paid, the whole amount of the shares can be called up, but the shareholder will be an unsecured creditor for the commission and may not get in full 8.

Rate of commission and payment of a lump sum.

If the articles of association allow commission at a specified rate, a commission consisting of a lump sum cannot be paid 9. The payment of a small commission however, e.g. 2½ per cent., to the brokers for their services as such is not ultra vires 10. The Court will look at the substance of the transaction and will prohibit a pretended purchase and re-sale which is in fact only a device to cover payment of a commission 9. The commission may however be of any amount [1]. The payment of commission must be authorized by the articles; authority in the memorandum is not sufficient [2].

Disclosure of commission.

A private company which had powers under its articles to pay commission to any person procuring subscription for its shares, offered to the plaintiff a specified commission in consideration of her being the means of providing any sum that they might accept from her introduction. The amount or rate of this commission was not disclosed in any statement prescribed by the Act. A person introduced by the plaintiff advanced money to the company who allotted shares in respect of it and paid to the plaintiff a sum on account and in part payment of the commission. The plaintiff sued for the balance of her commission and the company counter-claimed for the payment made. It was held: (1) that the commission was not brokerage within the meaning of the section; (2) that it was unlawful as not disclosed under the provisions of the statute, so the plaintiff could not recover the balance claimed, and (3) that the company could not recover the sum already paid [3]. Where a person applies for obtaining certain shares in the expectation of obtaining some commission or special gain and an arrangement is made in accordance therewith by the promoters, and the application is granted, the applicant, on allotment, becomes a shareholder in presentiæ, absolutely, the breach or the unenforceability of the latter arrangement under this section being a collateral agreement does not in any way interfere with the liability of the person as contributory on liquidation of the company [4].

Meaning of "underwriting."

In England prior to the Act of 1900 a company had no power to pay a commission to a person upon the issue of its share [5] capital, and the position of an underwriter was in no way different [5]. The word underwriting means agreeing to take so many shares as are specified in the underwriting letter, if the public or other persons do not subscribe for them [6]. The consideration is the payment of a commission whether the underwriter is called upon to take up any shares or not. It has been held by the House of Lords that an agreement giving the underwriter an option to subscribe for further shares as consideration for underwriting is not an application of shares in payment of commission within the section, and is lawful [7]. Where the shares are at a premium an allotment for less than premium, but not below par, is not an allotment at a discount [7].

The underwriting letter usually authorizes the person to whom it is addressed to apply in the name of the underwriter should he fail to do so when called upon [8]. Such an authority is said to be an "authority coupled with an interest" and therefore after acceptance by the promoter, it is irrevocable [9]; but in such a case, before so applying, the recipient must carefully perform all conditions. He must have accepted the underwriting letter and communicated his acceptance to the underwriter to make the bargain a binding one 1. If the words "when called upon" are used, the underwriter must have been first called upon to subscribe 2. In many cases the underwriting agreement itself establishes a contract to take shares at once 3.

Where the underwriting letter contains a provision that it is to hold good notwithstanding any variation in the prospectus, the underwriter will not be bound if the changes are such as practically constitute a different venture 4.

The retention of the underwriting letter by the promoter with the consent of the underwriter raises an inference that the bargain is complete 5. If the underwriting letter states that "this engagement is binding for two months," the Court of Appeal has held that it means "this offer shall remain open for two months" and an acceptance even after the subscription lists were closed is binding 6.

Repudiation by underwriter.

An underwriter who takes up shares on the faith of a prospectus containing untrue statements has the same right to repudiate the shares as any other subscriber 7. But in the case noted below 8 the Court of Appeal in England decided an "important and interesting point" as observed by Lord Hanworth M. R. at p. 28 of the report. The plaintiff's case was that he took shares in the company through certain sub-underwriters relying on some representations in the draft prospectus which was adopted by the company after incorporation. As these representations subsequently became falsified, he claimed rescission of the contract, removal of his name from the register of members and return of the money paid to the company. The plaintiff was the undisclosed principal of the sub-underwriters who gave him a letter of renunciation on the strength of which the plaintiff upon payment of the allotment money got his name registered in respect of those shares.

Their Lordships discussed the rights of an undisclosed principal and held that generally speaking he is entitled to enforce the contract made by the agent on his behalf, but this rule does not apply where the agent contracts in such terms as import that he is the real and only principal. "A contract to become a member of a company is, in my opinion, one of that class of contracts in which an undisclosed principal cannot insist on taking the place of a party apparently contracting on his own account" [per Lawrence L. J. at p. 36]. "In such a case it is not right to treat the agent as necessarily interchangeable with his principal so as to enable the principal to come forward and seek to disaffirm the contract on the ground of a misrepresentation on which he alone had relied."

As to the letter of renunciation it was held that the acceptance at a later date of the plaintiff could not be said to be an acceptance by the company of the plaintiff on the basis of the prospectus. The letter of renunciation printed on the allotment letter was in the following form :

"When the balance (if any) due on the allotment has been paid by you this letter of allotment can be renounced until January, 1928 in favour of any other person provided the form of renunciation below is duly completed and signed, and that the person in whose favour the renunciation is made signs the form of acceptance, also below... Renounced allotment letters must be forwarded to the transfer office of the company as shown on the reverse side of this letter, on or before January 21, 1928. Thereafter it will only be possible to transfer such shares by deed in the ordinary way." Then comes the form for renunciation. "To the Directors of the Associated Greyhound Racecourse, Ltd. Gentleman I/We hereby renounce my/our right to the within-named shares, and nominate.........to have all the benefits thereof...Signature of Holder." Then there is a form of acceptance to be signed by the nominee : "I/We hereby accept the nomination to the rights to the within-named shares, and I/we authorise you to place my/our name (s) on the register of members in respect of the said shares"[1].

Deceased underwriter.

The contract of underwriting is enforceable against the executors of the deceased underwriter[2], and even if there are duties of finding capital, this is not such a personal contract as to expire with the contractor[3].

Caution.

The company should see that all the underwriters have paid their application money and that their cheques have been cashed, otherwise in the event of the issue being a failure a few underwriters by combining not to pay the application money or stopping their cheques may prevent the company from going to allotment as was done in Mears v. Western Canada Pulp & Paper Co.[4]. It should be remembered that it is a condition precedent to a valid allotment that the whole of the application money should have been paid to and received by the company in cash. Any means by which money can be remitted may be used ; but the remittances or cheques must be cleared and the actual cash received by the company before allotment[4].

Where the underwriting commission was authorized by the articles not to exceed 25 per cent., an agreement for underwriting shares upon a reconstruction of the company for a commission of 10 per cent. was held to be perfectly legal[5].

"Shares offered to the public."

The words "shares offered to the public" in sub-s. 1, cl. (a) does not mean shares offered by a promoter to a few of his friends, relations or customers[6]. For the meaning of "placing" shares as distinguished from subscribing for shares see Gorrissen's case [1873] 1 Ch. App. 507, 515. For other cases see notes to s. 2 (14) and s. 92.

"Statement in the prescribed form."

The expression "statement in the prescribed from" in sub-s. (1), cl. (b) seems to allow a second statement in lieu of prospectus to be filed where the original statement did not disclose the intention to pay commission. The statement required to be filed under this sub-section with the registrar disclosing the amount or rate of commission to be paid by the company in the case of shares not offered to the public must be filed before the shares are allotted[7].

Sub-s. (2). In respect of the words "apply any of the shares or capital money" in sub-s. (2) Lord Davey has said that they naturally mean "apply its capital, either in the form of shares before issue when they may be described as potential capital, or in the form of money derived from the issue of shares"[8], and following this dictum Warrington J. has decided that commission cannot be paid out of premium payable to the company on the issue of the shares[9]. Unless it is possible to make the issue of the shares the exclusive consideration for rendering the service contemplated under sub-s. (2) apart from the issue of capital, the transaction will be in direct contravention of the said sub-section 1.

Limits of brokerage.

Sub-s. (3). The limits within which brokerage may be paid seem to be this, as pointed out by Lord Justice Lopez : "Where it is made out that the services of the broker are reasonably necessary, that the brokers are properly employed in the issue of the capital of the company and that the payment of the commission of so much per cent. is a fair and just payment for services rendered" 2, a brokerage may be paid. It would not be safe to pay more than 5 per cent.

Shares may be issued at a premium 3 and such premium may be regarded as profit available for paying dividend 4.

This section applies to private as well as public companies 1 and commissions illegally paid can be recovered 5.

(a) no such shares shall be redeemed except out of profits of the company which would otherwise be available for dividend or out of the proceeds of a fresh issue of shares made for the purposes of the redemption or out of sale proceeds of any property of the company ;

(b) no such shares shall be redeemed unless they are fully paid ;

(c) where any such shares are redeemed otherwise than out of the proceeds of a fresh issue, there shall out of profits which would otherwise have been available for dividend be transferred to a reserve fund, to be called "the capital redemption reserve fund", a sum equal to the amount applied in redeeming the shares, and the provisions of this Act relating to the reduction of the share capital of a company shall, except as provided in this section, apply as if the capital redemption reserve fund were paid-up share capital of the company ;

(d) where any such share are redeemed out of the proceeds of a fresh issue, the premium, if any, payable on redemption must have been provided for out of the profits of the company before the shares are redeemed.

(2) There shall be included in every balance-sheet of a company which has issued redeemable preference shares a statement specifying what part of the issued capital of the company consists of such shares and the date on or before which those shares are, or are to be, liable to be redeemed or, where no definite date is fixed for redemption, the period of notice to be given for redemption.

If a company fails to comply with the provisions of this sub-section, the company and every officer of the company who is in default shall be liable to a fine not exceeding one thousand rupees.

(3) Subject to the provisions of this section, the redemption of preference shares thereunder may be effected on such terms and in such manner as may be provided by the articles of the company.

(4) Where in pursuance of this section a company has redeemed or is about to redeem any preference shares, it shall have power to issue shares up to the nominal amount of the shares redeemed or to be redeemed as if those shares had never been issued, and accordingly the share capital of the company shall not for the purpose of calculating the fees payable under section 249 be deemed to be increased by the issue of shares in pursuance of this sub-section.

Provided that, where new shares are issued before the redemption of the old shares, the new shares shall not, so far as relates to stamp duty, be deemed to have been issued in pursuance of this sub-section unless the old shares are redeemed within one month after the issue of the new shares.

(5) Where new shares have been issued in pursuance of the last foregoing sub-section, the capital redemption reserve fund may, notwithstanding anything in this section, be applied by the company, up to an amount equal to the nominal amount of the shares so issued, in paying up unissued shares of the company to be issued to members of the company as fully paid bonus shares.

Further issue of capital.

105C. Where the directors decide to increase the capital of the company by the issue of further shares such shares shall be offered to the members in proportion to the existing shares held by each member (irrespective of class) and such offer shall be made by notice specifying the number of shares to which the member is entitled, and limiting a time within which the offer, if not accepted, will be deemed to be declined; and after the expiration of such time, or on receipt of an intimation from the member to whom such notice is given that he declines to accept the shares offered, the directors may dispose of the same in such manner as they think most beneficial to the company.

Amendments.

By the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936, the new sections 105A, 105B and 105C have been inserted. Sections 105A and 105B are almost a verbatim reproduction of ss. 47 and 46 respectively of the English Act of 1929. S. 105C is new. For the effects of these new sections see Introduction.

Statement in balance-sheet as to commissions and discounts.

106. Where a company has paid any sums by way of commission in respect of any shares or debentures or allowed any sums by way of discount in respect of any debentures, the total amount so paid or allowed or so much thereof as has not been written off, shall be stated in every balance-sheet of the company until the whole amount thereof has been written off.

Issue of debentures.

Debentures may be lawfully issued at a discount, but a scheme under which debentures so issued give to the holders an immediate right to exchange them at their nominal value for shares is invalid as it is capable of being used as a means of issuing shares at a discount [1].

Payment of Interest out of Capital.

107. Where any shares of a company are issued for the purpose of raising money to defray the expenses of the construction of any works or buildings or the provision of any plant which cannot be made profitable for a lengthened period, the company may pay interest on so much of that share capital as is for the time being paid up for the period and subject to the conditions and restrictions in this section mentioned, and may charge the same to capital as part of the cost of construction of the work or building, or the provisions of plant :

Power of company to pay interest out of capital in certain cases.

Provided that—

(1) no such payment shall be made unless the same is authorised by the articles or by special resolution ;

(2) no such payment, whether authorised by the articles or by special resolution, shall be made without the previous sanction of the [Central Government], which sanction shall be conclusive evidence for the purposes of this section that the shares of the company, in respect of which such sanction is given, have been issued for a purpose specified in this section ;

(3) before sanctioning any such payment, the [Central Government] may, at the expense of the company, appoint a person to inquire and report to the [Central Government] as to the circumstances of the case, and may, before making the appointment, require the company to give security for the payment of the costs of the inquiry ;

(4) the payment shall be made only for such period as may be determined by the [Central Government] ; and such period shall in no case extend beyond the close of the half-year next after the half-year during which the works or buildings have been actually completed or the plant provided ;

(5) the rate of interest shall in no case exceed four per cent. per annum or such lower rate as the [Central Government], may, by notification in the [Official Gazette], prescribe ;

(6) the payment of the interest shall not operate as a reduction of the amount paid up on the shares in respect of which it is said ;

(7) the accounts of the company shall show the share capital on which, and the rate at which, interest has been paid out of capital during the period to which the accounts relate ;

(8) nothing in this section shall affect any company to which the Indian Railway Companies Act, 1895, or the Indian Tramways Act, 1902, applies.

Amendments. Throughout this section the words "Central Government" have been substituted for the words "Local Government" by the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937 which came into operation on the 1st April, 1937. But with the exception of sub-s. (5) [proviso (5) ?] the functions of the Central Government under the section have, with effect from 1st April, 1938, been entrusted to the Provincial Governments—Vide Gazette of India dated 26th March, 1938, Part I, p. 440. In proviso (3) of this section the words within the second square brackets have been substituted for the words "such Central Government" by the Repealing and Amending Act XXXIV of 1939. In proviso 5 the words "Central Government" have been substituted for "Governor General in Council" and the words "Official Gazette" have been substituted for "Gazette of India" by the said Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937.

Payment must be made in good faith. Interest on advance before the call is made may be paid out of capital, if so authorized by the articles, provided that the directors make the payment in good faith and in the honest exercise of their discretion. The interest is due to the shareholder in the capacity of a creditor 1.

In the English Act "Board of Trade" takes the place of the "Central Government" in the section. The words "which sanction shall......................in this section" in proviso (2) do not occur in the English Act.

Certificates of Shares, etc.

Limitation of time for issue of certificates. 108. (1) Every company shall, within three months after the allotment of any of its shares, debentures or debenture stock, and within three months after the registration of the transfer of any such shares, debentures or debenture stock, complete and have ready for delivery the certificates of all shares, the debentures, and the certificates of all debenture stock allotted or transferred, unless the conditions of issue of the shares, debentures or debenture stock otherwise provide.

(2) If default is made in complying with the requirements of this section, the company, and every officer of the company who is knowingly a party to the default, shall be liable to a fine not exceeding fifty rupees for every day during which the default continues.

Lien not to be entered. The company should not enter on the certificate any statement that it has a lien on the shares 2. A certificate is prima facie evidence of title of the person named therein 3.

Rights of holder in good faith.

The holder in good faith for value of an untrue certificate has a right to damages against the company but not to the shares as against the true owner 1. If the certificate is a forgery, the company comes under no liability 2 even when the forgery was the act of the secretary 3.

Secretary's authority.

In the absence of any evidence that the company has ever held out the secretary as having authority to do anything more than the mere ministerial act of delivering share certificates, when duly made, to the true owners of the shares, the company is not estopped by the forged certificate from disputing the claim of the plaintiffs or responsible to them for the wrongful action of the secretary 4.

Legal and equitable titles.

The certificate only shows the legal title to the shares and accordingly the person who relies upon the certificate should get his title made complete by taking a transfer to his own name and getting his name registered; otherwise a previous equitable title, e. g., a mortgage may intervene 5.

The statement usually contained in a certificate that no transfer will be registered without production of the certificate does not render the company liable for any loss arising to a person holding the certificate, nor is it a contract that a transfer would not be registered without its production. Such a note is a mere statement of the company's practice and is not a contract 6. But see the new s. 34 (3).

Apart from this section the certificates should be issued within a reasonable time 7. See notes to s. 29 and s. 83.

Information as to Mortgages, Charges, etc.

Certain mortgages and charges to be void if not registered.

109. (1) Every mortgage or charge created after the commencement of this Act by a company and being either—

(a) a mortgage or charge for the purpose of securing any issue of debentures; or

(b) a mortgage or charge on uncalled share capital of the company; or

(c) a mortgage or charge on any immoveable property wherever situate, or any interest therein; or

(d) a mortgage or charge on any book debts of the company; or

(e) a mortgage or a charge, not being a pledge on any movable property of the company except stock-in-trade; or

(f) a floating charge on the undertaking or property of the company; shall, so far as any security on the company's property or undertaking is thereby conferred, be void against the liquidator and any creditor of the company, unless the prescribed particulars of the mortgage or charge together with the instrument (if any) by which the mortgage or charge is created or evidenced, or a copy thereof verified in the prescribed manner are filed with the registrar for registration in manner required by this Act within twenty-one days after the date of its creation, but without prejudice to any contract or obligation for repayment of the money thereby secured, and when a mortgage or charge becomes void under this section, the money secured thereby shall immediately become payable :

Provided that—

(i) in the case of a mortgage or charge created out of British India, comprising solely property situate outside British India, twenty-one days after the date on which the instrument or copy could, in due course of post, and if despatched with due diligence, have been received in British India shall be substituted for twenty-one days after the date of the creation of the mortgage or charge, as the time within which the particulars and instrument or copy are to be filed with the registrar ; and

(ii) where the mortgage or charge is created in British India but comprises property outside British India, the instrument creating or purporting to create the mortgage or charge or a copy thereof verified in the prescribed manner may be filed for registration notwithstanding that further proceedings may be necessary to make the mortgage or charge valid or effectual according to the law of the country in which the property is situate ; and

(iii) where a negotiable instrument has been given to secure the payment of any book debts of a company, the deposit of the instrument for the purpose of securing an advance to the company shall not for the purposes of this section be treated as a mortgage or charge on those book debts ; and

(iv) the holding of debentures entitling the holder to a charge on immoveable property shall not be deemed to be an interest in immoveable property.

(2) Where any mortgage or charge on any property of a company required to be registered under this section has been so registered, any person acquiring such property or any part thereof, or any share or interest therein, shall be deemed to have notice of the said mortgage or charge as from the date of such registration.

[In this section 'British India' does not include Burma or Aden, whatever the date of the mortgage or charge in question].

Amendment. By the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936, the original s. 109 has been renumbered as sub-s. (1) in which the original cl. (e) has been re-lettered as cl. (f) and the new cl. (e) has been inserted. By the said amending Act the new sub-s. (2) has been added. Under the old provisions of the Act a charge or mortgage created over movable property of the company other than book debts or the uncalled share capital was not required to be registered. The first amendment requires such charges or mortgages to be registered with certain qualifications. The second amendment is designed to affect transferees with notice as from the date of registration. The last paragraph within square brackets has been inserted by the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937 which came into operation on 1st April, 1937.

Scope. The provisions of this section relating to a mortgage or charge created by a company do not apply to a charge arising by operation of law 1.

Meaning of "debenture." A "debenture" means a document which either creates or acknowledges a debt 2. It is usually associated with a corporation of some kind. Debentures are usually bonds issued by a company for Rs. 100, and are offered to the public by means of a prospectus in the same manner as shares. The application for and allotment of debentures are also similar to those in the case of shares 3.

Meaning of "charge." As to what a "charge" is, the following observation of Lord Justice Atkin should be borne in mind : "I think there can be no doubt that where in a transaction for value both parties evince an intention that property existing or future shall be made available as security for the payment of a debt and that the creditors shall have a present right to have it made available, there is a charge even though the present legal right which is contemplated can only be enforced at some future date, and though the creditor gets no legal right of property, either absolute or special, or any legal right to possession, but only gets the right to have the security made available by an order of the Court. ………… If on the other hand the parties do not intend that there should be a present right to have the security made available, but only that there should be a right in the future by agreement such as a license to seize goods, there will be no charge" 4.

Fixed & floating charges. The charge created by a debenture may either be 'fixed' or 'floating'. When the charge is 'fixed' it affects the title to the property and the company can only deal with the property affected subject to the charge. But when the charge is a 'floating' one the company may, in the ordinary course of business, deal with the property covered by the charge, mortgaging, selling, disposing of it or using it up as the business requires, at any time before the charge attaches 5. The terms 'floating security' and 'floating charge' are synonymous 6. Lord Macnaghten lays down the principle that "a floating security is an equitable charge on the assets for the time being of a going concern ; it attaches to the subject charged in the varying conditions it happens to be from time to time. It is of the essence of such a charge that it remains dormant until the undertaking charged ceases to be a going concern or until the person in whose favour the charge is created intervenes. His right to intervene may of course be suspended by agreement. But if there is no agreement for suspension, he may exercise his right whenever he pleases" (last note, last page). For the meaning of "floating charge" see the case noted below [1].

In the case of a fixed charge for the recovery of a specific sum of money from a specific property, a transfer of an interest immediately takes place when the charge is created, while a floating charge for the recovery of money from the general assets is contingent, that is, on the occurrence of some event a fixed sum of money becomes recoverable from the specific assets which are in existence at the time. When the contingency arises, the charge is crystalized and then becomes a fixed charge. A floating charge is an agreement by which the creator of the charge stipulates that in the event of certain contingency an interest in the property, which happens to be in his possession at the time, shall be conveyed to the holder of that charge [2].

A floating charge on a part of a company's property is within this section [3]. The principal tests whether the charge is a floating one are : first, if it is a charge upon all of a certain class of assets, present or future ; secondly, if the assets charged would, in the ordinary course of business, be changing from time to time and thirdly, if expressly or by necessary implication the company has the power, until some step is taken by the debenture holders or trustees, of carrying on its business in the ordinary way so far as regards the assets charged [4]. In this last cited case the House of Lords held that a general charge on book-debts, present or future, was a floating charge, although not expressed to be so and that it required registration [4].

When the directors of a company pledge its movable assets but they remain in possession as agent of the pledgee, a floating charge is created and if it is not registered, it is void against the liquidator [5].

Money paid to the sheriff as a trade debt owing by a company to the execution creditor cannot be claimed by the receiver appointed by debenture holders having a floating charge on the assets of the company [6].

It is not an incident of a floating charge that the company can create further floating charges ranking pari passu with or in priority to it [7]. In the undernoted case in the Calcutta High Court Chief Justice Sir George Rankin sitting with Mr. Justice Mukherji has discussed the question of "floating charge" elaborately and their lordships have held that where there are other elements of a floating charge but possession is given to the lender, this prevents the charge being a floating one [1].

Right of debenture-holder.

A debenture-holder cannot single out and take a particular debt or piece of property while allowing the company to trade with the rest of its assets [2]. If the debenture gives no security on the assets of the company, the debenture-holder's position is no better than that of an unsecured creditor [3]. Words in a debenture prohibiting a company from creating a prior charge are to be read strictly, and they do not extend to defeat the rights obtained under a garnishee order [2]. The conduct of a debenture-holder's action begun by a person whose transactions with the company require investigation or whose interests are shown to be adverse to the remaining debenture-holders, may be given by the Court to an independent party [4]. Where the security of the debenture-holders is limited to block, machinary, stores and goods, it does not extend to the usufruct of the property and money realised from leases [5].

In an action against a company to enforce a mortgage by foreclosure all the holders of debentures which rank after the mortgage must be made parties as persons interested in the equity of redemption. A single debenture-holder cannot be appointed to represent as defendant all debenture-holders belonging to the same class [6].

Debentures may be issued in respect of existing debts [7]. The condition in a debenture that payment is to be made at a certain time and place is not broken unless demand is made by the debenture-holder at that place [8]. A provision in the articles that irregularities shall not affect the debentures will protect a bona fide holder of debentures [9].

Different kinds of debentures.

Debentures may be for a fixed term of years or repayable on notice, or irredeemable [10]. They can be so framed as to be payable to bearer. The custom to treat debentures to bearers as negotiable by delivery is recognized by the law merchant [11].

Specific charge & floating charge.

Mortgage debentures usually contain a charge upon the undertaking of the company and all its property, real or personal, whether present or future, and may or may not give a charge upon uncalled capital. "A specific charge is one that without more fastens on ascertained or definite property or property capable of being ascertained and defined, whereas a floating charge is ambulatory and shifting in its nature, hovering over and, so to speak, floating with the property which it is intended to affect, until some event occurs or some act is done which causes it to settle and fasten on the subject of the charge within its reach and grasp" [12]. Where by the debenture the company charged its undertaking, all its property, present and future, including its uncalled capital, the property included in the charge consisted of every asset of the company including its right to the renewal of a lease 1.

Notice.

Registration is notice to all the world of the existence of the debentures, but not of their contents 2. A bank having notice that there were debentures which required to be filed, or of the existence of the debentures ranking in priority to others, is not to be held to have notice of the terms of such debentures so as to preclude it from making advances on a specific mortgage 2.

Where debentures are issued but not registered.

Where debentures have been issued but not registered, the company may, at any time before liquidation, by arrangement with the holders, cancel the debentures and issue a new series in their place registering the new issue within 21 days 3. A deliberate issuing of substituted debentures every 14 days to avoid registration does not invalidate the final debenture if registered within 21 days of its issue 3. One debenture may be issued in the place of several redeemed debentures 4.

Where the time for registration has been exceeded, the company can by agreement with the lender cancel the unregistered debentures and issue fresh ones in place of them 5.

Joint debentures.

If several companies issue joint debentures to secure a fund advanced for their mutual benefit, a valid charge will be created on the assets of each company to the extent to which the fund has been applied to the purposes of that company 6.

Place for payment.

Where no place for payment of a debenture is provided, the company must seek out the creditors, if within the reach, and pay them 1. Where there is a condition for payment of a sum at a time and place certain, the condition is not broken by non-payment at the time unless the demand for payment is made at the specified place 7.

Specific performance.

The right to specific performance of the terms of a debenture would be destroyed where the company having power to do so forfeited the debentures for non-payment of calls 8.

Holder of security may fall between two stools.

The holder of a security may fall between two stools; as when a lender had registered an agreement to give him a floating charge and subsequently obtained within three months of the winding up a debenture containing the agreed charge, it was held that neither the agreement nor the debenture was enforceable 9.

Seal.

In the absence of a special provision in the articles a mortgage debenture does not require seal. Even if the articles require debentures to be sealed, an unsealed debenture is good as an agreement to give a debenture 10.

Duty on amount & stamp.

Where debentures are redeemable at a sum in excess of the amount advanced, duty is chargeable on the additional amount also [1] ; but where debentures are payable on a fixed date at par and a company merely has the option of redeeming them earlier at a premium, no duty is payable on the premium [2]. For Stamp see Appendix—"Stamp Duty."

Registration.

Where a debenture creates a charge on immovable property, even if it be for less than Rs. 100, it requires registration under s. 59 of the Transfer of Property Act IV of 1882, because after amendment of s. 100 of the said Act by Act XX of 1929 the provisions of the aforesaid s. 59 relating to a simple mortgage would apply to a charge on immovable property [3].

Appointment of manager in debenture holders' action.

The Court may appoint a manager in a debenture-holders' action provided the goodwill or business of the company is charged by the debentures expressly or by implication. A charge on all the company's properties and effects whatsoever is sufficient for the purpose [4]. But if the company be a statutory one and of a public nature, its undertaking cannot be ordered to be sold [5] ; a sale of such property even with the sanction of the Court is a nullity [6].

In construing a debenture the Court cannot refer to the prospectus pursuant to which the debenture was issued [7].

Power to modify provisions.

The provision of a power to modify the terms on which debentures are secured bears some analogy to such a power as that conferred by s. 20 which enables a majority of the shareholders by special resolution to alter the articles. These powers conferred on a majority must be exercised subject to a general principle which is applicable to all authorities conferred on majorities of classes enabling them to bind minorities, viz., that the power given must be exercised for the purpose of benefiting the class as a whole and not merely individual members only ; subject to this the power may be unrestricted [8].

Date when charge is created.

The date of the creation of a mortgage or charge by a company is the date when the instrument of mortgage or charge is executed and not the date when it is issued to the incumbrancer [9], or when any money is subsequently advanced on it [10]. The registration must be effected within 21 days of such date. If it is not done so, the mortgage or charge is void against the liquidator and the creditors of the company [11].

Parties cannot alter effect of the section.

The parties to the transaction cannot alter the effect of the section by adopting a form which does not accord with the real transaction, for instance, by executing a deed of assignment instead of a mortgage 1. But where the agreement is for an out and out sale, it does not require registration under this section 2. "It is an old law, and plain law, that in transactions of this sort the Court must consider whether or not the documents really mask the true transaction. If they merely mask the transaction, the Court must have regard to the true position, in substance and in fact, and for this purpose tear away the mask or cloak that has been put upon the real transaction. In Helby v. Mathews 3 Lord Herschell states the principle that we have to follow, in the opening sentences of his speech : 'My Lords, it is said that the substance of the transaction evidenced by the agreement must be looked at and not its mere words. I quite agree. But the substance must, of course, be ascertained by a consideration of the rights and obligations of the parties, to be derived from a consideration of the whole of the agreement'" 4. A mortgage of substituted property made pursuant to the provisions of a trust deed requires registration 5, unless debentures have been registered under the next section 6.

Object of registration.

The object of registration of charge under this section is to ensure means of notice to those who contemplate giving credit to the company. But where through misapprehension an earlier mortgage was not at first registered, but a later mortgagee who had registered his mortgage and his assignee had notice of the earlier mortgage and also notice of the defect of registration, the equitable doctrine enunciated by Lord Eldon in Davis v. Earl of Strathmore 7 that a person who registered a mortgage with notice of a prior unregistered mortgage should not be allowed to obtain priority did not apply and the later mortgagee and his assignee were not precluded from relying on the section 8.

The proper means of obtaining a decision of the Court as to whether registration of the mortgages &c. is necessary, is by a special case 9.

Charge created in favour of officer.

A charge created by the directors of a company on its assets when the company is still a going concern is not illegal, but a charge created in favour of its officers is void when not registered 10.

Effect of omission to register.

A mortgagee, even though he be a director, does not lose his security by an omission to see that it is entered on the register of mortgages 11, without concealment, although he does so if the mortgage is one that requires registration under this section and is not registered. The priority of mortgages is not affected by any imperfection of the register kept by the company 12. An instrument creating a charge on the property of a company, if it is not registered as required by this section, is void against the official receiver 1.

It is necessary to file with the registrar the particulars of a mortgage by deposit of title deeds, whether or not it is accompanied by a memorandum of deposit 2.

An agreement to give security, if expressed so as to create a present equitable right to a security, creates a charge and, if not registered, will be void as against the liquidator and any creditor of the company 3.

In default of compliance with the provisions of this section as to registration a mortgage or charge will confer no security on the company's property or undertaking as against the liquidator or any creditor. This principle applies even where a subsequent registered incumbrancer had express notice of the prior mortgage at the time when he took his own security 4. A charge which is not registered under this section is void against all the creditors of a company irrespective of the date on which their debts accrued ; and the fact that decrees have been obtained on such unregistered mortgages prior to the winding-up application does not take it out of the operation of this section. Such a decree-holder cannot stand outside the winding up and realize his security, thereby diminishing the assets divisible among the creditors 5. This section does not however avoid absolutely a mortgage not registered with the registrar of companies, but only so far as any security given thereby on the company's property or undertaking. The effect therefore is that such a mortgage is valid as an admission. The Rangoon High Court has held that such a mortgage cannot be repudiated by the company itself so long as it is a going concern though it is void against the liquidator and the creditors in a winding-up 6. If however the Court extends the time for registration under the provisions of s. 120, and the mortgage is registered within that time, it constitutes a valid charge ab initio, that is, from the date of execution, subject only to such conditions as are imposed by the Court which extended the time 7. But see the new sub-s. (2) of s. 120.

What amounts to a charge.

The pledge of some goods lying at the customs house and the handing over of the delivery warrant as security for a debt constitute a charge requiring registration 8. A purported assignment of so much of a debt "as may be necessary to indemnify the assignees against an advance" is a charge and as such requires registration, because the Court will look not to the form but the real transaction 9.

Immovable property.

The term "immovable property" includes land, benefits to arise out of land, things attached to the earth, or permanently fastened to anything attached to the earth 10. In certain circumstances machinery may be immovable property, if it is so affixed to the soil as to become immovable property 11. lands secured by a trust deed create charges which require registration 1. For other instances of charge requiring registration see the undernoted cases 2.

Charge on foreign land.

Under the English law a company can create a charge on its lands situated in a foreign country. "An English debenture", observed Lord Swinfen (then Swinfen Eady J.), "purporting to charge by way of floating security all the English company's property and assets does amount, where the English company possesses land abroad, to an agreement to charge that land, and is a valid equitable security according to English law, and the debenture-holders, upon any winding up of that company, would rank as secured creditors in respect of the foreign land, and upon a winding up in England they would be paid in full out of the proceeds of sale of that land, before any distribution of proceeds of it was made among ordinary unsecured creditors. The law on this point is correctly stated by Sir Francis Palmer in the 5th edition of his Company Law at p. 236 : 'Even without complying with the formalities required by the local law in relation to transfers or mortgages, it is competent to a company, to create an effective charge on property belonging to it in a foreign country, for the Court, in virtue of its Chancery jurisdiction in personam, enforces equities in regard to foreign land where the mortgagor company is within the jurisdiction [Penn v. Lord Baltimore (1750) 1 Ves. Sen. 443 (444) ; Mercantile Investment &c. Co. v. River Plate &c. Co. (1892) 2 Ch. 303 ; Westlake's International Law (1880) 183] ; and in determining whether there is any equity e. g., if for valuable consideration a company agrees to give a charge on foreign property, the Court will enforce it, although the equity may be one not recognized by the lex loci rei sitæ' " 3.

Security of book-debts.

An assignment of a book-debt as security for the purpose of securing an existing debt constitutes a mortgage of that debt and unless it is registered as required by cl. (d), the assignment will be inoperative as against the liquidator and the creditors of the company 4. But where a letter is an assignment of a part of a book-debt and is not "charge" within the meaning of this section, it does not require registration 5.

Assignment of present and future book-debts of a company by way of security to the guarantor of its overdraft at a bank is within the provisions of cl. (f) 6.

Misapplication of money borrowed.

Where a company has a general borrowing power, a lender is not bound to enquire into the purposes for which the money is intended to be applied and a misapplication of it by the company will not invalidate his security, provided that the lender was not aware at the time of the loan of the intended misapplication 7.

A trading company 8 or a banking company 9 has an implied power to borrow money, but not any other company[1]. If the memorandum of association gives limited power to borrow and mortgage, the limit cannot be exceeded[2]. But if the loan is unauthorized, the lender may stand in the shoes of a previous lender whose money has been paid off by the money of the former[3]. The directors may be personally liable if they represented that they had authority to issue the debenture when they had not[4]. Where one of the clauses of the memorandum of a bank set out that among the objects for which the bank was established was "to raise money by the issue of shares (preference, ordinary or deferred), debentures, debenture-stock, bond and other securities, and to invest the moneys so raised, or any part thereof, upon any of the investments specified in this memorandum", it was held by Mr. Justice Costello that the bank was not restricted to the raising of debentures for the purpose of obtaining money to invest and not otherwise[5].

If the borrowing is beyond the powers of the company, the loan as well as all securities of it are void. But if the loan is merely beyond the powers of the directors it may be rendered valid by acquiesence or ratification by the directors[6]. Where an association having no borrowing power received money by way of loan or advance, the following propositions were laid down by Buckley J.: (1) If the result of the transaction was that the indebtedness was not increased because the new loan was applied in discharging an old debt, then it was not to be regarded as a borrowing transaction, for the invalid lender could be regarded as standing in the place of those whose debt had been paid off; (2) the same doctrine was applicable even when the loan was applied in discharging not an old debt but a future debt [Baroness of Wenlock v. River Dee Co. (1887) 19 Q. B. D. 155]; (3) if the lender could identify his money or the investment of his money in the hand of the borrower, he could call for its return. In such a case he was entitled to what was commonly called a tracing judgment; but (4) if the lender could not bring himself within any of the above propositions, then he was a person who was unable as against the borrower to affirm that he held a debt, either legal or equitable. Neither in a Court of law nor in a Court of Equity could he affirm that he was a creditor or entitled to such a right or claim as would support a winding up petition"[7]. On appeal from this case the House of Lords held (1) that the power to borrow must be limited to borrowing for the proper objects of the society, and that the carrying on the banking business was ultra vires; (2) that the depositors were not entitled to recover money paid by them on an ultra vires contract of loan on the footing of money had and received by the society to their use; (3) that the assets remaining after payment of the outside creditors must be taken to represent in part moneys which the depositors could follow, as having been invalidly borrowed, and in part moneys which the society could follow as having been wrongfully employed by its agents in the banking business and (subject to any application by any individual depositor or shareholder with a view to tracing his own money into any particular asset and to the costs of liquidation) ought to be distributed pari passu between the depositors and the unadvanced shareholders according to the amounts respectively credited to them in the books of the society at the commencement of the winding up 1.

A pledge of securities gives a power of sale on default of payment on the due date or if no date of payment is fixed after notice 2.

Meaning of "undertaking." The word "undertaking" means all the property, present or future, of a company, and a charge thereon is effective and operates by way of floating security 3.

Certificate conclusive. The certificate of the registrar is conclusive evidence that all the requirements of the section as to registration have been complied with 4.

By s. 122, post heavy penalties have been provided for omission by a company to register the particulars with the registrar as required by this section 5.

Registration of charges on properties acquired subject to charge.

109A. (1) Where after the commencement of the Indian Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936, a company registered in British India acquires any property which is subject to a charge of any such kind as would, if it had been created by the company after the acquisition of the property, have been required to be registered under this Part, the company shall cause the prescribed particulars of the charge, together with a copy (certified in the prescribed manner to be a correct copy) of the instrument, if any, by which the charge was created or is evidenced, to be delivered to the registrar for registration in manner required by this Act within twenty-one days after the date on which the acquisition is completed :

Provided that, if the property is situate and the charge was created outside British India, twenty-one days after the date on which the copy of the instrument could in due course of post, and if despatched with due diligence, have been received in British India shall be substituted for twenty-one days after the completion of the acquisition as the time within which the particulars and the copy of the instrument are to be delivered to the registrar.

(2) If default is made in complying with this section, the company and every officer of the company who is knowingly and wilfully in default shall be liable to a fine of five hundred rupees.

after the execution of the deed containing the charge or, if there is no such deed, after the execution of any debentures of the series, the following particulars :—

(a) the total amount secured by the whole series ; and

(b) the dates of the resolutions authorising the issue of the series and the date of the covering deed (if any) by which the security is created or defined ; and

(c) a general description of the property charged ; and

(d) the names of the trustees (if any) for the debenture-holders ;

together with the deed or a copy thereof verified in the prescribed manner containing the charge, or if there is no such deed, one of the debentures of the series, and the registrar shall, on payment of the prescribed fee, enter those particulars in the register :

Provided that, where more than one issue is made of debentures in the series, there shall be filed with the registrar for entry in the register particulars of the date and amount of each issue, but an omission to do this shall not affect the validity of the debentures issued.

Application. This section provides for an alternative mode of registration [1], and it is applicable both to debentures and debenture stock [2].

Protection of debentures. The registration of a series of debentures protects not only debentures of that series properly issued, but also documents purporting to be debentures of that series which owing to some technical defect can only be upheld as agreements for those debentures, and it is not necessary to register these agreements separately [3].

Debentures ranking pari passu. As a general rule debenture-holders of the same series are made to rank pari passu inter se. If such a debenture-holder gets judgment, it enures for the benefit of all the debenture-holders [4]. If he obtains a collateral security he holds it as a trustee for all [4].

Where debentures are issued creating a charge, it is usual to declare expressly that the charges created by all the debentures of the series are to rank equally and without priority of one over another. If it is not so declared each debenture creates a charge ranking in priority to all others issued subsequently, but postponed to all issued before it [5].

If there is a series entitled in one event to rank pari passu, but not in another event, and the registrar registers it under this section and certifies it as a series entitled pari

The certificate is also conclusive although some required particulars have not been given to the registrar or entered on the register [2].

Meaning of book-debts.

"Book-debt" means debts arising in a business in which it is the proper and usual course to keep books, and which ought to be entered in such books, and are not confined to debts which are actually entered in the books—per Esher M. R. in Official Receiver v. Tailby [3]. As to how a charge may be created in book-debts see Gorringe v. Irwell India Rubber Works [4]. Where a bill of exchange has actually been entered in the books of the company it is a book-debt; see Dawson v. Isle [5]. Future book-debts can be charged; see Tailby v. Official Receiver [6].

Charge.

Where motor vans were garaged at the factory and loaded there with products of the factory, they were held to be "plants" used in or about the premises within the meaning of the deed of charge [7].

Particulars in case of commission, etc., on debentures.

111. Where any commission, allowance or discount has been paid or made either directly or indirectly by the company to any person in consideration of his subscribing or agreeing to subscribe, whether absolutely or conditionally, for any debentures of the company, or procuring or agreeing to procure subscriptions, whether absolute or conditional, for any such debentures, the particulars required to be filed for registration under sections 109 and 110 shall include particulars as to the amount or rate per cent. of the commission, discount or allowance so paid or made, but an omission to do this shall not affect the validity of the debentures issued :

Provided that the deposit of any debentures as security for any debt of the company shall not for the purposes of this provision be treated as the issue of the debentures at a discount.

This section recognizes the legality of issuing debentures at a discount.

Register of mortgages and charges.

112. (1) The registrar shall keep, with respect to each company, a register in the prescribed form of all mortgages and charges created by the company after the commencement of this Act and requiring registration under section 109, and shall, on payment of the prescribed fee, enter in the register, with respect to every such mortgage or charge, the date of creation, the amount secured by it, short particulars of the property mortgaged or charged, and the names of the mortgagees or persons entitled to the charge.

(2) After making the entry required by sub-section (1), the registrar shall return the instrument (if any) or the verified copy thereof, as the case may be, filed in accordance with the provisions of section 109 or section 110 to the person filing the same.

(3) The register kept in pursuance of this section shall be open to inspection by any person on payment of the prescribed fee, not exceeding one rupee for each inspection.

Sub-s. (2) does not occur in the English Act.

Index to register of mortgages and charges.

113. The registrar shall keep a chronological index, in the prescribed form and with the prescribed particulars, of the mortgages or charges registered with him under this Act.

Certificate of registration.

114. The registrar shall give a certificate under his hand of the registration of any mortgage or charge registered in pursuance of section 109, stating the amount thereby secured, and the certificate shall be conclusive evidence that the requirements of sections 109 to 112 as to registration have been complied with.

Certificate conclusive.

Where the certificate identified the instrument of charge and stated that the mortgage or charge thereby created had been duly registered, it must be understood as certifying the due registration of all the charges created by the instrument, including that of chattels, and it is conclusive evidence of the due registration of the chattels, none the less, because the register in omitting to mention them is not merely defective but misleading 1. If after the issue of debentures a certificate of registration is obtained under this section, nothing done subsequently by way of alteration by the registrar of his own accord affects the validity of the documents as between the company and the debenture-holder 2.

For other cases see notes to s. 110.

(3) Whenever the terms or conditions or extent or operation of any mortgage or charge registered under this section are modified, it shall be the duty of the company to send to the registrar the particulars of such modification, and the provisions of this section as to registration of mortgage or a charge shall apply to such modification of the mortgage or charge as aforesaid.

117. Every company shall cause a copy of every instrument creating any mortgage or charge requiring registration under section 109 to be kept at the registered office of the company: Provided that, in the case of a series of uniform debentures, a copy of one such debenture shall be sufficient.

Copy of instrument creating mortgage or charge to be kept at registered office.

118. (1) If any person obtains an order for the appointment of a receiver of the property of a company, or appoints such a receiver under any powers contained in any instrument, he shall, within fifteen days from the date of the order or of the appointment under the powers contained in the instrument, file notice of the fact with the registrar, and the registrar shall, on payment of the prescribed fee, enter the fact in the register of mortgages and charges.

Registration of appointment of receiver.

(2) If any person makes default in complying with the requirements of this section, he shall be liable to a fine not exceeding fifty rupees for every day during which the default continues.

Appointment of receiver.

A receiver will be appointed if the company's business is practically at an end and the only asset remaining is a reserve fund created out of profits earned at an earlier date 1, or if the business is about to be shut down 2. When a receiver has been appointed and any application to the Court becomes necessary, it should be made by the person who has appointed or procured the appointment of the receiver 3.

Receiver's position.

A receiver who has been appointed under the terms of a mortgage debenture issued by a company is the agent of the company and not of the debenture-holders; and in the absence of a notice of a claim against the company, he is under no personal liability to refund moneys which he has paid into a receivership account 4. Where after the appointment of a receiver by the debenture-holders in exercise of the power conferred by the debenture the company goes into liquidation, the receiver is entitled to enforce the right to obtain renewal of a lease notwithstanding the liquidation 5. "It is perfectly true (and it has been laid down over and over again)", observed Romer L. J., "that where, as happened in this case, the debenture or trust deed securing the debentures contains the usual clause that the receiver appointed under the deed shall be deemed to be the agent of the company, that the winding-up of the company or the compulsory liquidation of the company puts an end to the agency. But it does not put an end in any way to the powers of the receiver. In my opinion when this liquidation order was made, the right of the receiver to proceed in the name of the company in the County Court was in no wise affected" 6.

His powers.

As to a receiver's power to make contracts and his personal liability in this respect, see Moss Steamship Co. v. Whinney 7. A receiver and manager, when duly appointed by the lender under the terms of a debenture, has an implied power to sue in the company's name for the purpose of getting in any property charged or for recission of a contract or alternatively for specific performance 8.

His liability.

The receiver will not be personally liable for loans made in pursuance of leave given to him by the Court to borrow money, unless he has taken that liability upon himself by the terms of the loan 9. Where a receiver has not applied to the Court for leave to employ an agent, the latter is not entitled to any commission; but the Court has a discretion to award him such compensation for his efforts as the Court considers just in the circumstances of the particular case 10.

Jurisdiction.

The Court has no jurisdiction to appoint a receiver except in a debenture-holder's action. If it is necessary to protect the assets, other means must be sought which are provided in the Companies Act 11.

Power is fiduciary.

If the debentures confer on a named debenture-holder the power to appoint a receiver of the property charged, the power is fiduciary and must be exercised for the benefit of the debenture-holders generally 1. Such an appointment does not oust the jurisdiction of the Court to appoint a receiver 2. On the other hand a winding-up by the Court does not take away the right of the debenture-holders to have a receiver, but in the absence of special circumstances the official liquidator should be appointed receiver to avoid expense and conflict 3.

Court's officers.

A receiver appointed by the Court is its officer and any interference with his possession is a contempt of Court 4. He may be discharged if his appointment has heen procured by means of a misleading affidavit 5.

When action for receiver may be commenced.

The action for a receiver may be commenced before there is any default, and if default occurs before the hearing, the appointment may be made 6. A receiver may be appointed even before the principal or interest is in arrear if the assets are in danger 7, or a sale will be necessary in the near future 8 or in a case of "jeopardy." 9.

Contempt of Court.

The publication of injurious misrepresentations concerning parties to proceedings, such as a receiver in a debenture-holders' action in relation to those proceedings, may amount to contempt of Court, because it may cause those parties to discontinue or to compromise and because it may deter persons with good causes of action from coming to Court, and is thus likely to affect the cause of justice 10.

Filing of accounts of receivers.

119. (1) Every receiver of the property of a company who has been appointed under the powers contained in any instrument, and who has taken possession, shall once in every half-year while he remains in possession, and also on ceasing to act as receiver, file with the registrar an abstract in the prescribed form of his receipts and payments during the period to which the abstract relates, and shall also, on ceasing to act as receiver, file with the registrar notice to that effect, and the registrar shall enter the notice in the register of mortgages and charges.

(2) Where a receiver of the property of a company has been appointed, every invoice, order for goods, or business letter issued by or on behalf of the company, or the receiver of the company, being a document on or in which the name of the company appears, shall contain a statement that a receiver has been appointed.

(3) If default is made in complying with the requirements of this section, the company and every director, manager, managing agent, secretary or other officer of the company and every receiver who knowingly and wilfully authorises or permits the default, shall be liable to a fine not exceeding two hundred rupees.

Amendment.

By the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936, sub-sections (2) and (3) have been substituted for the original sub-s. (2). These two new sub-sections have been taken from s. 308 of the English Act of 1929. See Introduction. The original sub-s. (2) was as follows :—

(2) Every receiver who makes default in complying with the provisions of this section shall be liable to a fine not exceeding five hundred rupees.

Rectification of register of mortgages.

120. (1) The Court, on being satisfied that the omission to register a mortgage or charge within the time required by section 109, or that the omission or misstatement of any particular with respect to any such mortgage or charge, or the omission to give intimation to the registrar of the payment or satisfaction of a debt for which a charge or mortgage was created was accidental, or due to inadvertence or to some other sufficient cause, or is not of a nature to prejudice the position of creditors or shareholders of the company, or that on other grounds it is just and equitable to grant relief, may, on the application of the company or any person interested and on such terms and conditions as seem to the Court just and expedient, order that the time for registration be extended, or, as the case may be, that the omission or misstatement be rectified, and may make such order as to the costs of the application as it thinks fit.

(2) Where the Court extends the time for the registration of a mortgage or charge, the order shall not prejudice any rights acquired in respect of the property concerned prior to the time when the mortgage or charge is actually registered.

Amendment.

By the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936, the original s. 120 has been re-numbered as sub-s. (1) and words in italics have been inserted therein. By the same Act the new sub-s. (2) has been added. For the effect of the amendments see Introduction.

Meaning of "accident" & "inadvertence."

An "accident" is a mishap or untoward event not expected or designed[1], while the word "inadvertence" includes ignorance of the provisions requiring registration[2]. Here the words, "accidental or due to inadvertence" have a very wide meaning[3].

Where relief is granted.

Relief has been granted where there was delay owing to misunderstanding as to the documents requiring registration ; where the secretary bona-fide believed that owing to the date of the resolution alloting the debentures the Act did not apply to them ; where a deed had been sent to India before the Act came into force for execution and registration there but was not executed until after the Act came into force; where the secretary was imperfecty acquainted with the Act; and where there was a difficult question whether registration was necessary or not 1.

Order without prejudice to rights acquired.

The order under this section is usually expressed to be without prejudice to the rights of parties acquired prior to the time when such charge shall be actually registered 2; but the Court will not necessarily impose any terms for the protection of the unsecured creditors 3. The usual proviso, namely, that the order will be without prejudice to the rights of parties acquired prior to the date of actual registration, only protects creditors who have acquired a security on the property, the subject matter of the charge; the Court will not insert in the order any terms for the protection of unsecured creditors of the company 4.

Ranking pari passu.

If the debentures are registered under an order such as the above before the company goes into liquidation, an ordinary unsecured creditor at the date when the debentures are registered is not entitled to rank pari passu with the holders of such debentures, unless he has taken steps to enforce his claim 5.

Effect of order.

When an order extending the time is made in the usual terms as stated above, and before actual registration a winding-up commences, the mortgage or charge, if subsequently registered, will not be effective against the general body of creditors 6. Similarly where the registration is made long after 21 days after the date of mortgage and order of the Court extending the period is vacated, there is no valid registration 7.

An order passed under this section comes under s. 141 C. P. code and is open to review 8.

The last words of sub-s. (1), viz. "and may make...thinks fit" are not in the English Act.

Sub-s. (2). The new sub-section (2) makes it clear that the extension of time will not prejudice any right acquired before the actual registration within the extended time. But even before the amending Act it was held that the subsequent registration of a mortgage by leave of the Court could not affect the position in which that mortgage stood, or in other words, a mortgage registered within 21 days of its execution had priority over a mortgage of an earlier date which was subsequently registered after an extension of time 9.

Registration of satisfaction of mortgages and charges.

(2) The registrar shall on receipt of such intimation cause a notice to be sent to the mortgagee calling upon him to show cause, within a time (not exceeding fourteen days) to be fixed by such notice, why the payment or satisfaction of the charge or mortgage should not be recorded.

(3) The registrar shall, if no cause is shown, order that a memorandum of satisfaction be entered on the register and shall if required furnish the company with a copy thereof.

(4) Where cause is shown, the registrar shall record a notice to that effect in the register, and shall inform the company that he has done so.

Amendment.

This section is new. By the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936, this section has been substituted for the original section 121 which empowered the registrar on proof of satisfaction of a mortgage or charge to record the satisfaction in the register. It was not obligatory on a company or the mortgagee to have such satisfaction recorded, and the records of the registrar might accordingly remain incomplete. The amendments were designed to remedy this defect.

The original s. 121 was as follows :

121. The registrar may, on evidence being given to his satisfaction that the debt for which any registered mortgage or charge was given has been paid or satisfied, order that a memorandum of satisfaction be entered on the register, and shall, if required, furnish the company with a copy thereof.

Entry of satisfaction.

Memo. of satisfaction.

Where a memorandum of satisfaction is executed by the company under a misapprehension, it may be ordered by the Court to be cancelled 1. When once a certificate of registration has been given by the registrar, it is unnecessary for the secured creditors to take any steps to rectify the register, however defective or misleading it may be 2.

122. (1) If any company makes default in filing with the registrar for registration the particulars—requiring registration with the registrar under the foregoing provisions of this Act, then, unless the registration has been effected on the application of some other person, the company, and every officer of the company or other person who is knowingly a party to the default, shall on conviction be liable to a fine not exceeding five hundred rupees for every day during which the default continues.

(2) Subject as aforesaid, if any company makes default in complying with any of the requirements of this Act as to the registration with the registrar of any mortgage or charge created by the company, the company, and every officer of the company who knowingly and wilfully authorises or permits the default shall, without prejudice to any other liability, be liable on conviction to a fine not exceeding one thousand rupees.

(3) If any person knowingly and wilfully authorises or permits the delivery of any debenture or certificate of debenture stock requiring registration with the registrar under the foregoing provisions of this Act without a copy of the certificate of registration being endorsed upon it, he shall, without prejudice to any other liability, be liable on conviction to a fine not exceeding one thousand rupees.

Amendment. By the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936, in sub-s. (1) the original cl. (b) has been relettered as cl. (c) and the new cl. (b) has been inserted. For the effect of the ammendments see Introduction.

Meaning of "knowingly and wilfully." Where directors instruct the secretary to register the security and he omits to do so, they are not knowingly and wilfully authorizing or permitting the omission [1].

Meaning of "issued." Debentures sealed but not delivered are not "issued" [2]. Debentures agreed to be issued will be treated as "issued" [3].

123. (1) Every ✱ company shall keep a register of mortgages and enter therein all mortgages and charges specifically affecting property of the company and all floating charges on the undertaking or on any property of the company, giving in each case a short description of the property mortgaged or charged, the amount of the mortgage or charge and (except in the case of securities to bearer) the names of the mortgagees or persons entitled thereto.

any entry required to be made in pursuance of this section, he shall be liable to a fine not exceeding five hundred rupees.

Amendment.

By the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936, the word "limited" in the first line after the word "Every" has been omitted and the words in italics in sub-s. (1) have been inserted. For the effect of the amendments see Introduction. The amendment makes it clear that the provisions of the section apply to floating charges as well.

Borrowing powers of a company.

A company has no power to borrow money unless the memorandum or articles of association so provide; but it can do so if such borrowing is incidental to the course of the company's business 1. The ordinary trading company has an implied power to borrow money for the purposes of its business and to give security for its repayment even though no power to do so has been conferred by the memorandum or the articles 2. Where the memorandum mentions as a purpose of the company the "disposing of" its landed property, the company can mortgage it unless expressly prohibited from doing so 3. In the absence of any prohibition a company may secure a past debt by deposit of title deeds 3.

Power to give mortgage.

A company having power to borrow can give a mortgage or charge over all its property including book-debts not yet due 4, or on its uncalled capital 5, except that capital which can be called up only in the event of a winding-up 6. A power to mortgage "the property of the company" 7, or its "property and effects" 8, or its "undertaking and property present and future" 9 does not however authorize a charge on the uncalled capital. But if the company is authorized to mortgage its "assets" 10, or its "property and rights" 11, or its "property and effects or in such other manner as the company may determine" 12, it can create a charge over its uncalled capital. If the company has only a limited power to borrow, a loan beyond the limit and all securities for it are void 13.

Charge created in favour of director or officer.

A charge created by the directors on the assets of the company when it is still a going concern is not illegal; but a charge created in favour of the officers of the company is void if it is not registered under this section 14. A person who ceases to hold any office at the time of creation of the charge is however not an "officer of the company" within the meaning of this section 14.

S. 68 of Act VI of 1882.

It should be noted that in the corresponding section (s. 68) of the Indian Act VI of 1882 there occurred the following explanation : "Omission to register under the section a mortgage or charge does not render the same invalid. But the officers of the company cannot avail themselves as such of a mortgage or charge specifically affecting property of the company and not so registered." This has been omitted in the present Act.

Right to inspect copies of instruments creating mortgages and charges and company's register of mortgages.

124. (1) The copies kept at the registered office of the company in pursuance of section 117 of instruments creating any mortgage or charge requiring registration under this Act with the registrar, and the register of mortgages kept in pursuance of section 123, shall be open at all reasonable times to the inspection of any creditor or member of the company without fee, and the register of mortgages shall also be open to the inspection of any other person on payment of such fee, not exceeding one rupee for each inspection, as the company may prescribe.

(2) If inspection of the said copies or register is refused, the company shall be liable to a fine not exceeding fifty rupees and a further fine not exceeding twenty rupees for every day during which the refusal continues, and every officer of the company who knowingly authorises or permits the refusal shall incur the like penalty, and in addition to the above penalty, the Court may by order compel an immediate inspection of the copies or register.

Inspection & right to take copies.

The right given to the holders of stock and debentures of inspecting the registers is not confined to an inspection of the names and addresses only, it may be exercised without assigning any reason, and can be enforced by an injunction 1. The right to inspect the register of mortgages involves a right to take copies of the same 2. The person inspecting the register of the holders of debentures cannot however take a copy himself 3.

In the case noted below 4 "income stock certificates" were held to be debentures and the holders of those certificates were held to be entitled to inspection of the register thereof. The register of mortgages should be open to inspection by any creditor or member of the company or his solicitor or agent 5.

Effect of winding-up.

Upon a winding-up the register cannot be inspected without an order of the Court 6. The word "books" in s. 156 of the English Act of 1862 which corresponds to s. 241 post includes the register of mortgages 6.

Right to inspect the register of debenture-holders and to have copies of trust deed.

125. (1) Every register of holders of debentures of a company shall, except when closed in accordance with the articles during such period or periods (not exceeding in the whole thirty days in any year) as may be specified in the articles, be open to the inspection of the registered holder of any such debentures, and of any holder of shares in the company, but subject to such reasonable restrictions as the company may in general meeting impose, so that at least two hours in each day are appointed for inspection, and every such holder may require a copy of the register or any part thereof on payment of six annas for every one hundred words or fractional part thereof required to be copied.

(2) A copy of any trust-deed for securing any issue of debentures shall be forwarded to every holder of any such debentures at his request on payment in the case of a printed trust-deed of the sum of one rupee or such less sum as may be prescribed by the company, or, where the trust-deed has not been printed, on payment of six annas for every one hundred words or fractional part thereof required to be copied.

(3) If inspection is refused, or a copy is refused or not forwarded, the company shall be liable to a fine not exceeding fifty rupees, and to a further fine not exceeding twenty rupees for every day during which the refusal continues, and every officer of the company who knowingly authorises or permits the refusal shall incur the like penalty, and the Court may by order compel an immediate inspection of the register.

Right to inspect.

The right to inspect the register does not include the right to take extracts from or to take copies of the entries in the register (see note 3, last page), but a copy may be obtained on payment of the prescribed fee.

Debentures and Floating Charges.

Perpetual debentures.

126. A condition contained in any debentures or in any deed for securing any debentures, whether issued or executed before or after the passing of this Act, shall not be invalid by reason only that thereby the debentures are made irredeemable or redeemable only on the happening of a contingency, however remote, or on the expiration of a period however long.

Clog on redemption.

This section provides that a condition which would be a clog on the equity of redemption in the case of a mortgage given by an individual shall not be invalid in the case of debentures issued by a company 1. But it has been held that under the ordinary law any provision in a debenture or trust deed which amounts to a clog or fetter upon the company's power to redeem the property charged, whether specifically or by way of floating charge, is void in the case of a company as completely as in the case of an individual 1. The equitable principle that a mortgage cannot be made irredeemable applies to other mortgage transactions of companies 2.

---

1. See Cuban Land Co. [1921] 2 Ch. 147 at p. 151.

Redemption of debentures.

Where the debenture becomes enforceable on the happening of certain events, the debenture holders have a right to require payment on the happening of those events, but they do not put the debenture-holders in a position of being compelled to accept payment. Where the events are entirely within the control of the company it cannot, by determining the event, compel the debenture-holders to accept his money at a moment's notice 3. But debenture-holders cannot refuse to accept payment on the company being compulsorily wound up 4.

Where debentures become enforceable on the happening of certain events, but can only be compulsorily redeemed by the company by payment of a premium thereon, the guarantors of the interest of such debentures can give the usual notice to such debentures-holders and pay them off their principal and interest but without being under the necessity to pay them the premium that the company would have had to pay, if they had wished to pay off the debentures before the security became enforceable 5.

Effect of death of debenture-holder.

The death of a registered holder of debentures does not relieve the company of the obligation to seek out its creditors, the company having been informed before who the person was to whom a tender should be made 6.

Restriction on rights of debenture-holder not illegal.

The condition of debentures issued by a private company made the principal money thereby secured immediately payable in certain events and provided that "no action shall be taken under this debenture except with the consent in writing of a majority of the debenture-holders," the meaning of the terms being defined. The principal money secured by some of the debentures became payable under the conditions and an action was brought to recover the principal with interest. The consent in writing mentioned above had not however been obtained. It was held : (1) that there was nothing illegal in a restriction in a debenture deed on the rights of a debenture-holder, so that a provision that a majority of the debenture-holders might by resolution modify the terms of the debentures or fetter or restrict the rights of the debenture-holders was legitimate, provided that the majority acted in good faith and not by way of oppressing any individual debenture-holder ; (2) that the condition under consideration was not repugnant to the previous condition making the principal money immediately payable in certain events, and, as it was a condition precedent which had not been fulfilled, judgment was given for the defendant 7.

Construction of debenture deed.

A company issued debentures which it covenanted to pay off "on or after January 1st, 1898," the debentures to be paid off being selected by ballot, and six months' notice being given to the holders thereof. The company contended that the debentures were repayable after the above date only after a ballot had been held and six months' notice had been given to the holders of the drawn debentures. It was held, that inasmuch as the convenant created a liability to pay off on or after the date specified upon demand, the clause seeking to limit its operation to such debentures as should be drawn by ballot was void for repugnancy [1].

Where the combined effect of the debentures and trust deed executed by a company was to give a floating charge on its assets and it was provided therein that the principal money thereby secured should become immediately payable if an order was made or an effective resolution passed for winding up the company, it was held that when the business of the company came to an end by winding up the security ceased to be a floating one and the debentures became immediately payable and the security became enforceable [2]. As to how the amount due to each debenture-holder for interest and principal should be calculated in a case where a series of debentures are issued to rank pari passu as a floating charge, see the case noted below [3].

Stock which is expressed to be "redeemable" at the option of the company is not repayable on the demand of the holder [4].

Power to modify terms.

To give a power to modify the terms on which debentures in a company are secured is not uncommon in practice. The business interests of the company may render such a power expedient even in the interest of the class of debenture-holders as a whole. The provision is usually made in the form of a power conferred by the instrument constituting the debenture security upon the majority of the class of holders. It often enables them to modify by special resolution properly passed the security itself. The provision of such a power given to a majority bears some analogy to such a power as that conferred by s. 13 of the English Companies Act of 1908 (s. 20 of this Act), which enables a majority of the shareholders by a special resolution to alter the articles of association [5]. See notes to s. 109.

Power to re-issue redeemed debentures in certain cases.

127. (1) Where either before or after the commencement of this Act a company has redeemed any debentures previously issued, the company, unless the articles or the conditions of issue expressly otherwise provide, or unless the debentures have been redeemed in pursuance of any obligation on the company so to do (not being an obligation enforceable only by the person to whom the redeemed debentures were issued or his assigns), shall have power, and shall be deemed always to have had power, to keep the debentures alive for the purposes of re-issue, and where a company has purported to exercise such a power the company shall have power, and shall be deemed always to have had power, to re-issue the debentures either by re-issuing the same debentures or by issuing other debentures in their place, and upon such re-issue the person entitled to the debentures shall have, and shall be deemed always to have had, the same rights and priorities as if the debentures had not previously been issued.

(2) Where with the object of keeping debentures alive for the purpose of re-issue they have, either before or after the commencement of this Act, been transferred to a nominee of the company, a transfer from that nominee shall be deemed to be a re-issue for the purposes of this section.

(3) Where a company has, either before or after the commencement of this Act, deposited any of its debentures to secure advances from time to time on current account or otherwise, the debentures shall not be deemed to have been redeemed by reason only of the account of the company having ceased to be in debit whilst the debentures remained so deposited.

(4) The re-issue of a debenture or the issue of another debenture in its place under the power by this section given to, or deemed to have been possessed by, a company, whether the re-issue or issue was made before or after the commencement of this Act, shall be treated as the issue of a new debenture for the purposes of stamp-duty, but it shall not be so treated for the purposes of any provision limiting the amount or number of debentures to be issued :

Provided that any person lending money on the security of a debenture re-issued under this section which appears to be duly stamped may give the debenture in evidence in any proceedings for enforcing his security without payment of the stamp-duty or any penalty in respect thereof, unless he had notice or, but for his negligence, might have discovered, that the debenture was not duly stamped, but in any such case the company shall be liable to pay the proper stamp-duty and penalty.

(5) Nothing in this section shall prejudice—

(a) the operation of any decree or order of a Court of competent jurisdiction pronounced or made before the twenty-fifth day of February, 1910, as between the parties to the proceedings in which the decree or order was made, and any appeal from any such decree or order shall be decided as if this Act had not been passed ; or (b) any power to issue debentures in the place of any debentures paid off or otherwise satisfied or extinguished, reserved to a company by its debentures or the securities for the same.

Scope.

The intention of this section is not that the debentures can be made perpetual debentures by the postponement on a re-issue of the date of redemption, but to give the power only to revive the original transaction, not power to enter into a new and different transaction [1]. The power to re-issue debentures cannot extend to give the company power to issue debentures which are not the same in their terms, as the original debentures [1].

Effect of sub-s. (1).

Sub-sec. (1) nullifies the effect of the decision of the Court of Appeal in George Routledge & Sons [2] which declared that a company could not re-issue any debenture which it had paid off unless it was a condition of the original issue that the company should have such power.

In sub-sec. (1) the word "always" means "before" the passing of this Act [3].

Effect of sub-s. (3).

Sub-sec. (3) counteracts the effect of London Petroleum &c. Trust v. Russian Petroleum Co. [4] which held in a case where debentures were deposited to secure advances on current account and the advances were repaid while the debentures remained so deposited, that the debentures had been redeemed and the security was gone.

Section is retrospective.

The section is retrospective except as to cases decided by a Court of competent jurisdiction before 25th February, 1910. A winding up order made before that date is not an "order" within the meaning of sub-sec. (5) [5].

Specific performance of contract to subscribe for debentures.

128. A contract with a company to take up and pay for any debentures of the company may be enforced by a decree for specific performance.

Specific performance.

In the case of debentures issued by a company this section relaxes the rule that specific performance cannot be granted in respect of a contract to lend money even to a company as was held in South African Territories v. Wallington [6]. Where a loan has been made, the Court will however decree specific performance of an agreement to give security [7].

Where it will not be granted.

A company after forfeiting debentures for failure to pay calls is not entitled under this section to an order for specific performance of a contract to take and pay for debentures, notwithstanding the articles of association containing a stipulation purporting to be applicable to such debentures, that a shareholder after forfeiture of shares shall still be liable for calls as if the shares had not been forfeited [8].

Payments of certain debts out of assets subject to floating charge in priority to claims under the charge.

129. (1) Where either a receiver is appointed on behalf of the holders of any debentures of a company secured by a floating charge, or possession is taken by or on behalf of those debenture-holders of any property comprised in or subject to the charge, then, if the company is not at the time in course of being wound up, the debts which in every winding up are under the provisions of Part V relating to preferential payments to be paid in priority to all other debts, shall be paid forthwith out of any assets coming to the hands of the receiver or other person taking possession as aforesaid in priority to any claim for principal or interest in respect of the debentures.

(2) The periods of time mentioned in the said provisions of Part V shall be reckoned from the date of the appointment of the receiver or of possession being taken as aforesaid, as the case may be.

(3) Any payments made under this section shall be recouped, as far as may be, out of the assets of the company available for payment of general creditors.

The debts entitled to preferential payment in the winding up are specified in s. 230. For cases see notes to that section.

Preferential payments.

Where a receiver is appointed or takes possession of property as mentioned in this section, the right of preferential payment of one year's assessment of income-tax remains notwithstanding that the assessment is not made until after the date of appointment of the receiver or of his taking possession 1. A receiver and manager appointed by the debenture-holders, who, after notice of any claim that is preferential under the section, pays away the company's assets to ordinary creditors in the process of carrying on its business without making or attempting to make any provision for the preferential claim, is guilty of a breach of the provisions of this section and is liable in damages 2.

Order of payments.

Where in a debenture-holder's action the assets prove insufficient, they are applicable in the following order: (1) costs of realization, (2) costs including remuneration of the receiver, (3) costs, charges and expenses of debenture trust deed including the trustees' remuneration, (4) plaintiff's costs of action, (5) preferential creditors and lastly (6) the debenture-holders 3. For what has been held to be preferential payments under this section see the cases noted below 4.

When the receiver is appointed by a debenture-holder whose debenture is secured by both a fixed and floating charge, the priority given to the preferential debts applies only in respect of assets subject to the floating charge 5. In the last noted case at p. 512 Lawrence L. J., observes: "S. 107 (s. 129 of the Indian Act) is directed specifically to debentures secured by a floating charge and to those only and intended to provide for the payment out of the assets subject to the floating charge of those debts which under the provisions of s. 209 (s. 230, of the Indian Act) would be entitled to priority in the case of a winding-up in priority to the claims of the debenture-holders under the floating charge. In my judgment the fact that the debenture in the present case is one which combines with the floating charge a fixed charge, does not bring the section into operation as against the assets comprised in the fixed charge."

A receiver appointed at the instance of a debenture-holder cannot be allowed to disregard the forward contracts entered into by the company before the appointment of the receiver [1].

Jeopardy.

The security of the debenture-holders cannot be said to be "in jeopardy" unless there is a risk of some portion of it being seized or taken to pay claims which are not really prior to the claims of the debentures-holders. The Court refused to appoint a receiver on the ground of jeopardy where the debenture-holders merely showed that their security, if realized, would be insufficient to pay the principal and interest in full, but could not show any damage or outside creditors seizing the assets [2].

There is jeopardy where practically the only assets of a company consist in its reserve fund and the company proposes to distribute that among its shareholders without making provision for the debenture-holders. In such a case where nothing has otherwise occurred to make the debenture security enforceable, the Court appointed a receiver and this ipso facto made the debenture security enforceable [3].

The jeopardy must be from some act which would be wrongful as against the debenture-holder, or which would amount to a destruction of his security. If there is a specific charge on part of the assets and a floating charge on the rest and execution is threatened against the former, it will be a ground for the appointment of a receiver [4].

Receiver.

The section applies even if the receiver is appointed by the debenture-holders and not by the Court [5]. A receiver appointed in a debenture-holder's action may claim recoupment under this section of rates paid by him [6].

Trustees' remuneration.

If the debenture trust-deed so provide, the trustees are entitled to their remuneration in priority to the debenture stock holders, but such remuneration does not continue after the appointment of a receiver [7].

Floating charge.

A floating security remains dormant and cannot become fixed or crystalized until the company ceases to be a going concern or until the debenture-holders intervene by applying for a receiver or otherwise [8]. "A floating charge is a present charge though it does not finally attach or crystalize upon any specific property until the happening of some event which puts an end to the right of the company to deal with the property in the course of its business" [9]. As to what constitutes a floating security see National P. Bank v. United Electric Theatres (supra).

Employment of agent. Where a receiver appointed by the Court in a debenture-holder's action employs an agent to introduce a purchaser of property belonging to the company without leave of the Court, the agent, even if successful in finding a purchaser, is not entitled to any commission. The Court will however consider such a case on its merits, and in a proper case it is open to the Court to say that it is not equitable to take advantage of the agent's efforts without some compensation to him, the amount of such compensation to be entirely in the discretion of the Court 1.

Statements, Books and Accounts.

Books to be kept by company and penalty for not keeping proper books.

130. (1) Every company shall cause to be kept proper books of account with respect to—

(a) all sums of money received and expended by the company and the matters in respect of which the receipt and expenditure takes place ;

(b) all sales and purchases of goods by the company ;

(c) the assets and liabilities of the company.

(2) The books of account shall be kept at the registered office of the company or at such other place as the directors think fit, and shall be open to inspection by the directors during business hours.

[(3) Where a company has a branch office, the company shall be deemed to have complied with the provisions of sub-section (1) and sub-section (2) if proper books of account relating to the transactions effected at the branch office are kept at the branch office and proper summarised returns, made up to dates at intervals of not more than two months, are sent by the branch office to the registered office of the company or other place referred to in sub-section (2).]

(4) In the case of a company managed by a managing agent the managing agent, or where the managing agent is a firm or company, the partner or director of such firm or company and in any other case the director or directors who have knowingly by their act or omission been the cause of any default by the company in complying with the requirements of this section, shall in respect of such offence be liable to a fine not exceeding one thousand rupees.

Amendment. This section is new and is on the lines of s. 122 of the English Act of 1929. It has been substituted for the original section 130 by the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936. The original section 130 was as follows :—

Company to keep proper books of account.

130. Every company shall keep proper books of account in which shall be entered full, true and complete accounts of the affairs and transactions of the company.

By the amending Act II of 1938 sub-s (3) has been renumbered as sub-s. (4) and the new sub-s. (3) within square brackets has been inserted.

1. National Flying Service Co. [1936] 154 L. T. 493.

Sub-s. (1) of this new section provides in detail how the books of account are to be kept. Sub-s. (2) says where the books of account are to be kept and provides for inspection by directors. The new sub-s. (3) deals with accounts of a branch office of the company. Sub-s. (4) lays down the consequences of default in complying with the requirements of the section.

Accounts.

The accounts of a company should be kept in a manner which prudent business people would adopt 1. A company is entitled to charge to capital account the interest on the borrowed money during the period of construction 1.

As to the evidentiary value of entries in books of a company, see s. 240 post.

Annual balance-sheet.

131. (1) The directors of every company shall at some date not later than eighteen months after the incorporation of the company and subsequently once at least in every calendar year lay before the company in general meeting a balance-sheet and profit and loss account or in the case of a company not trading for profit an income and expenditure account for the period, in the case of the first account since the incorporation of the company and in any other case since the preceding account, made up to a date not earlier than the date of the meeting by more than nine months or in the case of a company carrying on business or having interests outside British India by more than twelve months :

Provided that the registrar may for any special reason extend the period by a period not exceeding three months.

(2) The balance-sheet and the profit and loss account or income and expenditure account shall be audited by the auditor of the company as hereinafter provided, and the auditor's report shall be attached thereto, or there shall be inserted at the foot thereof a reference to the report, and the report shall be read before the company in general meeting and shall be open to inspection by any member of the company.

(3) Every company other than a private company shall send a copy of such balance-sheet and profit and loss account or income and expenditure account so audited together with a copy of the auditors' report to the registered address of every member of the company at least fourteen days before the meeting at which it is to be laid before the members of the company, and shall deposit a copy at the registered office of the company for the inspection of the members of the company during a period of at least fourteen days before that meeting.

Amendment.

By the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936, the new sub-s. (1), on the lines of sub-s. (1) of s. 123 of the English Act of 1929, has been substituted for the original sub-s. (1), in sub-s. (2) the words in italics have been inserted, in sub-s. (3) for the words "such balance-sheet so audited" after the words "send a copy of", the words in italics have been substituted, and for the words "seven days" in two places the words

"fourteen days" have been substituted. By the said amending Act sub-s. (4) has been omitted, as provision for penalty for default has been made in the new sub-s. (3) of s. 133. For the effect of these amendments see Introduction.

The original sub-s. (1) was as follows :—

Annual balance-sheet.

131. (1) Every company shall, once at least in every year and at intervals of not more than fifteen months, cause the accounts of the company to be balanced and a balance-sheet to be prepared.

The original sub-s. (4) was as follows :—

(4) If a company makes default in complying with the requirements of this section, it shall be liable to a fine not exceeding one thousand rupees, and every officer of the company who knowingly and wilfully authorises or permits the default shall be liable to the like penalty.

As to what is a general meeting, see notes to s. 76.

A company is under a statutory duty to issue proper balance-sheet and the existence of some disputes regarding amounts due to the company does not relieve the company from such duty 1.

Scope of section.

When a company fails to get its accounts balanced and a balance-sheet prepared and to make a list of its members, it should be convicted under this section [now sub-s. (3) of s. 133] rather than under s. 134 (4). That the accounts had been called for by various criminal Courts in connection with other cases is no defence 2.

Internal reserve fund.

A provision in the articles of association that the directors may form an internal reserve fund on the terms that it need not be disclosed in the balance-sheet nor shall the auditors disclose the same to the shareholders, is ultra vires and inconsistent with the provisions of this section 3.

Auditor's certificate and liability.

As to the powers and duties of auditors, see s. 145 and notes thereto. The auditor will be liable for improper payments made by the directors and naturally resulting from his breach of duty 4. Where the auditor's certificate of the net profits of the company has been given on a wrong principle, it is not conclusive, and the Court is not bound by it 5 & Crichton's Oil Co., infra. Auditors signing the auditors' report in a false balance-sheet which is to the effect that in their opinion the balance-sheet is drawn up in conformity with law and exhibits a true and correct view of the company's affairs, wilfully makes a false statement in the report and are liable to prosecution under s. 282 6.

The opinion of an accountant or an auditor that a balance-sheet which does not disclose the true state of affairs of a company has been properly drawn up, is of no value and no opinion expressed by an auditor or accountant can turn a false balance-sheet into a true one 7.

Auditor's duties.

The duty of an auditor is to give information in direct and express terms [1], and not merely to arouse inquiry [2]. To insert a lump sum in a balance-sheet for goodwill, trade marks, machinery, furniture and fixtures without giving separate values for each class is not a compliance with the law [3]. For fuller notes see those to ss. 144 and 145 and reg. 108, Table A. For form of a balance-sheet see Form F of the Third Schedule.

Jurisdiction of Magistrate.

A Magistrate has jurisdiction to entertain a complaint against a director for failure to comply with the provisions of this section. But ordinarily a Magistrate should be chary of proceeding on a complaint of this kind except after reference to the registrar or on the complaint of a responsible person [4].

Registrar's complaint.

It was however held by the Punjab Chief Court that the registrar being the only person authorized by the Local Government under s. 220 (b) [s. 248 (2) of the present Act] of Act VI of 1882 for instituting and conducting all prosecutions under the Act, especially where the prosecutions were in connection with a breach of the rules relating to submission of the balance sheet and other periodical returns, a complaint for wilful default in filing a balance-sheet not brought by the registrar but by a clerk of his office and counter-signed by the Public Prosecutor was bad in law and not entertainable by a criminal Court [5]. But in a later case the same Court held otherwise [6], and so did the Nagpur Court [7].

Section made more comprehensive.

In the corresponding section (s. 74) of the Act of 1882 "every director and manager of the company" was liable; but this has been changed to "every officer" in this section which has thus been made more comprehensive [8].

Director's plea.

A person who acts as a director or manager cannot set up in answer to prosecution that he was not legally a director or manager. Every person who at any time during the default in complying with the provisions of this section acted as a director or manager is liable to be convicted [8].

If a person joins a board of directors of a bank and allows his name to be used as a bait to induce the public to deal with the bank, he must take the consequences if he does not exercise due care and attention in signing a false balance-sheet, and the fact that he did not attend the meetings of the board or had no knowledge of banking and accounts will not exonerate him from his liability, though he may be entitled to some sympathy on that account (see note 6, last page).

Where the balance-sheet is not made out and filed with the registrar in time, the chairman of the board of directors cannot escape liability on the ground that he depended upon the managing agents to take proper steps, and on several occasions asked them to do so [8]. In such a case the fact that one of the members of the firm who acted as managing agents was also punished in his individual capacity as a director is no reason for not punishing him as a member of the firm [8].

Punishment provided for false return &c.

In addition to the penalties imposed in this section, if any person in any return, report, certificate, balance-sheet or other document required by or for the purposes of this Act wilfully makes a statement false in any material particular, knowing it to be false, he shall be liable to be punished with imprisonment for a term which may extend to three years and shall also be liable to fine [1].

Contents of balance-sheet.

A balance-sheet must not be a mere inventory, but must be in the nature of a pictorial representation of the trading position of the company, easily appreciated by persons reasonably able to understand commercial expressions and commercial conditions [2]. A banker in drawing up a balance-sheet is as much bound to disclose an overdraft as a loan. Consequently where there has been non-disclosure of an advance, it is immaterial whether it was a loan or an overdraft [2].

Overdraft.

Overdrafts are the usual accompaniments of current accounts. Overdrafts based on a deposit account is unknown [2].

Balance-sheet when fraudulent.

The balance-sheet of a company engaged in hazardous trade will not be considered delusive and fraudulent merely because an estimated value was put upon assets which were then in jeopardy and were subsequently lost or because the company was obliged to borrow money to pay the dividend provided the fact fairly appeared on the balance-sheet and the balance fairly represented profits [3].

Proviso. When the registrar condones the delay in holding a general meeting, the delay in filing the balance-sheet before the general body at their meeting must also be deemed to have been condoned [4].

Appeal.

Where the conviction is not of the managing director but of the company, an appeal by the former is incompetent. The appeal in such a case is not properly instituted unless it is by the company through some authorized agent [5].

Directors' report.

131A. (1) The directors shall make out and attach to every balance-sheet a report with respect to the state of the company's affairs, the amount, if any, which they recommend should be paid by way of dividend and the amount, if any, which they propose to carry to the Reserve Fund, General Reserve or Reserve Account shown specifically on the balance-sheet or to a Reserve Fund, General Reserve or Reserve Account to be shown specifically in a subsequent balance-sheet.

to any person being a director who is knowingly and wilfully guilty of a default in complying with this section.

This section is new. It has been inserted by the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936. It was suggested by sub-s. (2) of s. 123 of the English Act of 1929. For a discussion on this new provision and the amendments made in s. 131 see Introduction.

Sub-s. (3). By the amending Act II of 1938 sub-s. (3) of s. 130 has been re-numbered as sub-s. (4) and a new sub-s. (3) dealing with accounts of branch offices has been inserted. A consequential amendment in sub-s. (3) of the present section, that is, by substituting "sub-section (4)" for "sub-section (3)" ought to have been made. This is a curious oversight.

Contents of balance-sheet.

132. (1) The balance-sheet shall contain a summary of the property and assets and of the capital and liabilities of the company giving such particulars as will disclose the general nature of those liabilities and assets and how the value of the fixed assets has been arrived at.

(2) The balance-sheet shall be in the form marked F in the Third Schedule or as near thereto as circumstances admit.

(3) The profit and loss account shall include particulars showing the total of the amount paid whether as fees, percentages or otherwise to the managing agent, if any, and the directors respectively as remuneration for their services and, where a special resolution passed by the members of the company so requires, to the manager, and the total of the amount written off for depreciation. If any director of the company is by virtue of the nomination, whether direct or indirect, of the company, a director of any other company, any remuneration or other emoluments received by him for his own use, whether as a director of, or otherwise in connection with the management of, that other company, shall be shown in a note at the foot of the account or in a statement attached thereto.

Amendment.

By the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936, the new sub-s. (3) has been inserted. It has introduced a provision requiring disclosure in the profit and loss account, now made compulsory under the amended s. 131, certain informations of importance to the shareholders.

A statement which lumped together assets valued on one principle with assets valued on another, and tangible with intangible assets, is not a compliance with the provisions of this section [1].

Book-debts.

All debts which are entered in the current books of the company should be included under the head of book-debts. A debt is none the less a debt, though there may be little prospect of its recovery and the company may have means of covering the deficit if it is not paid. It is always open to a company to write off debts that in its opinion are entirely irrecoverable; and on that being done such debts would cease to be "book-debts." Therefore all genuine book-debts must be covered by the entry against this item whether they are considered good, doubtful or bad debts, and the clear provision of the form F cannot be whittled down by general considerations as to the object of a balance-sheet 1.

Balance-sheet of banks.

Immediately after the decision in Shamdasani v. Pochkanwalla 1, the Governor General in Council made important exceptions with regard to the balance-sheets of banks by altering form F (Sch. III) under the power vested in him by s. 151. The effect of these alterations was that in the case of banks (1) provision for bad and doubtful debts was not requisite, (2) bad and doubtful debts were not required to be mentioned where provision for them had been made to the satisfaction of the auditors. Now for this form F the new form F has been substituted by the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936 which should be carefully studied.

Secret reserve.

If any part of a secret reserve is availed of to meet bad and doubtful book-debts (it is doubtful whether any secret reserve fund is permissible) it must be revealed in the balance-sheet and not concealed 2.

As to profit and loss account, see notes to reg. 97, Table A.

Balance-sheet to include particulars as to subsidiary companies.

132A. (1) Where a company, in this Act referred to as the holding company, holds shares, either directly or through a nominee, in a subsidiary company or in two or more subsidiary companies there shall be annexed to the balance-sheet of the holding company the last audited balance-sheet, profit and loss account and auditors' report of the subsidiary company or companies, and a statement signed by the persons by whom, in pursuance of section 133, the balance-sheet of the holding company is signed stating how the profits and losses of the subsidiary company, or, where there are two or more subsidiary companies, the aggregate profits and losses of those companies, have been dealt with in or for the purposes of the accounts of the holding company, and in particular how and to what extent—

(a) provision has been made for the losses of a subsidiary company either in the accounts of that company or of the holding company or of both, and

(b) losses of a subsidiary company have been taken into account by the directors of the holding company in arriving at the profits and losses of the company as disclosed in its accounts :

Provided that it shall not be necessary to specify in any such statement the actual amount of the profits or losses of any subsidiary company or the actual amount of any part of any such profits or losses which has been dealt with in any particular manner :

Provided further that for the purposes of this section an investment company, that is to say, a company whose principal business is the acquisition and holding of shares, stocks, debentures or other securities, shall not be deemed to be a holding company by reason only that part of its assets consists in 51 per cent. or more of the shares of another company.

(2) If, in the case of a subsidiary company, the auditors' report on the balance-sheet of the company does not state without qualification that the auditors have obtained all the information and explanations they have required and that the balance-sheet is properly drawn up so as to exhibit a true and correct view of the state of the company's affairs according to the best of their information and the explanations given to them and as shown by the books of the company, the statement, which is to be annexed as aforesaid to the balance-sheet of the holding company, shall contain particulars of the manner in which the report is qualified.

(3) For the purposes of this section the profits or losses of a subsidiary company mean the profits or losses shown in any accounts of the subsidiary company made up to a date within the period to which the accounts of the holding company relate, or, if there are no such accounts of the subsidiary company available at the time when the accounts of the holding company are made up, the profits or losses shown in the last previous accounts of the subsidiary company which became available within that period.

(4) If for any reason the directors of the holding company are unable to obtain such information as is necessary for the preparation of the statement aforesaid, the directors who sign the balance-sheet shall so report in writing and their report shall be annexed to the balance-sheet in lieu of the statement.

(5) The holding company may by a resolution authorise representatives named in the resolution to inspect the books of account kept in accordance with section 130 by any subsidiary company, and on such resolution being passed those books of account shall be open to inspection by those representatives at any time during business hours.

(6) The rights conferred by section 138 upon members of a company may be exercised in respect of any subsidiary company by members of the holding company as if they were members of that subsidiary company.

Amendment. This section is new. It has been inserted by the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936. It is a reproduction, with certain modifications, of s. 126 of the English Companies Act of 1929. Compare that section with this section. For a discussion as to its effect see Introduction.

Authentication of balance-sheet.

133. (1) Save as provided by sub-section (2) the balance-sheet and profit and loss account or income and expenditure account shall—

(i) in the case of a banking company, be signed by the manager or managing agent (if any) and, where there are more than three directors of the company, by at least three of those directors and, where there are not more than three directors, by all the directors ;

(ii) in the case of any other company, be signed by two directors or, when there are less than two directors, by the sole director and by the manager or managing agent (if any) of the company.

(2) When the total number of directors of the company for the time being in British India is less than the number of directors whose signatures are required by sub-section (1), then the balance-sheet and profit and loss account or income and expenditure account shall be signed by all the directors for the time being in British India, or, if there is only one director for the time being in British India, by such director, but in such a case there shall be subjoined to the balance-sheet and profit and loss account or income and expenditure account a statement signed by such directors or director explaining the reason for non-compliance with the provisions of sub-section (1).

(3) If any default is made in laying before the company or in issuing a balance-sheet and profit and loss account or income and expenditure account as required by section 131 or if any balance-sheet or profit and loss account or income and expenditure account is issued, circulated or published which does not comply with the requirements laid down by and under section 131, section 132, section 132A and this section, the company and every officer of the company who is knowingly and wilfully a party to the default shall be punishable with fine which may extend to five hundred rupees.

Amendment. By the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936, the words in italics have been inserted in sub-sections (1) and (2) and the new sub-section (3) has been substituted for the original sub-section (3). The new sub-s. (3) is a comprehensive clause. See Introduction.

(3) If any copy of a balance-sheet which has not been signed as required by this section is issued, circulated or published the company and every officer of the company who is knowingly a party to the default shall be punishable with fine which may extend to five hundred rupees.

Effect of signing. The mere signing a balance-sheet by a director does not make it an account stated involving a fresh promise by the director to pay the amount debited to him therein, inasmuch as a director signs the balance sheet not animo contrahendi but in performance of his duties as director [1]. Similarly balance-sheets including fees due to directors and signed by directors are not acknowledgments or written promises to pay those fees by the company 1.

Sub-s. (3). Persons who were never directors or officers of the company when the default occurred in preparing a balance-sheet and placing it before a general meeting cannot be held liable in respect of offences in not complying with the provisions of s. 131 2. The charge of non-filing of the balance-sheet receives a complete answer if the accused can show that the balance-sheet was not due ; it is altogether immaterial whether it has or has not been prepared 3.

Copy of balance-sheet to be forwarded to the registrar.

134. (1) After the balance-sheet and profit and loss account [or the income and expenditure account as the case may be] have been laid before the company at the general meeting [three copies thereof] signed by the manager or secretary of the company shall be filed with the registrar at the same time as the copy of the annual list of members and summary prepared in accordance with the requirements of section 32.

(2) If the general meeting before which a balance-sheet is laid does not adopt the balance-sheet, a statement of that fact and of the reasons therefor shall be annexed to the balance-sheet and to the [copies] thereof required to be filed with the registrar.

(3) This section shall not apply to a private company.

(4) If a company makes default in complying with the requirements of this section, the company and evey officer of the company who knowingly and wilfully authorises or permits the default shall be liable to the like penalty as is provided by section 32 for a default in complying with the provisions of that section.

Amendment.

By the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936, in subs. (1) the words in italics in the beginning were substituted for the words "After the balance-sheet has", and the words "of the balance-sheet" were substituted for the word "thereof". By the amending Act II of 1938 in sub-s. (1) (i) after the words "profit and loss account" the words within the first square brackets have been inserted, (ii) for the words "a copy of the balance-sheet" the words within the second square brackets have been substituted, and in sub-s (2) for the word "copy" the word "copies" has been substituted.

The effect of the amendments is that now instead of one copy, three copies of the balance-sheet and profit and loss account or the income and expenditure account, as the case may be, signed by the manager or secretary are to be filed with the registrar.

general meeting was called in that year and no balance-sheet was laid before the company at any such meeting, it was impossible for him or the company to comply with the requirements of the section. But inorder to bring the case within the rule laid down in Park v. Lawton 1, a person whose defence to a charge under sub-s. (4) is that compliance on his part with the requirements of the section was impossible on account of no general meeting having been held, it is necessary in the first instance to show with reference to s. 76 that the accused officer of the company was knowingly a party to the default in holding the general meeting and when the question has not been enquired into at all the case has not been properly tried and the conviction will not stand 2.

The same persons cannot be charged in respect of the same years with offences punishable both under s. 131 and this section, because the section clearly contemplates the sending of a copy of balance-sheet only after it has been placed before the company at a general meeting under s. 131. Where in a case there is no placing of the balance-sheet before the company at a general meeting, the offence under this section cannot be committed 3.

The default under s. 32 and this section must be intentional and not merely inadvertent 4. See notes to s. 32(4).

Recovery of fine.

Where a fine is imposed upon a company under this section the fine must be recovered from the property of the company and cannot be recovered from the directors individually 5.

Jurisdiction.

The Presidency Magistrate in Calcutta possesses jurisdiction to try charges under this section even where the company is situate outside Calcutta, as the office of the registrar with whom the balance-sheet is to be filed is in Calcutta 6.

Right of member of company to copies of the balance-sheet and the auditor's report.

135. Save as otherwise provided in this Act, any member of a company shall be entitled to be furnished with copies of the balance-sheet and the profit and loss account or the income and expenditure account and the auditor's report at a charge not exceeding six annas for every hundred words or fractional part thereof.

(3) Every member and every creditor of the company shall be entitled to a copy of the statement on payment of a sum not exceeding eight annas.

(4) If a company makes default in complying with the requirements of this section, it shall be liable to a fine not exceeding fifty rupees for every day during which the default continues; and every officer of the company who knowingly and wilfully authorises or permits the default shall be liable to the like penalty.

(5) This section shall not apply to a life assurance company or provident insurance society to which the provisions of the Indian Life Assurance Companies Act, 1912, or of the Provident Insurance Societies Act, 1912, as the case may be, as to the annual statements to be made by such company or society, apply with or without modifications, if the company or society complies with those provisions.

In sub-s. (2) the words in italics have been inserted by the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936.

The omission of a limited banking company to publish the statements specified in sub-sec. (1) on the dates indicated in the section cannot be justified by the fact that the omission was due to a change in the closing date of the financial year of the company and that the officers of the company imagined in good faith that this justified a change in the dates on which the statements were required to be published [1].

Sub-s. (5). For the Indian Life Assurance Companies Act, 1912 and the Provident Insurance Societies Act, 1912 see now the Insurance Act IV of 1938.

in writing such information or explanation within such time as he may specify in his order.

(2) On the receipt of an order under sub-section (1), it shall be the duty of all persons who are or have been officers of the company to furnish such information or explanation to the best of their power.

(3) If any such person refuses or neglects to furnish any such information or explanation, he shall be liable to a fine not exceeding fifty rupees in respect of each offence, and the Court may on the application of the registrar and upon notice to the company make an order on the company for production of such documents as in its opinion may reasonably be required by the registrar for his investigation and allow the registrar inspection thereof on such terms and conditions as it thinks fit.

(4) On receipt of such information or explanation the registrar may annex the same to the original document submitted to him; and any additional document so annexed by the registrar shall be subject to the like provisions as to inspection and the taking of copies as the original document is subject.

(5) If such information or explanation is not furnished within the specified time, or if after perusal of such information or explanation the registrar is of opinion that the document in question discloses an unsatisfactory state of affairs, or that it does not disclose a full and fair statement of the matters to which it purports to relate, the registrar shall report in writing the circumstances of the case to the [Central Government].

(6) If it is represented to the registrar in materials placed before him by any contributory or creditor that the business of a company is carried on in fraud of its creditors or in fraud of persons dealing with the company or for a fraudulent purpose, he may after giving the company an opportunity of being heard by written order call on the company for information or explanation on matters specified in the order within such time as he may specify in the order and the provisions of sub-sections (2), (3) and (5) of this section shall apply to such order. If upon investigation the registrar is satisfied that any representation on which he has taken action under this sub-section is frivolous or vexatious, he shall disclose the identity of the informant to the company.

(7) The provisions of this section shall apply mutatis-mutandis to documents which a liquidator is required to file under this Act.

Amendment. By the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936, to sub-s. (3) the words in italics have been added. By the same Act the new sub-sections (6) and (7) have also been added. The first amendment provides for intervention by the Court to secure production of documents for the information of the registrar; the second amendment extends the powers of the registrar and also makes the section applicable to documents which a liquidator is required to file under the Act. See Introduction.

In sub-s. (5) the words "Central Government" have been substituted for the words "Local Government" by the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937 which came into operation on 1st April, 1937. But with effect from 1st April, 1938 the Central Government has entrusted to Provincial Governments their functions in this respect; vide Gazette of India dated 26th March, 1938, Part I, p. 440.

Scope.

The subject matter of this section is an investigation rather than a prosecution. Sub-s. (6) is confined to cases in which there are allegations of fraud and many prosecutions under the Act would be entirely outside it. The intention of the section is to facilitate the investigation of the affairs of the company and it has no reference to actual proceedings in Court [1]. It is not possible to read into this section any prohibition of private prosecutions [1].

Inspection and Audit.

Investigation of affairs of company by inspectors.

138. The [Central Government] may appoint one or more competent inspectors to investigate the affairs of any company and to report thereon in such manner as the [Central Government] may direct—

(i) in the case of a banking company having a share capital, on the application of members holding not less then one-fifth of the shares issued;

(ii) in the case of any other company having a share capital, on the application of members holding not less than one-tenth of the shares issued;

(iii) in the case of a company not having a share capital, on the application of not less than one-fifth in number of the persons on the company's register of members;

(iv) in the case of any company, on a report by the registrar under section 137, sub-section (5).

In the corresponding section 135 of the English Act of 1929 the expression "Board of Trade" occurs in place of "Local Government."

In this section the words "Central Government" have been substituted for the words "Local Government" by the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937 which came into operation on 1st April, 1937. But with effect from 1st April, 1938 the Central Government has entrusted to Provincial Governments their functions in this respect; vide Gazette of India dated 26th March, 1938, Part I, p. 440.

Expenses of investigation.

The Local Government on a report from the registrar under s. 137 (5) took action under this section and appointed a certain person to investigate the affairs of a bank and passed an order directing that the expenses of the investigation amounting to Rs. 1000 should be paid by the bank. The Local Government itself paid the amount to the inspector and when subsequently the bank went into a voluntary liquidation, submitted its claim to the voluntary liquidator who registered it as a preferential claim. But the official liquidator appointed on compulsory winding up refused to recognize the claim as a preferential claim. The Lahore High Court held that the claim could not be recognized as a preferential claim [1].

Inspector is entitled to assistance.

An inspector appointed under this section to investigate the affairs of a company is entitled to the assistance of any person whom he may reasonably require to be present at the investigation to enable him to prepare his report. An officer or agent of the company summoned to such an investigation is not entitled to refuse to answer questions put to him by the inspector on the ground that the latter has brought in a short-hand writer to take a note of the evidence, and if he so refuses, he is in the same position as a person who has committed a contempt of Court [2].

Application for inspection to be supported by evidence.

139. An application by members of a company under section 138 shall be supported by such evidence as the [Central Government] may require for the purpose of showing that the applicants have good reason for, and are not actuated by malicious motives in, requiring the investigation ; and the [Central Government] may, before appointing an inspector, require the applicants to give security for payment of the costs of the inquiry.

In this section the words "Central Government" have been substituted for the words "Local Government" by the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937 which came into operation on 1st April, 1937. But with effect from 1st April, 1938 the Central Government has entrusted to Provincial Governments their functions in this respect ; vide Gazette of India dated 26th March, 1938, Part I, p. 440.

Inspection of books and examination of officers.

140. (1) It shall be the duty of all persons who are or have been officers of the company to produce to the inspectors all books and documents in their custody or power relating to the company.

(2) An inspectot may examine on oath any such person in relation to its business, and may administer an oath accordingly.

(3) If any person refuses to produce any book or document which under this section it is his duty to produce, or to answer any question relating to the affairs of the company, he shall be liable to a fine not exceeding fifty rupees in respect of each offence.

The High Court will not grant a prohibition against the holding of the examination under this section [3].

(1) On the conclusion of the investigation, the inspectors shall report their opinion to the [Central Government], and a copy of the report shall be forwarded by the [Central Government] to the registrar and another copy to the registered office of the company, and a further copy shall, at the request of the applicants for the investigation, be delivered to them.

(2) The report shall be written or printed, as the [Central Government] directs.

(3) All expenses of, and incidental to, the investigation shall be defrayed by the applicants unless the [Central Government] directs the same to be paid by the company, which the [Central Government] is hereby authorised to do :

Provided that the expenses of and incidental to an investigation held in pursuance of clause (iv) of section 138 shall be paid out of the assets of the company and shall be recoverable as an arrear of land-revenue.

(4) The registrar shall keep the copy of the report sent to him with the records of the company in his custody.

Amendment.

By the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936, the words in italics have been inserted in sub-s. (1), the proviso to sub-s. (3) has been added and the new sub-s. (4) has also been added. See Introduction. As to the words within square brackets see notes to the next section.

legal advisers of the company and any persons employed by the company as auditors, whether those persons are or are not officers of the company.

(4) Any director, manager or other officer of the company convicted as the result of a prosecution initiated under this section shall not without the leave of the Court be a director of or in any way whether directly or indirectly be concerned in or take part in the management of a company for a period of five years from the date of such conviction.

Amendment.

This section is new. It has been inserted by the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936. It is based upon the provisions of s. 136 of the English Act of 1929, and provides a machinery for institution of proceedings against persons who have committed criminal offences in relation to a company. See Introduction.

In ss. 141 and 141A the words within square brackets have been substituted for the words "Local Government" by the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937 which came into operation on 1st April, 1937. But with effect from 1st April, 1938 the Central Government has entrusted its functions under these sections to Provincial Governments. Vide Gazette of India dated 26th March, 1938, Part I, p. 440.

Prosecutions by private individuals.

There is nothing in the actual terms of this section to justify an inference that the intention of the legislature was that prosecutions by private individuals should not be allowed. The section casts a duty on the Advocate General or the Public Prosecutor to cause proceedings to be instituted in certain circumstances. It also casts a duty upon the officers of the company to render assistance in connection with such prosecution. The terms of the section are quite different from those, for example, of ss. 196 and 198 of the Code of Criminal Procedure by which a bar is placed upon the jurisdiction of the Criminal Courts[1].

Power of company to appoint inspectors.

142. (1) A company may by a special resolution appoint inspectors to investigate its affairs.

(2) Inspectors so appointed shall have the same powers and duties as inspectors appointed by the [Central Government], except that, instead of reporting to the [Central Government], they shall report in such manner and to such persons as the company in general meeting may direct.

(3) All persons who are or have been officers of the company shall incur the like penalties in case of refusal to produce any book or document required to be produced to inspectors so appointed, or to answer any question, as they would have incurred if the inspectors had been appointed by the [Central Government].

In this section also the words within square brackets have been substituted for the words "Local Government" by the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937 which came into operation on 1st April, 1937.

143. A copy of the report of any inspectors appointed under this Act, authenticated by the seal of the company whose affairs they have investigated, shall be admissible in any legal proceeding as evidence of the opinion of the inspectors in relation to any matter contained in the report.

Report of inspectors to be evidence.

144. (1) No person shall be appointed or act as an auditor of any company other than a private company not being the subsidiary company of a public company unless he holds a certificate from the [Central Government] entitling him to act as an auditor of companies :

Qualifications and appointment of auditors.

"Provided that a firm 'whereof all the partners practising in India' hold such certificates may be appointed by its firm-name to be auditor of a company, and may act in its firm-name."

"(2) The [Central Government] may, by notification in the [Official Gazette] and after previous publication, make rules providing for the grant, renewal or cancellation of such certificates and prescribing conditions and restrictions for such grant, renewal or cancellation :

Provided that nothing contained in such rules shall preclude any person from being granted a certificate merely by reason that he does not practise as a public accountant.

(2A) In particular, and without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing power, such rules may—

(a) provide for the maintenance of a Register of Accountants entitled to apply for such certificates ;

(b) prescribe the qualifications for enrolment on the Register and the fees therefor ;

(c) provide for the examination of candidates for enrolment, and prescribe the fees to be paid by examinees ;

(d) prescribe the circumstances in which the name of any person may be removed from or restored to the Register ;

(e) provide for the establishment, constitution and procedure of an Indian Accountancy Board, consisting of persons representing the interests principally affected or having special knowledge of accountancy in India, to advise him on all matters of administration relating to accountancy, and to assist him in maintaining the standards of qualification and conduct of persons enrolled on the Register ; and (f) provide for the establishment, constitution and procedure of local accountancy borads at such centres as the [Central Government] may select, to advise him and the Indian Accountancy Board on any matter that may be referred to them.

(2*B*) The holder of a certificate granted under this section shall be entitled to be appointed and act as an auditor of companies throughout British India."

(3) Every company shall at each annual general meeting appoint an auditor or auditors to hold office until the next annual general meeting.

(4) If an appointment of an auditor is not made at an annual general meeting, the [Central Government] may, on the application of any member of the company, appoint an auditor of the company for the current year, and fix the remuneration to be paid to him by the company for his services.

(5) The following persons : that is to say,

(i) a director or officer of the company ; and

(ii) a partner of such director or officer ; and

(iii) in the case of a company other than a private company not being the subsidiary company of a public company any person in the employment of such director or officer ; and

(iv) any person indebted to the company,

shall not be appointed auditors of the company and if any person being appointed auditor becomes indebted to the company his appointment shall thereupon be terminated.

(6) A person, other than a retiring auditor, shall not be capable of being appointed auditor at an annual general meeting unless notice of an intention to nominate that person to the office of auditor has been given by a member of the company to the company not less than fourteen days before such annual general meeting, and the company shall send a copy of any such noticc to the retiring auditor, and shall give notice thereof to its members either by advertisement or in any other mode allowed by the articles not less than seven days before the annual general meeting :

Provided that, if after notice of the intention to nominate an auditor has been given to the company, an annual general meeting is called for a date fourteen days or less after the notice has been given, the requirements of this section as to time in respect of such a notice shall be deemed to have been satisfied, and the notice to be sent or given by the company may, instead of being sent or given within the time required by this section, be sent or given at the same time as the notice of the annual general meeting.

(7) The first auditors of the company may be appointed by the directors before the statutory meeting, and if so appointed shall hold office until the first annual general meeting, unless previously removed by a resolution of the members of the company in general meeting, in which case such members at that meeting may appoint auditors.

(8) The directors may fill any casual vacancy in the office of auditor, but while any such vacancy continues, the surviving or continuing auditor or auditors (if any) may act.

(9) The remuneration of the auditors of a company shall be fixed by the company in general meeting, except that the remuneration of any auditors appointed before the statutory meeting, or to fill any casual vacancy, may be fixed by the directors.

Amendments. By s. 2 of the amending Act No. XIX of 1930 the following amendments were made : (1) for the words "Local Government" in sub-s. (1) the words "Governor General in Council" were substituted ; (2) for the proviso in the same sub-section the new proviso was substituted ; and (3) for sub-s. (2) the new sub-sections (2), (2A) and (2B) were substituted. The words "whereof all the partners practising in India" in the new proviso to sub-section (1) were substituted by a further amending Act No. 1 of 1932 for the words "whereof the partners all" which occurred in the amending Act of 1930. The amendments made by Act XIX of 1930 came into force on 1st April, 1932, vide Notification dated 26th March, 1932, which appeared at p. 299, Part I, Gazette of India, 26 March, 1932. By the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936, in sub-s. (1) the words in italics have been inserted, and in sub-s. (5) all the words in italics have also been inserted. In sub-s. (4) the words within square brackets have been substituted for the words "Local Government" by the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) order, 1937, which came into operation on 1st April, 1937. But the Central Government has, with effect from 1st April 1938, entrusted to the Provincial Governments its functions under the above sub-section—vide Gazette of India dated 20th March, 1938, Part I, p. 440.

In sub-s. (1), sub-s. (2) and cl. (f) of sub-s. (2A) the words "Central Government" within square brackets have been substituted for the expression "Governor General in Council" and in sub-s. (2) the words "Official Gazette" within square brackets have been substituted for the words "Gazette of India", by the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937.

Auditor — whether an officer. An auditor may or may not be an "officer" of the company, and prima facie he is not except for the purposes of ss. 235. 236 and 237 1. In the undernoted case 2, the Allahabad High Court (Mears C. J. & Sen J.) considered the question in connection with a clause in the articles of a company which dealt with the conduct of the company's business and provided that officers of the company would be entitled to an indemnity out of the fund of the company except in regard to their own "wilful acts or defaults." After considering the following decisions[1], their Lordships observed: "The general result of the decisions is that where an auditor has been appointed by a limited liability company at a general meeting of the shareholders, he must be taken to be an officer of the company. It is not absolutely necessary that he should be mentioned as an officer in the articles of association. If things stood here, we might have felt considerable difficulty in holding the contrary. But we are confronted with the following facts : The term 'officer' had not been defined in Act VI of 1882, but in Connell's case[2] it had been held that an auditor was an officer of the company. There was a long train of reported Englishs decision in support of the same view. We find, however, that the legislature has introduced a statutory definition of the term 'officer' in s. 2, cl. (11), Act VII of 1913, which says that 'officer' includes any director, manager or secretary, but save in ss. 235, 236 and 237, does not include an auditor. We are bound by this statutory definition. In enacting Act VII of 1913 the legislature seems to have consciously departed from the view which had been taken in decided cases in the past so far as this country was concerned." "We hold therefore that an auditor cannot claim to be an officer within the purviews of Art. 118 of the Articles of Association"[3].

"Wilful acts or defaults."

As to the meaning of the expression "wilful acts or defaults" used in the above clause in the articles of the company (as in the articles of many companies), their Lordship observe[3] as follows : "The adjective 'wilful' in 'wilful acts or defaults' has evidently been used as a description and not a definition. The idea intended to be conveyed is that the default is occasioned by the exercise of volition or as the result of non-exercise of will due to supine indifference, although the defaulter knew or was in a position to know that loss or harm was likely to result. The word does not necessarily suggest the idea of moral turpitude. We have also to eliminate the elements of accident or inadvertence or honest error of judgment. The default must be the result of deliberation or intent or be the consequences of a reckless omission. 'Wilful default' therefore is indicative of some misconduct in the transaction of business or in the discharge of duty by omitting to do something either deliberately or by a reckless disregard of the fact whether the act or omission was or was not a breach of duty." Then their Lordships cite the cases noted below[4].

Duties of auditor.

The auditor must not certify what he does not believe to be true, and he must take reasonable care and skill before he believes that what he certifies is true, and that the books themselves show the company's true position. What is reasonable care must depend on the circumstances of each particular case[5]. An auditor however is not bound to be suspicious when there are no circumstances to arouse his suspicion. He is bound only to exercise a reasonable amount of care and skill[6].

It is nothing to an auditor whether the business of the company is being conducted prudently or unprofitably or whether dividends are properly or improperly declared, provided he discharges his own duty which consists in examining the books of the company and satisfying himself that they show the true financial position of the company [1]. If he fails in his duty, he will be jointly and severally liable with those who are responsible for the management of the company, although he is not guilty of any dishonesty [1].

But although it is not the duty of the auditors to consider whether the business of the company is prudently or imprudently conducted, it is their duty to consider and report to the shareholders whether the balance-sheet exhibits a correct view of the company's affairs and the true financial position of the company at the time of the audit. They must ascertain this by examining the books of the company and must take reasonable care that what they certify as to the company's financial position is true, and except in very special cases it is their duty to place before the shareholders the necessary information and to indicate the means of acquiring it [2].

Removal of auditors.

There is no provision in the Act for removal of an auditor once appointed; but where the auditors have neglected their duties by which loss has occurred to the company, the Court will not compel the directors to allow the auditors to proceed with their audit [3].

Sub-s. (1), proviso. Under the old proviso the following had been declared as entitled to be appointed and to act as auditors: Members of—(1) the Institute of Chartered Accountants of England and Wales; (2) The Society of Incorporated Accountants and Auditors; (3) the Society of Accountants in Edinburgh; (4) the Institute of Accountants and Actuaries in Glasgow; (5) the Society of Accountants in Aberdeen and (6) the Institute of Chartered Accountants in Ireland [4].

Defence of auditor.

An irregularity in the appointment of an auditor may not avail him as a defence in a misfeasance proceeding [5].

Powers & duties of auditors.

145. (1) Evey auditor of a company shall have a right of access at all times to the books and accounts and vouchers of the company, and shall be entitled to require from the directors and officers of the company such information and explanation as may be necessry for the performance of the duties of the auditors.

(2) The auditors shall make a report to the members of the company on the accounts examined by them, and on every balance-sheet and profit and loss account laid before the company in general meeting during their tenure of office, and the report shall state :—

(a) whether or not they have obtained all the information and explanations they have required ; and

(b) whether or not in their opinion the balance-sheet and the profit and loss account referred to in the report are drawn up in conformity with the law ; and

(c) whether or not such balance-sheet exhibits a true and correct view of the state of the company's affairs according to the best of their information and the explanations given to them, and as shown by the books of the company ; and

(3) In the case of a banking company, if the company has branch banks beyond the limits of India, it shall be sufficient if the auditor is allowed access to such copies of and extracts from the books and accounts of any such branch as have been transmitted to the head office of the company in British India.

(4) The auditors of a company shall be entitled to receive notice of and to attend any general meeting of the company at which any accounts which have been examined or reported on by them are to be laid before the company and may make any statement or explanation they desire with respect to the accounts.

(5) If any auditors' report is made which does not comply with the requirements of this section, every auditor who is knowingly and wilfully a party to the default shall be punishable with fine which may extend to one hundred rupees.

Amendment. By the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936, in sub-s. (2) the words in italics have been inserted, and sub-sections (2A), (4) and (5) have been added. For the effect of the amendments see Introduction.

Onus. Company auditors are bound to know or make themselves acquainted with the duties under the Companies Act for the time being in force and also under the company's articles of association 1. If the audited balance-sheet do not show the true financial condition of the company and damages are thereby caused, the onus is on the auditors to show that the damages are not the result of any breach of duty on their part 2.

Auditor's responsibility. Auditors are prima facie responsible for ultra vires payments made on the faith of their balance-sheet ; but whether and to what extent they are responsible for not discovering and calling attention to the illegality of payments made prior to the audit must depend on the special circumstances of each case.

1. Kingston Cotton Mill No. 2 (supra) ; Republic of B. E. Syndicate (supra) at p. 171.
2. Cuff v. London & County &c. Co. [1912] 1 Ch. 440.

An auditor who commits a breach of duty may be sued by the company in an action or may be proceeded against under s. 235 ; but an auditor who is merely called in to audit the accounts pro hoc vice is not an officer 1. An auditor may set up the statute of limitation 2.

It was held in the undernoted case that an auditor is only bound to be reasonably cautious and careful and that it is not his duty to take stock 3. There are many matters in which the auditor must rely on the honesty and accuracy of others and he does not guarantee the discovery of fraud 3. Farwell, L. J. said that the business of an auditor "is to ascertain and state the true financial position of the company at the time of the audit and nothing more" 4.

Closing of accounts.

The auditing of a company's accounts does, in the absence of proof of fraud or mistake in connection with the audit, close the accounts as between the shareholders and the directorate ; but it does not preclude the company from calling upon its agents for rendition 5.

Auditor's report.

Sub-s. (2). The auditors' duty to make a report to the members is confined to forwarding their report to the secretary of the company leaving the secretary or the directors to perform the duties which the statute imposes of convening a general meeting to consider the report 6. It is not enough for the auditors merely to report that the balance-sheet does not exhibit a true view of the accounts. They must report generally on the state of the accounts : their duty is to call attention to what is wrong 7. Lord Lindley specified the duties of an auditor in a case 8, where the auditors and the directors were held to be jointly and severally liable to repay the amount of dividend improperly declared and paid.

Directors are not bound to supervise auditor's work.

Directors are entitled to presume that the auditors, like other officers of the company, are doing their duty and are not bound to supervise or test the auditors' work 9. Auditors are prima facie responsible for ultra vires payments made on the faith of their balance-sheet ; but whether and to what extent they are responsible for not discovering and calling attention to the illegality of payment depends on the special circumstances of each case 10.

Agents for shareholders.

Auditors are agents for the shareholders, but the latter are not necessarily bound by notice of every thing of which notice is given to the former 11.

Auditor's duty.

It is the duty of the auditor not to confine himself to verifying the arithmetical accuracy of the balance-sheet, but to inquire into its substantial accuracy and ascertain that it contained the particulars specified in the articles of association and was properly drawn up so as to contain a true and correct representation of the company's state of affairs 2. If improper payments by the directors are the natural and immediate consequence of breach of duty on the part of the management and the auditors, they are liable in damages to the amount so paid 1.

Where payment of commission for placing shares is authorized by the memorandum of association and by a resolution of the directors and not by the articles, the auditors ought to point that out 2.

An auditor is not justified in omitting to make personal inspection of securities that are in the custody of a person or company with whom it is not proper that they should be left, whenever such personal inspection is practicable. A stock broker of a company, however respectable and responsible he may be, is not the proper person to have the custody of its securities except on such occasions when for short periods securities must of necessity be left with him ; but immediately such necessity ceases the securities should be lodged in the company's strong room or with its bank or placed in other proper and usual safe keeping 3.

Whenever an auditor discovers that securities of the company are not in proper custody, it is his duty to require that the matter be put right at once, or if his requirement is not complied with, to report the fact to the shareholders and this whether he can or cannot make a personal inspection 4.

The measure of the auditor's responsibility depends upon the terms of his engagement. There may be special contract defining duties and liabilities of the auditors. If there is such a contract, then that contract governs the question. The articles will however be looked at, if there is no special agreement, because the auditors will presumably have taken their duties upon the terms, inter alia, set out in the articles. That is not to say that the auditors can set aside a statutory obligation. No agreement or articles of association can remove an imperative or statutory duty 4.

This section does not lay down a rigid code. The duty imposed on auditors by it is not absolute but depends upon the information given and explanations furnished to them, so that there is abundant scope for discretion. The onus lies upon the auditors who would not be excused for total omission to comply with any of the requirements of the section, or for any consequences of deliberate or recklessly indifferent failure to ask for information on matters which call for further explanation 4.

Auditors should not be content with a certificate that securities are in the possession of a particular company, firm or person, unless the latter are trustworthy or respectable and further are such as in the ordinary course of business keep securities for their customers. In all these cases the auditors must use their judgment. Whether an auditor did in fact entertain the opinion he reported is a question of fact 4.

What is not.

It is not the duty of auditors to make themselves familiar with the obligations imposed upon them by the company's articles 5. An article exempting auditors from liability for losses not happening by or through their own wilful neglect or default is valid and effective 5. But if any loss arises to the company from neglect of duty on the part of the auditors, they may be held personally liable 6.

Although it is not the duty of accountants to take stock in auditing the accounts, they may well call for explanations of particular items in the stock-sheet [1].

As to the duties and liabilities of auditors generally see the cases noted below [2].

Articles where ultra vires.

A company has no power to make regulations precluding its auditors from availing themselves of all the information to which they are entitled as material for their report to be made to the shareholders as to the true state of the company's affairs. If the company does so, the regulations are ultra vires [3].

An auditor will be ordered to deliver up books and papers to the liquidator without prejudice to his lien [4].

Rights of preference shareholders, etc., as to receipt and inspection of reports, etc.

146. (1) Holders of preference shares and debentures of a company shall have the same right to receive and inspect the balance-sheets and profit and loss accounts of the company and the reports of the auditors and other reports as is possessed by the holders of ordinary shares in the company.

(2) This section shall not apply to a private company, nor to a company registered before the commencement of this Act :

Provided that in the case of any public company whether registered before or after the commencement of this Act the trustees for holders of debentures shall have the right conferred by sub-section (1) on holders of preference shares and debentures of a company.

Amendment.

By the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936, in sub-s. (1) the words in italics have been inserted and the proviso to sub-s. (2) has been added. For the effect of the amendments see Introduction.

Carrying on business with less than the legal minimum of members.

Liability for carrying on business with fewer than seven or, in the case of a private company, two members.

147. If at any time the number of members of a company is reduced, in the case of a private company, below two, or in the case of any other company, below seven, and it carries on business for more than six months while the number is so reduced, every person who is a member of the company during the time that it so carries on business after those six months and is cognisant of the fact that it is carrying on business with fewer than two members or seven members, as the case may be, shall be severally liable for the payment of the whole debts of the company contracted during that time, and may be sued for the same without joinder in the suit of any other member.

148. A document may be served on a company by leaving it at, or sending it by post to, the registered office of the company.

(5) Every such rule shall be published in the [Official Gazette], and on such publication shall have effect as if enacted in this Act.

In this section the words "Central Government" within square brackets in sub-ss. (2), (3) and (4) have been substituted for the words "Governor General in Council" and the words "Official Gazette" within square brackets in sub-ss. (3) and (5) have been substituted for the words "Gazette of India", and "its" in two places for "his" by the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937.

The forms given in the Third Schedule should be generally followed 1.

Arbitration and Compromise.

Power for companies to refer matters to arbitration.

152. (1) A company may by written agreement refer to arbitration, in accordance with the···Arbitration Act, 1940, an existing or future difference between itself and any other company or person.

(2) Companies, parties to the arbitration, may delegate to the arbitrator power to settle any terms or to determine any matter capable of being lawfully settled or determined by the companies themselves, or by their directors or other managing body.

(3) The provisions of the···Arbitration Act, 1940,···shall apply to all arbitrations between companies and persons in pursuance of this Act.

Amendment.

In sub-sections (1) and (3) after the words "Arbitration Act" for the figure "1899" the figure "1940" has been substituted by s. 49 (2) of the Arbitration Act X of 1940. By the same section of the said Act in sub-s (3) before the words "shall apply" the following words have been omitted : "other than those restricting the application of the Act in respect of the subject-matter of the arbitration." By the Repealing and Amending Act XXXII of 1940 in sub-sections (1) and (3) the word "Indian" before the words "Arbitration Act" has been omitted.

Object.

This section is merely an enabling section 2. The real object of this section is to extend the operation of the Arbitration Act even to cases in which the subject-matter of disputes could not be made subject of arbitration under the Arbitration Act 2. This section is subject to the applicability of the Arbitration Act to the local area in which the Court in which the suit has been instituted is situate 1. Where the Arbitration Act has not been made applicable, as for instance, the Ferozepore District in the Punjab, a Civil Court cannot proceed with a reference to arbitration under that Act. It is not the intention of the legislature to make the Arbitration Act applicable to the whole of British India with regard to disputes between companies or between a company and other persons 1.

Construction.

The word "may" after the words "a company" in the beginning of this section does not go with the sentence "in accordance" &c. but with the words "refer to arbitration." Again the existence of the words "in accordance" &c. in sub-s. (1) is an indication that the legislature considered it to be de rigueur that every reference by a limited company to arbitration should be in accordance with the Arbitration Act. Sub-s (3) is conclusive on the point that the provisions of the Arbitration Act only apply to arbitrations to which a limited company is a party. Such companies cannot refer to arbitration independent of this provision of the law and Schedule II of the Code of Civil Procedure has no application 2. This view has also been taken by the Calcutta High Court (R. C. Mitter & Lodge JJ.) in a very recent case 3, dissenting from the view taken by a Full Bench of the Lahore High Court in Sita Ram v. Punjab National Bank, supra. Their Lordships of the Calcutta High Court in the case 3 referred to above said : "The concluding words of that sub-section [sub-s. (3) of s. 152 of the Companies Act] 'in pursuance of this Act', words which had troubled the minds of the Judges constituting the Full Bench of the Lahore High Court (in Sita Ram v. Punjab National Bank, supra)--mean that sections 3 to 22 of the Indian Arbitration Act, 1899 would apply to all arbitrations in which one or both of the parties are companies irrespective of the locus of the subject matter by the force and effect of the Indian Companies Act, and the procedure provided for in the Indian Arbitration Act for extending its field of operation would not have to be followed in such cases. This is in our judgment the effect of sub-sec. (3) of s. 152. The words 'in pursuance of this Act' (i.e., the Companies Act) clearly qualify the phrase 'shall apply'. The meaning is that the provisions of the Indian Arbitration Act, 1899, except s. 2 thereof (which is to be treated as non-existent) shall apply to all arbitrations between companies and persons by the force and effect of the Companies Act itself. The decision of the Full Bench of the Lahore High Court has the effect of substituting for the words 'in pursuance of this Act' used by the legislature the words 'in pursuance of sub-sec. (1)' or the words 'in pursuance of this section.' On the interpretation we have put upon sub-sec. (3) of s. 152, sec. 3 and sec. 4(a) of the Indian Arbitration Act, 1899 would apply to all arbitrations in which a company is a party." An award made in such an arbitration must be filed either in the High Court or the Court of the District Judge, as the case may be, and paras 20 and 21 of Schedule II to the Code of Civil Procedure are excluded from operation upon such arbitration 3. When an application to file an award is made to the wrong Court it should not be dismissed but returned for presentation to the proper Court 3.

The Arbitration Act applied in the case falling within the scope of that Act even when the locus of the subject matter was outside a Presidency town, provided one of the parties or both of them were companies registered under this Act. Consequently a reference to arbitration, in which a company was interested, with the intervention of the Court was governed by the rules in Sch. 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The Arbitration Act, 1899 had no application to such a case [1]. But since 1st July, 1940 on which the Arbitration Act, 1940 came into force, such cases would be governed by Chapter IV of that Act. The Arbitration Act applied to all references to arbitration under the Companies Act [2], wherever they took place within a Presidency town or in a place to which the Local Government had extended the provisions of theArbitration Act, 1899 by virtue of the proviso to s. 2 of that Act [3]. This section applies to those cases only in which a company by written agreement refers a matter in dispute to arbitration in accordance with the provisions of the Arbitration Act. It does not apply to a case where a reference is made by the Court in a pending suit [4]. A company under the Companies Act stands in the Punjab on no different footing than a private individual governed by the Punjab Act I of 1911. Therefore if an agreement between the parties of which one is a company makes no specific reference to the Arbitration Act, that Act will not apply to the arbitration agreement between the parties [5].

It is not obligatory that any references to arbitration to which a limited company is a party should be made under the Arbitration Act [6].

Arbitrations under this & s. 208-C, distinction.

This section empowers a company to refer to arbitration an existing difference between itself and any other company or person. But a shareholder has no such right against the company [7]. The arbitration contemplated in s. 208-C (post) is one between the company in liquidation and one or more of its members—an arbitration to settle an internal dispute or difference. Sub-s. (3) of the present section would not cover such a case, as the arbitration contemplated there is one between a company and either another company or an individual third party, i.e., an arbitration to settle not an internal but an external dispute or difference [8].

Decree if nullity.

Where the parties referred a dispute to arbitration but had not agreed to do so in writing, an award was made therein and the Court passed a decree in terms of the award, it was held that the decree was not a nullity and it was not open to the executing Court to go behind the decree [9]. Where a company entered into an agreement for reference to arbitration, but it was not specifically stipulated that it was to be under the Arbitration Act, and the award was filed and a decree passed thereon, it was held that the decree was a nullity and could not be executed [10]. But the award itself was enforceable as a decree under s. 15 of the Arbitration Act [10]. In the last cited case the Peshwar Court followed the decision of Mukherji and Guha JJ. in Rabindra v. Jnanendra [11] affirmed by the Judicial Committee

(see Jnanendra v. Rabindra 1) with these words : "Their Lordships agree with the view taken by the Courts in India that the decree......was passed without jurisdiction and was, therefore, incapable of execution as such. The respondent, however, as a party to the arbitration award would be entitled under the Act to enforce the arbitrator's award through the Court in exactly the same way as if it was a decree. If, therefore, there was an existing award in favour of the respondent, the objection to his application was one of form only and not of substance."

A contract to refer to arbitration any dispute which might arise between a company and an individual is not illegal because it is not under the seal of the company 2. Although a living company is allowed to refer matters in difference to arbitration, an official liquidator may not be allowed to make a reference to private arbitration 3.

Reference to arbitration.

Where an agreement is made with a company to refer to arbitration under certain contingencies, a Court has no jurisdiction to file the agreement as s. 3 of the Arbitration Act excludes Sch. II, para 17, C. P. C. from operation of the Act 4. Where the articles of association provide for arbitration of a dispute between the company and its members, the latter can validly refer to arbitration a dispute relating to the question whether he was a member of the company in respect of some further shares for which he was registered as a member 5.

Enforcement of award.

An award under the Arbitration Act, 1899 can only be enforced by the District Judge and cannot be transferred by him to any other Court except the District Judge 6. But it is not obligatory on a company governed by the Arbitration Act to make a reference to arbitration out of Court in the province of the Punjab only in pursuance of the provisions of the Arbitration Act and to file an award made on such reference in the Court of the District Judge as required by the Arbitration Act. It is permissible for the company, although governed by the Arbitration Act, to make a reference outside the Arbitration Act, and although the award on such reference is filed in the Court of the senior Subordinate Judge, the decree passed on its basis is perfectly legal 7.

Appeal.

The proceedings for enforcemnt of an award under s. 15 of the Arbitration Act are governed by s. 47, C. P. C. and an appeal is competent from an order rejecting such application. The fact of an objection being raised that the award was given without jurisdiction does not preclude the application of s. 47, C. P. C. 8.

Power to compromise with creditors and members.

153. (1) Where a compromise or arrangement is proposed between a company and its creditors or any class of them, or between the company and its members or any class of them, the Court may, on the application in a summary way of the company or of any creditor or member of the company or, in the case of a company being wound up, of the liquidator, order a meeting of the creditors or class of creditors, or of the members of the company or class of members, as the case may be, to be called, held and conducted in such manner as the Court directs.

(2) If a majority in number representing three-fourths in value of the creditors or class of creditors, or members or class of members, as the case may be, present either in person or by proxy at the meeting, agree to any compromise or arrangement, the compromise or arrangement shall, if sanctioned by the Court, be binding on all the creditors or the class of creditors, or on all the members or class of members, as the case may be, and also on the company, or, in the case of a company in the course of being wound up, on the liquidator and contributories of the company.

(3) An order made under sub-section (2) shall have no effect until a certified copy of the order has been filed with the registrar, and a copy of every such order shall be annexed to every copy of the memorandum of the company issued after the order has been made, or in the case of a company not having a memorandum, of every copy so issued of the instrument constituting or defining the constitution of the company.

(4) If a company makes default in complying with sub-section (3) the company and every officer of the company who is knowingly and wilfully in default shall be liable to a fine not exceeding ten rupees for each copy in respect of which default is made.

(5) The Court may, at any time after an application has been made to it under this section, stay the commencement or continuation of any suit or proceeding against a company on such terms as it thinks fit and proper until the application is finally disposed of.

(6) In this section the expression "company" means any company liable to be wound up under this Act and for the purposes of this section unsecured creditors who may have filed suits or obtained decrees shall be deemed to be of the same class as other unsecured creditors.

(7) An appeal shall lie from any order made by the Court exercising original jurisdiction under this section to the authority authorised to hear appeals from the decisions of the Court.

Amendment. By the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936, the original sub-s. (3) has been re-numbered as sub-s. (6) and the new sub-sections (3), (4) and (5) have been inserted. By the same Act to sub-s. (3) re-numbered as sub-s. (6) the words in italics have been added and a further sub-s. (7) has also been added. As to the effects of these amendments see Introduction.

Construction. This section should be carefully construed. "It makes the majority of the creditors", as observed by Lord Justice Bowen, "or class of creditors bind the minority, it exercises a most formidable compulsion upon dissentient creditors; and it therefore requires to be construed with care as not to place in the hands of some of the creditors the means and opportunity of forcing dissentients to do that which it is unreasonable to require them to do, or of making a mere jest of the interest of the minority"[1]. But in English &c. Bank[2] Vaughan Williams J. said: "I do not think that any one who has followed the subsequent decisions—whether under the Companies Acts or the Bankruptcy Acts—will hesitate to say that the tendency of late has been rather to favour the power of the majority of creditors to impose their will upon the minority and to construe the legislation upon the subject with some freedom."

Principle. The principle upon which this section is based has been laid down in a recent case[3], by Page C. J. and Cunliffe J. of the Rangoon High Court. It is true that as between a creditor and the company as his debtor, the creditor who proves insolvency is entitled ex debito justitiæ to a winding up order. But the right ex debito justitiæ is not his individual right, but his representative right. If the majority of the class are opposed to his view and consider that they have a better chance of getting payment by abstaining from seizing the assets, then upon general grounds, the Court should give effect to such right as the majority of the class desire to exercise[4].

Powers of the Court under this section are strictly limited. The Court may either sanction or refuse to sanction a scheme approved by the company and its creditors or members. The Court has no power upon an application to alter the scheme which has been sanctioned by the Court and agreed to at a meeting under this section without giving parties to an agreement an opportunity of considering the scheme in the way the Court proposes[5]. Upon confirmation by the Court the scheme becomes by virtue of this section binding upon the creditors, shareholders and the company. Its terms can therefore be varied by order of the Court after the variation has been approved at meetings of the creditors and shareholders, and it is not possible for the company or its directors or shareholders, whether by resolution or ratification or otherwise, to alter the scheme. Nor is it possible for the company or its directors to vary the scheme under the guise of a compromise with a shareholder, as no variation or departure from that scheme can be validated by mere acquiescence of the shareholders or creditors[6]. It is not the function of the Court to substitute its own scheme for the scheme presented to it for sanction, and if the Court is of opinion that unless some radical amendment is effected or the scheme is fundamentally altered, it ought not to be sanctioned, it is the duty of the Court to reject the scheme. "The Court must look at the scheme and see whether the Act has been complied with, whether the majority are acting bona fide and whether they are coercing the minority inorder to promote interests adverse to those of the class whom they purport to represent, and then see whether the scheme is a reasonable one, or whether there is any reasonable objection to it, or such an objection to it as that any reasonable man might say that he could not approve of it" [per Lindley L. J. in English Scottish &c. Bank (1893) 3 Ch. 385]. The Court must be satisfied that the scheme is not only reasonable but also practicable. It is neither the duty nor the business of the members of the Court to express their own opinion as to whether, if they happened to be creditors of the bank, they could not or would not have voted in favour of the scheme. It is enough that the Court should hold that the view taken by the creditors as to the feasibility of the scheme is one as to which persons acting honestly and viewing the scheme laid before them in the interests of those whom they represent take a view which can be reasonably taken by business men [1]. The fact that the shareholders and creditors have approved of a scheme of compromise or arrangement does not mean that the Court is bound to accept the scheme. It is the duty of the Court to examine the proposals and decide whether they are fair and reasonable. That the shareholders and cerditors have approved of a scheme will of course carry weight but there may be more important considerations [2]. Where the resolution approving a scheme is shown to have been passed as a result of misleading statements contained in a letter written by one of the creditors of the company who was also a director thereof, and circulated to all the shareholders and creditors before the meeting, where the company was hopelessly insolvent and the scheme conferred no apparent benefit on any one and in fact ignored creditors who were not depositors and the scheme itself was not a feasible one, and where besides there were also allegations of unlawful and unauthorized acts on the part of the company's officials, justice demanded that the resolution approving the scheme should be disregarded [2]. Before sanctioning the scheme the Court may impose certain conditions upon the company for making some provision for the dissentients. The Court however does not necessarily make any provision for the dissentients, if it is satisfied that the scheme is reasonable and fair and in the interest of the general body of shareholders. In any case under modern practice such a provision is not a sine qua non to sanctioning the scheme if it is reasonable [3].

The first thing the Court has to see is whether the provisions of the statute have been complied with. Secondly, the Court has to see that the persons present at the meetings have acted bona fide and that they have done nothing which in the circumstances is injurious to the interests of the classes whom they represented. But the Court does not sit merely to register the decree of the majority of the creditors or shareholders present at the meetings. It has to look at the arrangement and see that it is such that a man of business would reasonably approve, and further that it is fair and reasonable as regards the interests of all concerned [4]. "If the creditors are acting on sufficient information and with time to consider what they are about and are acting honestly, they are, I apprehend, much better judges of what is their commercial advantage than the Court can be... While therefore I protest that we are not to register their decisions but to see that they have been properly convened and have been properly consulted and have considered the matter from a point of view, that is, with a view to the interests of the class to which they belong and are empowered to bind, the Court ought to be slow to differ from them." [1] Therefore it is very essential that the scheme must, as far as possible, be based upon correct information, but that does not mean that if the information is not accurate and complete the application for sanction should be rejected in limine. The Court can in such a case call for a report, in as short a time as possible, which will give a fair idea of the affairs of the company at the moment and on that state of information the scheme as adumbrated or with the necessary amendments can be circulated along with the report [2]. As regards the capacity of creditors to safeguard their own interests in such cases the following observations of Vaughan Williams J. apply with greater force to this country : "I confess that I have very little belief in creditors of a company being able to look after their own interests. It is a matter of history that never mind what safeguards may be suggested, never mind what statutory precautions may be given, the creditors of an individual bankrupt have never been roused to look after their interest... Experience shows that creditors, whether of a company or of an individual man, never can be trusted to take care of themselves. The disjected forces of individual creditors are a mere nothing as against the consolidated forces of those who are often deeply interested in bringing about an adoption of the scheme which is presented to the creditors" [3]. In all concerns of the company, whether in the matter of winding up or in the matter of a scheme, the policy of the Act is to ascertain the wishes of the creditors as expressed by the majority of them subject to the rights of the minority being safeguarded. No Court is entitled to say that it will not ascertain the wishes of the majority in regard to a proposed scheme. It is true that under sub-s. (1) of this section a certain discretion is vested in the Court, but the scope of that discretion is limited, and the Court ought not to decline to order a meeting unless the proposals are illegal as being in contravention of the provisions of the Act or incapable of modification in view of ascertained facts, so that it would be a waste of time and expenditure to circulate them [2].

The Court should always prefer a living scheme to a compulsory liquidation bringing about the end of a company and usually without any hope of payment in full (Dawson v. Hormusji, supra). The onus of showing that any scheme is unreasonable is on the objectors [4]. It is the Court's duty carefully to scrutinize complicated schemes [5].

Winding up.

This section is applicable in the case of a going company as well as a company in liquidation, whereas s. 215 applies only in or in view of winding up of a company [6]. Where after a petition has been presented under this section, an application for compulsory winding up is filed by certain creditors, there is no reason why the latter application should not be considered by the Court. In fact it should be considered at the earliest possible moment. Even if an order for winding up is passed, it will not interfere with any proper scheme being considered [7]. "Schemes are presented to the creditors", said Vaughan Williams J. "in bankruptcy and in the liquidation of companies more often than not for the purpose of rectifying some wrong that has been done or for the purpose of serving some interest which is wholly antagonistic to the interests of the creditors" 1.

All reorganization may be effected.

All modes of reorganizing the share capital, even when involving an interference with preference or other special rights attached to shares, can be effected as part of an arrangement with the members under this section 2, even though the scheme may involve winding up, though in the exercise of its discretion the Court may impose certain conditions upon the company before sanctioning the scheme 3. See notes to s. 54 ante.

Court's jurisdiction.

The power given to the Court to sanction a scheme of arrangement between a company and its creditors or between the company and its members extends to debenture-holders and other creditors and enables the Court to sanction a scheme, although it deprives the debenture-holders of their security wholly or in part 4. The Court may also sanction an arrangement whereby terminable debentures or debenture bonds are converted into perpetual debenture stock 5.

The Court has a wide discretion in the matter 6, though it will reject the scheme only where it is shown that there has been something wrong; but where the creditors acting in good faith and on sufficient information and with time to consider what they are about have pronounced that a particular scheme is to their commercial advantage, the Court will be slow to differ from them 7.

Where an application was made for the sanction of a scheme under which the liabilities of a company were to be paid up in full by a new company which was to take over the assets and liabilities of the old company and the shareholders in the existing company were to receive shares of the new company as provided by the scheme, and meetings were held and the requisite resolutions of the different classes of shareholders and debenture-holders passed in favour of the scheme, it was held by the Court of Appeal that there was no jurisdiction under the section to compel the ordinary shareholders to take shares in the new company 8.

The Court sanctioning a scheme has jurisdiction to entertain an application for an order modifying the scheme so as to expunge from the scheme certain words preventing the decree-holder from executing his decree 9.

Foreign company.

In the case of a foreign company having its central office in British India the High Court, in whose jurisdiction such office is situate, can entertain an application under this section at the instance of a creditor or member of such a foreign company. When once an application for winding up a foreign company is made in a British Indian Court, the expression "Court" in this section must mean the Court in which the company is being wound up and therefore such Court will have jurisdiction to entertain an application under this section even before an order for winding up is passed by such Court. In such a case the right to apply under this section is not restricted only to a liquidator 1. As to the mode of proceeding in such a case see the last cited authority.

"Compromise" & "arrangement.

A power to compromise rights presupposes some dispute about them or difficulty in enforcing them 2. A proposed scheme for amalgamation of two companies, though not a compromise, may be an arrangement within this section, and there is no ground for limiting the meaning of the word to the question of some dispute or difficulty to be resolved by a compromise or arrangement 3. "A reasonable compromise must be," observed Lord Justice Bowen, "a compromise which can by reasonable people conversant with the subject be regarded as beneficial to those on both sides who are making it... I have no doubt at all that it would be improper for the Court to allow an arrangement to be forced on any class of creditors, if the arrangement cannot reasonably be supposed by sensible business people to be for the benefit of that class as such" 4.

The word "arrangement" as used in this section means something analogous in some sense to a compromise. In any arrangement which can fairly be called a compromise or considered as analogous to a compromise there must be both give and take 1. Where the directors are authorized to manage the company, a proposal made by them under this section in the name of the company is valid and proper 5.

A meeting of the company is not a condition precedent to proposal under this section and the directors can initiate such proposals 6. The company need not take proceedings to alter the memorandum and the articles before the Court can sanction such an alteration 7.

The reconstruction of an existing company by winding up and sale of its entire undertaking and assets for shares in a new foreign company, though outside the scope of a reconstruction under the old s. 213, may be effected as an arrangement under this section 8. In the last noted case the Court's jurisdiction and duty under the section were explained by Astbury J.

If a proper provision is made for dissentient members, reconstruction of an existing company by winding up and sale of the entire assets for shares in a new company may be effected under this section 9.

A mere agreement on the part of the shareholders is not enough for the acceptance of a scheme. It is ultimately for the Court to sanction it or not. It is no doubt open to a party to withdraw his offer before the scheme is put before the shareholders and sanctioned by the Court, but he may be estopped by his action or conduct 10.

Under ss. 153 and 154 of the English Act of 1929, corresponding to this section and s. 153A, Bennet J. sanctioned a scheme of arrangement by which the company was allowed by its directors and liquidators to enter into an agreement with another company for adoption of the scheme by the latter and for transfer of the business and assets of the company to the other company 1.

What the Court considers in sanctioning a scheme.

The procedure is to apply to the Court by summons in the first instance to direct meetings of the different classes of the creditors and contributories and take directions from the Court 2. After the proposed scheme has been passed by the requisite majority, a petition is presented to the Court for sanctioning the scheme 2.

In exercising the power under this section the Court will consider whether the class summoned to a meeting was fairly represented by those who attended and whether the statutory majority who approved the scheme acted bona fide or were seeking to promote interests adverse to those of the class whom they professed to represent 3.

In exercising its power of sanction the Court will also see that the provisions of the statute have been complied with 4. The Court will see that the majority are acting bona fide and then only it will give effect to the decision of the meeting 5 ; but at the same time, the Court will be slow to differ from the meeting, unless either the class has not been properly consulted or the meeting has not considered the matter with a view to the interests of the class which it is empowered to bind, or some defect is found in the scheme 6.

When the scheme contemplated the formation of a new company to take over the assets of the liquidating company and shareholders in the old company are allowed to take shares, not fully paid up, in the new company in respect of shares as to which they are liable in the winding up, the Court may, as a condition of sanctioning the scheme, require the insertion, in the memorandum of association of the new company, of a clause preventing them from escaping liability by transferring their new shares 7.

In sanctioning a scheme to alter the memorandum of association under the section, the Court will also see that the minority is not being over-ridden by a majority having interest of their own clashing with those of the minority whom they seek to coerce. Further, the Court has to look at the scheme and see whether it is one as to which persons acting honestly, and viewing the scheme laid before them in the interest of those whom they represent, take a view which can be reasonably taken by business men 8.

It is usual for the scheme of arrangement between a company and its creditors to contain a provision empowering some one, be he a liquidator or some other officer of the company, to assent to any such modification as the Court may think fit to impose. In the absence of any such person, it is not open to the Court suo motu to impose on a creditor any condition which will operate by way of modification of the scheme, especially in the absence of the consent of the persons who have entered into the arrangement 9. In the last cited case the creditors were unrepresented before the Court and could not give their assent to the modification. So Costello and Lort-Williams JJ. set aside the order of Ameer Ali J.

Where the Court will not give sanction.

As a general rule the Court would not sanction an arrangement if it would prejudice a creditor whose rights would have been preferential if the winding up petition had been carried on 1 ; nor would it sanction an arrangement which did not provide that the new company should undertake to obey the order of the Court as to any proceedings which the Court might think it right to have taken against officers of the old company 2. A Court will not give sanction to a scheme which will have the effect of enabling a bank or other company which is, to all intents and purposes, insolvent, to continue carrying on business and attract deposits which in all probability will go the way of the former deposits 3.

Scheme sanctioned differs from agreement.

A scheme when sanctioned by the Court becomes something quite different from a mere agreement signed by the parties. It becomes a statutory scheme. So when the debt of one of joint and several debtors, being a company, is released by a scheme of arrangement in the liquidation of that company, the scheme does not release the other debtors 4.

Who is a creditor.

Every person having a pecuniary claim against a company, whether actual or contingent, is a creditor within this section 5 ; but holders of debentures payable to bearer are not entitled to vote unless they produce their debentures at or before the meeting 6.

Creditors casting their votes at a meeting of creditors under this section for or against a scheme of arrangement are entitled to have the result of the poll recorded 7. Where certain scrutineers were appointed by the Court to assist the chairman under order of the Court, the decision of the chairman as to the admissibility of any proxy was held to be final subject to the Court's order of revision 7. The scrutineers have no locus standie to file a petition for direction as to the validity of proxies used at the meeting, and the Court ought not to exercise its powers of revision unless and until the chairman has given his decision as to the admissibility of the proxies 7.

Notice &c.

When the Court is exercising jurisdiction under this section, certain principles must be kept in view before sanction to a scheme is accorded. The regularity of the meeting directed by the Court to be held would be a very important point for the Court to consider. This would include the question of service of notice of the meeting and questions relating to the conduct of the meeting 8. But the section does not make it obligatory upon the Court or the company to serve the notice on each and every creditor of the company, and a decision arrived at by the creditors and the company in the absence of any individual creditor is not therefore invalid 9.

Majority of three-fourths.

Sub-s. (2). If the votes cast be a multiple of three or some such number, will the fraction be taken into computation ? It appears that the maxim de minimis non curat lex is not applicable to such a case and the fraction must be taken into account in computing the majority. In construing a trust deed which required a majority of three-fourths for passing a certain resolution the Bombay High Court held that the above maxim is applicable only to the computation of time in which the law neglects a fraction and that in computing the majority of votes a fraction cannot be disregarded 1. The nominal value of policies of an insurance company must be accepted as the value of the policies for the purpose of ascertaining majorities at meetings beld to approve or disapprove of a scheme of compromise under this section 2.

Voting.

If a person is a member of more than one class, he may attend and vote at meetings of each class of which he is a member 3. The scheme need not be approved by a majority in value of all the creditors or members provided that the requisite majority of those present in person or by proxy sanction it 3.

Proxy.

This section gives a general right to vote by proxy, using any proper form of proxy, and the proxies need not be sent to the company's office before the meeting 4. Directors, who, pursuant to the Court's order, receive proxies for or against a scheme, must use them 4. As to the form of proxy, the form given in reg. 67 of Table A may be a useful guide until rules are framed by the High Courts under the amended s. 246, and definite direction from the Court may be taken 5. Where the company is being wound up, the provisions in the rules made by the High Courts under s. 246 6 may be followed 7.

Class Meetings.

Meetings of each class of creditors or shareholders must be held separately, each class being confined to those persons whose rights are not dissimilar to make it impossible for them to consult together with a view to their common interest 8. The presence of shareholders of another class is however a matter relating to the conduct of the meeting which lies in the hands of the chairman with the assent of those persons who are properly present and constitute the meeting, and where no objection is taken at the meeting, those present must be taken to have assented to the meeting being so conducted, and the resolution passed thereat will accordingly be valid 9.

At a meeting held under this section the written acceptance of the arrangement by those shareholders and creditors who are not present, either in person or by proxy, cannot be taken into consideration to make up the requisite majority 10.

If in a company different amounts are paid on shares or some shareholders have paid amounts in advance of calls, this makes various classes of shareholders and separate meetings must be called 11.

In Sovereign Life Assurance Co. v. Dodd 12 it was held that insured persons whose policies had matured formed a distinct class of creditors from those whose policies had not matured. In that case Lord Esher, M. R. said : "They must be divided into different classes. What is the reason for such a course ? It is because the creditors composing the different classes have different interests ; and therefore if we find a different state of facts existing among different creditors which may differently affect their minds and their judgment, they must be divided into different classes. In the present case the persons who had notice of the meeting were policy-holders, that is to say, policy-holders whose policies had to be dealt with. But the defendant was not a policy-holder at all, his policies had been fulfilled, and he was a creditor for the amount of his policies and could have sued the company for money due ; he had a vested cause of action, the policy-holders had none ; and it is obvious that he could not consider the matter with the same mind and the same point of view as the policy-holders who were summoned to the meeting." In the same case Bowen L. J. at p. 583 observed : "It seems plain that we must give such a meaning to the term 'class', as will prevent the section being so worked as to result in confiscation and injustice and that it must be confined to those persons whose rights are not so dissimilar as to make it impossible for them to consult together with a view to their common interest."

Different classes of creditors.

In the Calcutta High Court there is a conflict of decisions on the question whether unsecured creditors, e.g., depositors who have already obtained a decree belong to a class different from that of those who have not obtained a decree for their money. In one set of cases it was held that the decree-holders belonged to a different class and as such were not bound by the scheme when a separate meeting of their class was not held [1] ; while in another set of cases it was held that they did not belong to a different class [2]. The question has however been set at rest by the amended sub-s. (6) which says that for the purposes of this section unsecured creditors who may have filed suits or obtained decrees shall be deemed to be of the same class as other unsecured creditors.

Before ordering a meeting of the class of creditors with whom it is proposed to make an arrangement, it is not necessary that the Court should first have issued notices where the chairman of the meeting is careful to satisfy himself and to certify to the Court that notice of the application and of the meeting ordered had been sent to and acknowledged by all creditors [3].

Where notice of a meeting to frame a scheme under this section is given to all creditors and one of them receiving the notice assigns the debt due to him to one of the debtors of the company before the date of the notified meeting, the assignee does not pass on to a new class of creditors, viz., debtor-creditors. Such a case bears no analogy to cases where a set off is allowed in liquidation proceedings on the principle of banktuptcy laws [1].

Court's control over meetings.

The section does not expressly give the Court control over the proceedings at the meeting. But it seems to have an inherent power to give directions [2]. Though "Court meetings" are subject to the direction of the Court, where no express direction is given the articles must be looked to so far as they are applicable [3].

"I think the Court has", says Vaughan Williams J., "an inherent power to direct the mode in which meetings shall be held, and the mode in which proxies shall be evidenced, and to determine all such questions as whether it is necessary that the proxy shall be produced at the meeting" [4]. Proxies on which the day of the meeting was not named were held to be good if properly stamped [4].

The terms of the section are wider than those of s. 120 of the English Act of 1908 (s. 153 of the English Act of 1929). Under this section the Court has ample power to settle a form of proxy and any substantial failure to comply with the Court's direction will invalidate the proxy [5].

A meeting of shareholders not convened exactly in accordance with the directions of the Court may be held good, if in the result a sufficient number of shares is accounted for [6].

Three-fourths in value.

The sanction of three-fourths in value of the members of the class present in person or by proxy is sufficient although it may not be three-fourths in value of the total class [7].

Alternative mode of liquidation—stay of suits etc.

A scheme under this section is an alternative mode of liquidation, which by the operation of law relieves the company and its contributories from liability further than that which is contemplated or imposed by the scheme, any express words staying proceedings by creditors being unnecessary [8]. It is therefore a provision with respect to winding up within the meaning of s. 271 post [9]. Failure of a scheme for resusciation of a company is not by itself sufficient to justify a winding up order being made. This section makes provision not merely for schemes for the resusciation or reorganisation of companies, but it also provides for a scheme of arrangement, an alternative mode of liquidation, which the law allows the statutory majority of creditors to substitute for winding up, whether voluntary or under the Court [10]. But under this section the Court could not restrain suits or proceedings against the company as under s. 169 [11]. The Act was defective in this respect. The difficulty could be got over by presenting a winding up petition in the first instance, getting stay of proceedings under s. 169 and asking the Court for an order to allow the petition for winding up to stand over till the preparation and sanction of a scheme under this section 1. But now the defect has been removed by the new sub-s. (5).

Arrangement involving reduction of capital.

If the scheme of arrangement involves a reduction of capital, all the requirements of the Act with regard to reduction must be complied with 2. It is necessary to advertize the petition for sanctioning the scheme, unless the Court dispenses with advertisement 2. Members or creditors who do not appear at the hearing of the petition cannot appeal without leave 3. A company having power under its articles of association to reduce its capital by paying off capital, cancelling lost capital, reducing the liability on its shares, "or otherwise as may seem expedient" is entitled to reduce its capital in any manner authorized by statute. The scheme for reduction of capital having been fully and properly explained to the shareholders without concealment of any relevant facts and approved, on a poll being taken, by the requisite majorities of each class, ought properly to be approved by the Court 4. The directors are not under any duty to the shareholders to disclose to them in the circular explaining the scheme, their holdings or respective proportional interests in ordinary and deferred shares 4.

Who are bound by the order.

The order sanctioning the scheme becomes binding not only on the creditors but also on the liquidators and contributories, so that whether the scheme be a valid one or not, a shareholder cannot afterwards question it 5. A creditor being bound under this section by an arrangement between the company and its creditors, the omission of the company to raise a plea to this effect at the original trial is not a bar to its being raised in the execution proceeding 6.

When a scheme of composition under this section has been sanctioned by the High Court and it has further been decided that a particular decree-holder is bound by it, the High Court has power to restrain by injunction proceedings in execution started by the decree-holder in a maffasil Court after getting the decree transferred there 7.

Executing Court.

A scheme sanctioned by the Court under this section covering creditors who had already brought suits or obtained decrees cannot be attacked collaterally in execution proceedings as one without jurisdiction, either on the ground that notice of the meeting had not been served on the executing decree-holder or on the ground that notice of the meeting was not served on the objector or that separate meetings of different classes of depositors had not been ordered. Such defects, even if made out, would not be errors of jurisdiction 8. An objection by the judgment-debtor company that the creditor's decree has been superseded by the scheme sanctioned is an objection under s. 47, C. P. Code 1. A scheme is not an adjustment within the meaning of O. XXI, r. 2, C. P. C. and does not require to be certified or recorded in order that the executing Court may recognize the scheme 2. When one Judge has sanctioned the scheme, it is not within the power of another Judge exercising equal jurisdiction to declare in effect that the scheme to the extent it affects a particular person is a nullity 3.

Date when compromise becomes binding.

The agreement or compromise referred to in this section becomes binding from the date when it is arrived at, subject to subsequent sanction by the Court 4. It is the proceeding of the meeting that is to be binding provided only that it does not fail to be subsequently sanctioned 4.

Assent of classes.

If some of the classes of persons have no interest because the whole value of the assets is exhausted by those who have priority over them, the assent of that class at a meeting is not necessary and the Court can sanction the arrangement inspite of their opposition 5.

Directors' position.

Where the directors of a company induced some of the shareholders to give their options to purchase their shares for securing consent of the majority to an amalgamation, and upon amalgamation the directors made profits, it was held that they were trustees of this profit for the benefit of those shareholders 6. If upon a reconstruction special privileges are made for the benefit of the directors, they must be disclosed; otherwise sanction of the members to the scheme will be inoperative 7.

Subsequent alteration.

The Privy Council has held that where a proposed scheme accepted by a meeting of shareholders and approved by the Court was subsequently altered by changed circumstances, a meeting of shareholders should again be summoned to consider the amended scheme, and the Court has power to approve of the modification 8.

Withdrawal of sanction.

"It is conceivable", observed Lort-Williams J. 9, "that the Court may have power to withdraw its sanction to any scheme, or may give leave to appeal against the order even though application for such leave has not been made within time [Securities Insurance Co. 10]; but I apprehend that such serious steps will not be taken unless application for such withdrawal or leave is made promptly and before the position of those interested has been irretrievably altered as by the barring of claims or by the payment of dividends or by the acquirement of rights by any of the parties to an arrangement which has received the sanction of the Court. Upon this point reference may be made to the observations of Lord Esher, M. R. and Cotton, L. J. in Nicholl v. Eberhardt Co. [1890] 61 L. T. 489."

Appeal.

There was no appeal under s. 202 from an order made under this section on an application by a company which was not in the course of being wound up [1]. But now a right of appeal has been given by the new sub-s. (7) [2]. Where the Court orders that proxy forms used at a meeting of creditors should be rejected and another such meeting should be held, such an order is a judgment within the Letters Patent and is appealable, since the effect of the order is to determine finally that the decision of the creditors who had duly voted for or against the scheme should not be ascertained or recorded and to render inoperative the poll [3]. A mere stranger who would be benefited by the scheme cannot appeal [4].

Provisions for facilitating arrangements and compromises.

153A. (1) Where an application is made to the Court under section 153 for the sanctioning of a compromise or arrangement proposed between a company and any such persons as are mentioned in that section, and it is shown to the Court that the compromise or arrangement has been proposed for the purposes of or in connection with a scheme for the reconstruction of any company or companies or the amalgamation of any two or more companies, and that under the scheme the whole or any part of the undertaking or the property of any company concerned in the scheme (in this section referred to as a 'transferor company') is to be transferred to another company (in this section referred to as 'the transferee company'), the Court may, either by the order sanctioning the compromise or arrangement or by any subsequent order, make provision for all or any of the following matters :—

(a) the transfer to the transferee company of the whole or any part of the undertaking and of the property or liabilities of any transferor company ;

(b) the allotting or appropriation by the transferee company of any shares, debentures, policies, or other like interests in that company which under the compromise or arrangement are to be allotted or appropriated by that company to or for any person ;

(c) the continuation by or against the transferee company of any legal proceedings pending by or against any transferor company ;

(d) the dissolution, without winding up, of any transferor company ;

(e) the provision to be made for any persons who, within such time and in such manner as the Court directs, dissent from the compromise or arrangement ;

(f) such incidental, consequential and supplemental matters as are necessary to secure that the reconstruction or amalgamation shall be fully and effectively carried out.

(2) Where an order under this section provides for the transfer of property or liabilities, that property shall, by virtue of the order, be transferred to and vest in, and those liabilities shall, by virtue of the order, be transferred to and become the liabilities of, the transferee company, and in the case of any property, if the order so directs, freed from any charge which is by virtue of the compromise or arrangement to cease to have effect.

(3) Where an order is made under this section, every company in relation to which the order is made shall cause a certified copy thereof to be delivered to the registrar for registration within fourteen days after the completion of the order, and if default is made in complying with this sub-section, the company and every officer of the company who is knowingly and wilfully in default shall be liable to a fine not exceeding fifty rupees.

(4) In this section the expression 'property' includes property, rights and powers of every description, and the expression 'liabilities' includes duties.

(5) Notwithstanding the provisions of [sub-section (6)] of section 153, the expression 'company' in this section does not include any company other than a company within the meaning of this Act.

Amendments. This new section has been inserted by the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936. It reproduces s. 154 of the English Companies Act, 1929. In sub-s. (5) the expression within square brackets has been substituted for "sub-section 4" by the amending Act II of 1938.

Scope. A company has no power to enter into, nor can the Court sanction, any arrangement or compromise with its creditors under this or the following section (s. 153 B) which necessarily involves the doing of any act which is ultra vires the company, being in excess of its corporate powers as defined in its memorandum of association. Thus where the objects of a company, as stated in its memorandum of association, did not include any power to sell or dispose of the company's undertakings, a scheme, which involved the transfer in consideration of shares of the entire undertaking and assets of the company to a new company to be formed for the purpose of acquiring those assets and gradually realizing them, was ultra vires and the Court had no jurisdiction to sanction it [1].

Sub-s. (1), cl. (d). This clause provides for dissolution of the transferor company when the transfer of its undertaking has been made, and there appears to be no means of calling back to life the company so dissolved, for s. 243 occurs in Part V dealing with winding up, whereas the present section occurs in Part IV 1.

Contract of personal service not transferred.

Where an order is made by the Court under this section for the amalgamation of two companies, a contract of personal service existing at the date of the amalgamation between a workman and the transferor company is not transferred thereby 2. "It is of course indisputable that (apart from statutory provision to the contrary) the benefit of a contract entered into by A to render personal service to X cannot be transferred by X to Y without A's consent, which is the same thing as saying that, inorder to produce the desired result, the old contract between A and X would have to be terminated by notice or by mutual consent and a new contract of service entered into by agreement between A and Y" 3.

Right to service is not property.

"At any rate" observed Lord Simon L. C., "after examination of s. 154 (corresponding to the present section) with close attention and considering the consequences of its application in different cases, I can come to no other conclusion than that an order made under it does not automatically transfer contracts of personal service. The word 'contract' does not appear in the section at all, and I do not agree with the view expressed in the Court of appeal that a right to the service of an employee is the property of the transferor company. Such a right cannot be the subject of gift or bequest; it cannot be bought or sold; it forms no part of the assets of the employer for the purpose of administering the estate. In short s. 154, when it provides for 'transfer' is providing, in my opinion, for the transfer of those rights which are not incapable of transfer and is not contemplating the transfer of rights which are in their nature incapable of being transferred 4. As to the rule which ought to govern interpretation of statutes see pp. 20-21 ante).

Power to acquire shares of shareholders dissenting from schemes or contract approved by majority.

153 B. shares of the approving shareholders are to be transferred to the transferee company :

Provided that, where any such scheme or contract has been so approved at any time before the commencement of the Indian Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936, the Court may by order, on an application made to it by the transferee company within two months after the commencement of that Act, authorise notice to be given under this section at any time within fourteen days after the making of the order, and this section shall apply accordingly, except that the terms on which the shares of the dissenting shareholder are to be acquired shall be such terms as the Court may by the order direct instead of the terms provided by the scheme or contract.

(2) Where a notice has been given by the transferee company under this section and the Court has not, on an application made by the dissenting shareholder, ordered to the contrary, the transferee company shall, on the expiration of one month from the date on which the notice has been given, or, if an application to the Court by the dissenting shareholder is then pending, after that application has been disposed of, transmit a copy of the notice to the transferor company and pay or transfer to the transferor company the amount or other consideration representing the price payable by the transferee company for the shares which by virtue of this section that company is entitled to acquire, and the transferor company shall thereupon register the transferee company as the holder of those shares.

(3) Any sums received by the transferor company under this section shall be paid into a separate bank account, and any such sums and any other consideration so received shall be held by that company on trust for the several persons entitled to the shares in respect of which the said sums or other consideration were respectively received.

(4) In this section the expression 'dissenting shareholder' includes a shareholder who has not assented to the scheme or contract and any shareholder who has failed or refused to transfer his shares to the transferee company in accordance with the scheme or contract.

Amendment.

This section also is new. It has been inserted by the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936, and reproduces s. 155 of the English Companies Act of 1979. See notes to s. 153A.

Arrangement and amalgamation.

It has been held in England that upon a petition to sanction a scheme of arrangement under s. 155 of the English Act (corresponding to s. 153B) the Court has power to determine the terms upon which the shares of shareholders who have dissented from the scheme approved by the majority shall be acquired notwithstanding that since the original offer was made the scheme has been superseded by a later amalgamation which has absorbed the transferee company, and the fact that the petitioners cannot offer to the dissentients the original shares accepted by the majority makes no difference to the jurisdiction of the Court which is only bound to decide whether the terms offered are adequate and reasonable, and if not, to substitute such other terms of purchase as in its discretion are fair and just 1.

Where not less than nine-tenths of the shareholders in the transferor company approve a scheme involving the transfer of the company's shares to a transferee company, prima facie the offer must be taken to be a fair one, and the Court will not "order otherwise" unless it is affirmatively established that notwithstanding the views of a very large majority of shareholders, the scheme is unfair 2.

Conversion of private company into public company.

Conversion of private company into public company.

154. (1) If a company, being a private company, alters its articles in such manner that they no longer include the provisions which, under the provisions of clause (13) of sub-section (1) of section 2, are required to be included in the articles of a company in order to constitute it a private company, the company, shall, as on the date of the alteration, cease to be a private company and shall, within a period of fourteen days after the said date, file with the registrar a prospectus or a statement in lieu of prospectus in the form and containing the particulars set out in the form marked II in the Second Schedule.

(2) If default is made in complying with sub-section (1) of this section, the company and every officer of the company who is knowingly and wilfully in default shall be liable to a fine not exceeding five hundred rupees.

(3) Where the articles of a company include the provisions aforesaid but default is made in complying with any of those provisions, the company shall cease to be entitled to the privileges and exemptions conferred on private companies under the provisions contained in this Act, and thereupon the provisions of this Act shall apply to the company as if it were not a private company:

Provided that the Court, on being satisfied that the failure to comply with the conditions was accidental or due to inadvertence or to some other sufficient cause, or that on other grounds it is just and equitable to grant relief, may, on the application of the company or any other person interested and on such terms and conditions as seem to the Court just and expedient, order that the company be relieved from such consequences as aforesaid.

Amendment.

For s. 154 this new section has been substituted by the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936, in the terms of s. 27 of the English Act of 1929. For the effect of this new section see Introduction. The original s. 154 was as follows:

2. Hoare & Co. [1934] 150 L. T. 374.

Conversion of private into public company.

154. (1) A private company may, subject to anything contained in its memorandum or articles, by a special resolution and by filing with the registrar a copy of such resolution and also such a statement in lieu of prospectus as the company, if a public company, would have had to file before allotting any of its shares or debentures, together with such a duly verified declaration as the company, if a public company, would have had to file before commencing business, turn itself into a public company.

(2) Upon the filing of the documents mentioned in sub-section (1), the registrar shall record the change in his books relating to the company.

A company whose articles contained the restrictions and provisions mentioned in s. 2, cl. (13) remained a private company even though they were not in fact observed or complied with 1. But now see sub-s. (3).

Conversion of a private company into a public company and vice versa.

By complying with the provisions of this section a private company can be converted into a public company. But there is no corresponding provision for converting a public company into a private company either in this Act or in the English Act. In England, it appears, a considerable number of existing companies have, by altering their articles, become private companies under the statute 2. "In order to convert an existing company into a 'private company,' it is necessary to pass a special resolution altering the company's articles so as to limit the number of members, to prohibit any invitation to the public to subscribe for its shares, debentures or debenture stock, and impose restrictions on the transfer of its shares: These alterations will satisfy the statutory definition, but they are not the only alterations requisite. The articles generally must be considered, for there may be other provisions inconsistent with those indicated, and they must be altered accordingly. For example power to issue share warrants to bearers must be struck out" 3. But it is significant first that there is no express provision for this either in the Indian or in the English Act, secondly the new English Act of 1929 (a consolidating Act), although it recasts the provisions of the Act of 1908 in this respect, does not make any provision for converting a public company into a private company. See s. 2 (13) and notes thereto.

PART V.

WINDING UP.

Preliminary.

Mode of winding up.

155. (1) The winding up of a company may be either—

(i) by the Court; or

(ii) voluntary; or

(iii) subject to the supervision of the Court.

(2) The provisions of this Act with respect to winding up apply, unless the contrary appears, to the winding up of a company in any of these modes.

Meaning of "winding up."

Winding up is a proceeding by means of which the dissolution of a company is brought about and in the course of which its assets are collected and realized and applied in payment of its debts, and when these are satisfied, returning to its members the sums which they have contributed to the company, or paying them other moneys due to them in their character of members. The proceeding is not confined to cases where a company is insolvent, but, may be adopted as a means of enabling the corporations or members to re-incorporate with extended object or further powers or more efficient means of management 1.

It differs from bankruptcy.

Winding up differs from bankruptcy in this respect that in bankruptcy the whole estate, both legal and equitable, is taken out of the bankrupt and is vested in his trustee ; whereas on a winding up the estate, legal or equitable, then in the company, still remains in it until its dissolution, unless disposed of in due course of winding up 2. A corporation does not become dissolved at the commencement of either a voluntary or compulsory winding up 3.

A company once incorporated under the Act cannot be put an end to except through the machinery of winding up proceeding 4, or by removal from the register as a defunct company under s. 247.

Principle followed in winding up.

In a winding up the general principle is—ascertain what is the domicile of the company in liquidation ; let the Court of the country of domicile act as the principal Court to govern the liquidation ; let the other Courts act as ancillary, as far as they can, to the principal liquidation. But although that is so, it has always been held that the desire to assist in the main liquidation will not ever make the Court give up the forensic rules which govern the conduct of its own liquidation 5.

In winding up company exists.

As observed by Viscount Cave, "a company which has been dissolved no longer exists as a separate entity capable of holding property or of being sued in Court ; but a company in liquidation, although the administration of its affairs has passed to the liquidator, retains its complete existence. If the liquidation should be annulled the company will resume its powers" 6.

Where a company cannot be wound up by Court.

If a company is not duly incorporated or is an illegal association 7, the Court has no jurisdiction to wind it up 8. But companies having no capital are subject to the Court's jurisdiction 9.

If an order to wind up is made without jurisdiction, it is not a judgment in rem so as to bind strangers, e.g., purchasers of property of the company 10.

Contributories.

Liability as contributories of present and past members.

156. (1) In the event of a company being wound up, every present and past member shall, subject to the provisions of this section, be liable to contribute to the assets of the company to an amount sufficient for payment of its debts and liabilities and the costs, charges and expenses of the winding up, and for the adjustment of the rights of the contributories among themselves, with the qualifications following (that is to say) :—

(i) a past member shall not be liable to contribute if he has ceased to be a member for one year or upwards before the commencement of the winding up;

(ii) a past member shall not be liable to contribute in respect of any debt or liability of the company contracted after he ceased to be a member ;

(iii) a past member shall not be liable to contribute unless it appears to the Court that the existing members are unable to satisfy the contributions required to be made by them in pursuance of this Act ;

(iv) in the case of a company limited by shares, no contribution shall be required from any member exceeding the amount (if any) unpaid on the shares in respect to which he is liable as a present or past member ;

(v) in the case of a company limited by guarantee, no contribution shall be required from any member exceeding the amount undertaken to be contributed by him to the assets of the company in the event of its being wound up ;

(vi) nothing in this Act shall invalidate any provision contained in any policy of insurance or other contract whereby the liability of individual members on the policy or contract is restricted, or whereby the funds of the company are alone made liable in respect of the policy or contract ;

(vii) a sum due to any member of a company in his character of a member, by way of dividends, profits or otherwise, shall not be deemed to be a debt of the company payable to that member in a case of competition between himself and any other creditor not a member of the company ; but any such sum may be taken into account for the purpose of the final adjustment of the rights of the contributories among themselves.

(2) In the winding up of a company limited by guarantee which has a share capital, every member of the company shall be liable, in addition to the amount undertaken to be contributed by him to the assets of the company in the event of its being wound up, to contribute to the extent of any sums unpaid on any shares held by him.

Principle.

Formerly in the cases of partnerships as well as joint stock companies there was a direct relationship between the creditor and the individual shareholder. "By the Act of 1862," said Lord Cairns, "that state of things in entirely swept away. A capital is created, sometimes limited, sometimes without a limit, but that capital is to be made good in the shape of a common fund and that common fund it is which is to be the source of the payment of every creditor of the company. And although it is quite true that members and ex-members of the company are placed by the Act under liability, that liability is a liability, not to make payments to creditors, but it is liability to contribute to and make good what should be the proper amount of the common fund. Then having got into the common fund every sum which ought to be contributed to it by every person whomsoever, the Legislature takes possession of that common fund and proceeds to distribute it amongst the creditors of the company"[1].

Liability to contribute.

Sub-s. (1). Before a company goes into liquidation the liability to contribute is measured by the contractual obligation arising from membership. But after liquidation this section imposes new liabilities on the shareholders in respect of unpaid calls made before or after the winding up ; and such calls can be recovered, though barred by limitation before the order for winding up was made[2]. The liability of a member under this section in respect of the shares is absolute and flows from the fact of his being on the register of members in respect of those shares. The original contract may supply the reason for his name having been placed there, but after the winding up his liability arises ex lege and not ex contractu[3].

"It is a mistake," observed Jessel, M. R., "to call that a debt due to the company. It is no such thing. It is not, as has been supposed, in any shape or way, a debt due to the company, but it is a liability to contribute to the assets of the company, and when we look further into the Act it will be seen that it is a liability to contribute to be enforced by the liquidator. It is quite true that a call made before the winding up—and in the case before me a call was made before the winding up—is a debt due to the company, but that does not affect the new liability to contribution"[4].

Where a shareholder, including a signatory to the memorandum of association, has failed to pay for shares allotted to him he can, in the event of the company going into liquidation, be placed upon the list of contributories, and the liquidator can make a call upon him for what is due, irrespective of any question of limitation, in which case the Court can enforce the call without requiring the liquidator to institute a suit [1].

The section proceeds upon the assumption that the contributories are all innocent parties and whatever may be the effect of a plea of fraud or misrepresentation as against the managing agents, it does not affect the liability of the contributories as contributories in a winding up [2].

As to the adjustment of the rights of the contributories among themselves, see ss. 192 and 212 (2). For the meaning of the term "contributory" see s. 158.

"Members" include persons to whom shares have been validly transferred after the winding up commenced [3].

Past member when liable.

By mere death a member does not become a past member within the meaning of this section; his estate continues to be liable [4]. "In most cases past members are not liable to contribute at all; for, the present members are primarily liable to make all contributions required, and it is only when they are unable to make such a contribution that any past member is liable" [6]. Where existing members on list A are not called upon to contribute to the full extent of the unpaid amounts of their share money, a past member on the list B cannot be made liable to contribute till list A is exhausted [5]. "In the case of a limited company, if the present members have contributed to the full extent of their limited liability, but their contributions are insufficient to discharge the company's liabilities, the past members are not liable to contribute because the liability on the shares which they held has been discharged by the payments made by their present holders" [6].

Past members or B contributories are liable to contribute to the assets of the company to an amount sufficient for the payment of its debts and liabilities and the costs of winding up subject (inter alia) to the qualification that they shall not be liable in respect of any debt or liability contracted after they ceased to be members [7]. The call must first be enforced against all B contributories who have not paid it, so as to produce equality of contribution and distribution [7]. If calculating the debts and liabilities of the company as they stood at the date when the B contributories ceased to be members a surplus is found, that must be refunded to the B contributories [7]. "So long as", pointed out Eve J., "there are assets undistributed in the liquidation, it remains open to the Court to correct any mistakes or injustice due to falsified estimates or other unforeseen incidents arising in a prolonged and difficult administration" [8].

The past members of a company limited by guarantee as well as that limited by shares, who have ceased to be members within a year before the commencement of the winding up, are not liable to contribute to the assets of the company, unless it appears to the Court that the existing members are unable to satisfy contributions required to be made by them in pursuance of the Act[1]. A former member will not however escape liability if the transfer of his shares has been merely colourable[2], or if he has transferred his shares to an infant[3]. But where shares were transferred to two infants successively and then to an adult, all the transfers having been registered, it was held that once the company had obtained an adult shareholder on its register, the intermediate transfers could not be avoided and the transferor could not be put on the list of past members, although the company was ordered to be wound up less than a year after the last transfer, but more than a year after the first transfer[4]. If shares have been transferred and owing to default on the company's part the transfer has not been registered, the transferor is entitled to have his name removed from the register[5]. A past member cannot be called upon to make contributions for the adjustment of the rights of the present members[6].

A director of a company who ceases to be a director does not thereby cease to be a member of the company. He cannot be held to be a "past member" of the company within the meaning of sub-s. (1) (i) of this section[7].

Deceased members & joint members.

A deceased member or his estate remains a member for the purpose of this section so long as his name remains on the register without notice to the company of his death[8]. When shares are registered in joint names, and one of the shareholders dies before winding up, his estate is not liable if the articles are silent on the point ; only the survivor is liable[9]. The liability of personal representatives placed on the list in their representative capacity is limited to the assets in their hands[10].

Trustees & persons to whom shares have been issued at a discount.

Persons whose names are entered in the register as holders of shares as trustees are contributories in their own right and their liability is not limited to the amount of the trust estate[11]. It being ultra vires of a limited company to issue shares at a discount or by way of bonus, although authorized to do so by the articles, persons to whom shares have been issued at a discount may be called upon in a winding up to pay in cash for their shares, not only to meet the claims of outside creditors, but also to adjust the rights of the contributories inter se[12].

Subscribers to memo. of association.

Persons signing the memorandum of association purely on the understanding that they would be given a certain number of shares as fully paid up in consideration of assets transferred to the company are not liable as contributories even though the contract regarding such shares is subsequently cancelled[13].

When shares forfeited more than a year before winding up.

If shares have been validly forfeited more than a year before the commencement of the winding up, the member cannot be placed on the list of contributories 1, even if owing to the neglect of the company his name has not been removed from the register 2 ; but he may remain liable as a debtor to the company for the calls made before the forfeiture 3. If the forfeiture is invalid, the member will however be placed on the list of contributories 4. A person who claims damages for an improper forfeiture of his shares claims not as a member but as a non-member 5.

Where less than a year.

In the case of a forfeiture made less than a year before the commencement of the winding up, the person whose shares have been forfeited will be liable to be placed on the list as past members 6.

Where induced to take shares by fraud.

Where a person has been induced to take shares by fraud in the prospectus he will be liable to be placed on the list of contributories, unless he applies to have his name removed from the register of members before the commencement of the winding up 7. Where a contract is rescinded for misrepresentation, it is rescinded ab initio, and accordingly the shareholder cannot in a winding up be placed on the list of contributories even as a past member 8. But where a person applies for shares in expectation of some commission or special gain, and an arrangement is made therefor and the application is granted, the applicant on allotment becomes a shareholder absolutely, and the breach or unenforceability of the latter arrangement being a collateral agreement does not interfere with his liability as a contributory 9.

Meaning of 'commencement of the winding up'.

Cl. (i). A winding up by the Court commences at the time of the presentation of the petition for winding up 10, and a voluntary winding up commences at the time of the passing of the resolution authorizing the winding up 11.

Extended liability may be enforced.

Cl. (iv). Notwithstanding these words, a contract contained in the articles extending the member's liability, beyond that under the memorandum, for satisfaction of particular debts may be enforced 12 by a separate suit 13. The qualification in this clause that a member shall not be liable to pay more than the unpaid amount of his share does not make him the less a contributory where the amount of the share money has been paid up, and a petition for winding up under s. 166 made by him is maintainable 14.

Company limited by guarantee.

Cl. (v). A member of a company limited by guarantee and having a share capital can be sued for the amount unpaid on his shares, but he cannot be placed on the list of contributories for a larger amount than what is prescribed by the memorandum 1.

Cl. (vi). This enables the liability of members of an unlimited company to be limited by special contract 2.

Remuneration of directors.

Cl. (vii). Where the directors are employed by the company on the footing of articles which entitle them to remuneration, the remuneration is not due to them in their character of members; but they are ordinary creditors 3.

Damages.

If a member is entitled to prove for damages in respect of the issue to him of shares not fully paid when he contracted to take fully paid shares, such a proof will fall within the words "or otherwise" 4.

Set off.

A shareholder is not entitled to set off against the company what he might receive on a winding up against the moneys due to him 5. So a contributory who is a creditor of the company cannot set oft his debt against his liability for calls even if there is an express agreement to do so 6, whether the call was made by the company before or after liquidation. In dealing with a similar provision in the English Companies Act of 1862 Jessel, M. R., observed: "If there is any implication to be drawn from the section at all, it is that set off is not to be allowed when the company is limited" 7.

The material date.

A company's debts and liabilities are ascertained as they exist at the date of the winding up order, for "the tree must lie as it falls" 8.

Interest.

The liability created by the section is a new liability and no provision is made for interest therein. It may be that when a Court makes an order for payment under the section it can direct future interest on the amount fixed in the order until realization, but it cannot include interest prior to that time 9.

Calls.

Calls made in the winding up being calls for something unpaid on the shares are not debt due to the company, but are contributions due by a member. The contribution under this section applies also to unpaid calls made before the winding up, because although that is a debt due to the company it is not the less an amount unpaid on the shares with respect to which the member is liable 10. The unpaid calls are recoverable at the instance of the liquidator though barred by time and though the company could not recover them 11.

Limitation. The period of limitation applicable to a suit brought by the liquidator to recover the unpaid amount of the calls is six years from the date of default under Art. 120 of the Limitation Act 1.

157. In the winding up of a limited company any director whether past or present, whose liability is, in pursuance of this Act, unlimited, shall, in addition to his liability (if any) to contribute as an ordinary member, be liable to make a further contribution as if he were at the commencement of the winding up a member of an unlimited company :

Liability of directors whose liability is unlimited.

Provided that—

(i) a past director shall not be liable to make such further contribution if he has ceased to hold office for a year or upwards before the commencement of the winding up ;

(ii) a past director shall not be liable to make such further contribution in respect of any debt or liability of the company contracted after he ceased to hold office ;

(iii) subject to the articles a director shall not be liable to make such further contribution unless the Court deems it necessary to require that contribution in order to satisfy the debts and liabilities of the company, and the costs, charges and expenses of the winding up.

158. The term "contributory" means every person liable to contribute to the assets of a company in the event of it being wound up, and, in all proceedings for determining and in all proceedings prior to the final determination of the persons who are to be deemed contributories, includes any person alleged to be a contributory.

Meaning of "contributory."

Who are contributories. A contributory is a person who has agreed to become a member and whose name is upon the register 2. Fully paid up shareholders are contributories without any qualification 3. Every holder of fully paid shares is a contributory 4, as he is entitled to share in the adjustment of the rights of the contributories among themselves, though he will not be placed on the list of contributories except at his own desire 5. He may present a petition for winding up the company 6 and he is not liable to make any contribution to the assets 1. A fully paid shareholder who has received moneys from the liquidator upon a distribution of surplus assets with notice that the liquidator had not provided for payment of a debt due by the company, is a contributory and will be ordered to pay the amount to the credit of the liquidator 2. A person who is merely a debtor to the company is not a contributory 3.

A person in whose favour a power of attorney was executed by the executors of a deceased contributory and who obtained letters of administration in this country under s. 241 of the Indian Succession Act and got himself registered as a member of the company was a contibutory 4.

Alleged contributory.

A winding up order has been made on the petition of persons alleging themselves to be contributories, being past members who had transferred their shares and who under the deed of settlement were, as between themselves and the other proprietors, discharged from liability. In general an application by an alleged contributory will not be entertained unless he will admit himself to be a contributory 5.

Effect of being placed on the list of contributories.

Once a member is on the list of contributories, unless he succeeds in showing that he should not have been placed on the list, he is liable to the extent of the original share which remains unpaid 6. On the death of a contributory his personal representatives automatically become liable instead of the deceased contributory. No application for the purpose is necessary and consequently no question of limitation arises 7.

Nature of liability of contributory.

159. (1) The liability of a contributory shall create a debt payable at the time specified in the calls made on him by the liquidator.

(2) No claim founded on the liability of a contributory shall be cognizable by any Court of Small Causes sitting outside the Presidency-towns.

Amendment.

By the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936, the new sub-s. (1) has been substituted for the original sub-s. (1). As to the effect of the amendment see Introduction. The original sub-s. (1) was as follows :

(1) The liability of a contributory shall create a debt accruing due from him at the time when his liability commenced, but payable at the times when calls are made for enforcing the liability.

When liability begins.

The liability of a contributory began at the date when the contract was entered into whereby he became a member 8. It is a debt by specialty in which the heirs are bound. The same legal obligation binds members and contributories 9. But where the carrying on of a business is ultra vires of the company, the ultra vires transactions create no debt, either legal or equitable, and the contributories are not liable to pay such debts[1].

Future calls. This section creates a debt[5], but it does not accrue due till the call is made. In any question, therefore, of set off between the company and a member who is also a creditor of the company, no account will be taken of the liability of the member in respect of future calls, not due at the date at which the right of set off arises[2].

Call when payable. When a call is made, it is owing from the day on which it is made, although it be "payable" on a subsequent day[3]. Provisions in the articles as to interest on calls do not necessarily apply to calls made in the winding up[4].

Enforcement of call. When the contributory will not pay the call, the liquidator may proceed either by an application for a "balance order", i. e., an order upon the contributory to pay, or by an action in the name of the company. An action is more appropriate when questions of difficulty are involved ; but the liquidator will be required to give security for the defendant's costs under section 280[5].

In voluntary liquidation. Another method by which calls in a voluntary liquidation may be enforced is by the sale and forfeiture of the shares which must be carried through by the directors under the powers conferred by the articles, with the sanction of the liquidator or of the company in general meeting. If there are no directors, the liquidator may convene a general meeting, which can then elect a sufficient number of directors for the purpose[6]. After winding up a suit for allotment money or call money does not lie in a Court of Small Causes situate outside the Presidency towns[7].

This section is by virtue of s. 271 applicable to unregistered companies.

Sub-s. (2) does not occur in the English Act.

Contributories in case of death of member. 160. (1) If a contributory dies either before or after he has been placed on the list of contributories, his legal representatives and his heirs shall be liable in a due course of administration to contribute to the assets of the company in discharge of his liability and shall be contributories accordingly.

(2) If the legal representatives or heirs make default in paying any money ordered to be paid by them, proceedings may be taken for administering the property of the deceased contributory, whether moveable or immoveable, or both, and of compelling payment thereout of the money due.

(3) For the purposes of this section the surviving coparceners of a contributory who is a member of a Hindu joint family governed by the Mitakshara School of Hindu Law shall be deemed to be his legal representatives and heirs.

By the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936, the new sub-s. (3) has been added.

Amendment. For the effect of the amendment see Introduction.

Letters of administration to the estate of a deceased contributory.

The official liquidator need not take out letters of administration to the estate of a deceased shareholder before settling the list of contributories 1. There is nothing in the section requiring the official liquidator to place on the list all persons who may, as representatives, be liable to contribute, nor can the liability of a person who has been placed on the list as representative be affected by the official liquidator doing so 1. Under Mitakshara law a son is liable as a representative of his father as a contributory in due course of administration only to the extent of the separate property of his father in which no other person had any interest in the life time of the father when the joint family is constituted by members other than father and sons 2. The son's share in the joint family property is not liable under the doctrine of pious obligation as the doctrine applies in cases where the family consists of only father and sons 2. But under the new sub-s. (3) the surviving co-parceners of a contributory will be deemed to be his legal representatives and heirs.

The estate remains liable.

Upon the death of a member his estate remains liable to pay any calls until some person is put upon the register as holder of the shares 3 ; but his personal representatives do not incur any personal liability, even if the company places their names upon the register, unless they take the shares into their own names 4. Where the name of a deceased shareholder is put on the list of contributories, the company not being aware of the death, the proceeding is not a nullity as would otherwise be under the ordinary law, for until the company is informed of the death of the contributory the deceased continues to be liable as a member and the company is not bound to take notice of the death otherwise 5.

Where a person who had applied for certain shares and had been placed on the list of contributories and died during the winding up, he did not cease to be a contributory and forfeit the deposit he had made upon the application. The fact that his legal representatives had not been substituted within 90 days did not affect their liability, as the matter is governed not by the Limitation Act but by the present section under which the liability automatically falls on the representatives 6.

Personal liability of executors.

If the executors pay a legacy without making provision for the contingent liability on the shares, they will be personally liable 7 ; but they may be entitled to call upon the residuary legatees to refund for the purpose of indemnifying them the capital sum paid to them, but not the intermediate income 8. An order against a deceased contributory is a nullity ; those persons who represent his estate should be brought on the record before an effective order can be made 9.

Executor's duty.

An executor whose testator held shares in a joint stock company has generally one of two courses open to him. He may have the shares transferred to his own name and become to all intents and purposes a partner in the company. He may, on the other hand, not wish to have the shares transferred to his own name, and he ought in that case to have a reasonable time allowed him to sell the shares, and to produce a purchaser who will take a transfer of them 1.

Case of trustees differs from that of executors.

The case of trustees who take a transfer of shares in their names differs in principle from that of executors who merely intimate their title as executors to the company inorder to claim and exercise the rights which belong to them as the legal representatives of their testator. Trustees have not, in any proper sense of the word, a representative character, but executors have. Having representative rights, it is impossible that they should not be entitled to produce the legal evidence of them to the company for the purpose of having their title in some way recorded and recognized without making them personally liable 2.

Balance order.

A balance order against the personal representatives is not a judgment so as to constitute the liquidator a judgment-creditor and to exclude the executor's right of retainer 3.

Executors can challenge the validity of a purported resolution for winding up and appointment of a liquidator 4.

Joint holders.

Persons registered as joint holders of shares are joint tenants, and upon the death of one of them his liability ceases 5.

Contributories in case of insolvency of member.

161. If a contributory is adjudged insolvent either before or after he has been placed on the list of contributories, then—

(1) his assignees shall represent him for all the purposes of the winding up, and shall be contributories accordingly, and may be called on to admit to proof against the estate of the insolvent, or otherwise to allow to be paid out of his assets in due course of law, any money due from the insolvent in respect of his liability to contribute to the assets of the company ; and

(2) there may be proved against the estate of the insolvent the estimated value of his liability to future calls as well as calls already made.

Bankrupt contributory.

A debt due from a company to a contributory cannot be set off against call payable in the liquidation 6 ; otherwise members will be entitled to satisfaction of their debts pari passu with the rest of the creditors 7. But where the contributory is bankrupt the two liabilities can be set off 8, unless the contributory is a company in liquidation 9.

Circumstances in which company may be wound up by Court.

162. A company may be wound up by the Court—

(i) if the company has by special resolution resolved that the company be wound up by the Court :

(ii) if default is made in filing the statutory report or in holding the statutory meeting :

(iii) if the company does not commence its business within a year from its incorporation, or suspends its business for a whole year :

(iv) if the number of members is reduced, in the case of a private company, below two or, in the case of any other company, below seven :

(v) if the company is unable to pay its debts ;

(vi) if the Court is of opinion that it is just and equitable that the company should be wound up.

Order without jurisdiction.

If the Court makes an order to wind up a company without having jurisdiction, the order cannot be treated as a nullity, and unless and until it is discharged on appeal it is binding on the creditors and contributories 1, but not on strangers 2.

Jurisdiction of Indian Court.

A limited company formed in England under the English statute and having its registered office in England, but which has its principal place of business in Calcutta, and is managed exclusively by directors in Calcutta, and the business of which is carried exclusively in India, can be wound up by the Calcutta High Court 3.

Court's power discretionary.

There is nothing in the Act or in the Rules which deprives the Court of the discretion which it has in every case so that the Court may, if it thinks fit, refuse to admit a petition, or as an alternative course, give the company notice that a petition for winding up has been presented so that it may take steps to restrain the petitioner from proceeding with the petition 4.

The Court is not bound to make a winding up order 5. If the application is made by a shareholder, the Court will exercise a judicial discretion 6. The case of unlimited companies is open to other considerations 7. A petition presented in bad faith will be dismissed 8.

Under s. 174 the Court may, as to all matters relating to a winding up, have regard to the wishes of the creditors or contributories. It has to see whether the other shareholders and creditors agree in thinking that winding up is the best course. If they oppose, the Court will not make an order unless injustice is being done to the petitioner which can only be avoided by making an order for winding up 1.

When share-holders & creditors oppose.

It is particularly the duty of the Courts in India to see that directors and other officers of companies carry out their duties honestly and to punish them if they do not. Compulsory liquidation affords the best opportunity of performing this duty when there is a prima facie case of dishonesty against the officers of a company 2. Where the number of shareholders is small and there are no difficulties in the way of a voluntary winding up, the Court may refuse an order on a shareholder's petition 3. Although there may be a suspension of the business of the company for the space of a whole year, the Court will not make an order to wind up the company, unless it is satisfied that there has been an intention on the part of the company to abandon its business or inability to carry it on; and upon the question of such intention the Court will have regard to the opinion and wishes of the majority of the shareholders whose names are on the register 4. But in a proper case, as where there was no bona fide intention on the part of the directors to carry on the business properly 5, and where there were matters to be investigated and there was overwhelming influence of one director 6, an order would be made though the number of shareholders were small 7. The Act affords in liquidation proceedings a much easier and less expensive way of collecting debts : a liquidator under orders of the Court is much more likely to collect the balances of the debts due to the company than the directors 2.

Cases where the Court will order winding up and where not.

An order for winding up may be made, although nothing has been paid on the shares and there are no debts 8.

Although the Court has power to make an order for compulsory winding up at the instance of a shareholder, there must be strong ground for exercising the power. A compulsory winding up is a very serious thing for the company and those connected with it, and the company is entitled to have fair notice of the allegations which are going to be made against it. Therefore in dealing with an application by a shareholder it is essential that the petitioner should be confined to the allegations he has made 9. The Court ought not to make a compulsory winding up order on the petition of a shareholder, unless the company has wholly failed to carry out its objects 9. In a case where the Court is satisfied that there is a good ground for making a compulsory order, it may direct a meeting to ascertain the wishes of the contributories as to how the same is to be wound up 9.

It is not however right for the Court, even if it has power, to make a compulsory order on the ground that there was a majority of shareholders who voted at a meeting directed to be held by the Court in favour of winding up by the Court or under its supervision, in the absence of any finding by the Judge of any other ground or of any valid resolution for voluntary winding up (last note). Where the petition by a shareholder contains allegations which all relate to the internal management of the company's affairs, it is a matter for the shareholders themselves to deal with, and not one that would call for interference by the Court [1].

Authority of general meeting is necessary.

Cl. (i). Without the authority of a general meeting the directors are not entitled to present a winding up petition in the name of the company ; but where the directors have presented such a petition, it is open to a general meeting of shareholders to ratify their action [2]. Under this clause it is necessary that a special resolution should be passed.

Cl. (ii). For default in filing the statutory report an order under this clause was passed in Kent Outcrop Coal Co. [3]. See the provisions of s. 77 (9), s. 166, proviso (b) and s. 170 (2).

Power of Court is discretionary.

Cl. (iii). If a company does not commence business within a year of its incorporation, or suspends business for a year, the Court may order the company to be wound up [4]. But the power of the Court is discretionary [5], and an order will not be made against the wishes of a majority of the contributories if the Court is satisfied that business will be commenced or resumed [6], or if the past delay is sufficiently accounted for [7]. Commencement within a year of business refers to actually setting to work and not merely allotting shares [4].

If the Court is satisfied that no business has been or will be commenced, an order will be passed on a shareholder's petition, notwithstanding that the company has never received any money and has no debts. If a majority of shareholders unreasonably refuse to pass resolutions for voluntary winding up of a company which never has done nor ever will do any business, a shareholder is entitled to an order [8].

To abandon one or more of the purposes and continue the others is not ceasing to carry on business, provided the principal object of the company is not abandoned [9].

A shareholder of a company which has become amalgamated with another company is not entitled to an order to wind up the first company on the ground that it has ceased to carry on business as a separate company [10].

The matter of granting or refusing an application for winding up rests entirely in the discretion of the Court. In the case of a company which has suspended business for a whole year, the power will be exercised when there is a fair indication that there is no intention to carry on the business ; if on the other hand suspension is satisfactorily accounted for and appears to be due to temporary causes, the order will be refused 1.

Meaning of "members."

Cl. (iv). The word "members" in this clause means actual members and does not include past members, or representatives of deceased members, or trustees of bankrupt members 2.

Company with a few shareholders.

The inclination of the Court is against applying the expensive machinery of a winding up order to a company with a very few shareholders, unless there be substantial reason for it 3. In such cases a winding up order with its consequent costs is justified by suspicion of fraud which a winding up may succeed in detecting 4.

Creditor is entitled to the order ex debito justitiae.

Cl. (v). A creditor who cannot obtain payment of his debt is entitled, as between himself and the company, ex debito justitiæ, to an order if he brings his case within the Act 5. He is not bound to give time 6. Although a creditor of a company which is unable to pay its debts 7 is, as between himself and the company, entitled ex debito justitiæ to a winding up order 8, he is not so entitled as between himself and other creditors 9. The Court is not bound by the wishes of the majority of creditors, and it will disregard them where, for example, a single person has a controlling interest 10 or the majority is composed of persons whose conduct requires investigation 11.

Nature of debt.

For a winding up order the debt must be presently payable and the title of the petitioner complete. The law requires that a demand must be made for a debt that is due, and it is not permissible to support a petition by alleging that something else is due 12.

Insolvent company—when.

In a petition under this section the Court has to see whether the company is commercially insolvent, i.e., whether it is unable to meet its current demands, although the assets when realized may exceed its liabilities. If the company is commercially insolvent it may be wound up 13. As observed by Lord Wrenbury, "in such a case, it is useless to say that if the assets of the company are realized there will be ample to pay 20 shillings in the pound ; this is not the test. A company may be at the same time insolvent and wealthy. It may have wealth locked up in investment not presently realizable ; but although this be so, yet if it have not assets available to meet its current liabilities, it is commercially insolvent and may be wound up" 14. The creditors of an insolvent company is entitled to a winding up order even though there may, by reason of prior claims, be no assets coming to them, on the principle that the concern is virtually theirs and they ought to have the control of management 1.

What has to be considered by Court.

Where the Court is called upon to wind up a company under this clause on the ground that it is unable to pay its debts, what has to be considered is not whether the company, if it converted all its assets into cash, would be able to discharge its debts, but whether in commercial sense the company is solvent. In such a case the subscribed capital of the company, which is due and which has not been called up, can be taken into account as money available for discharge of the debts 2.

Where no discretion for Court.

"It is not a discretionary matter with the Court, when a debt is established and not satisfied, to say whether the company shall be wound up or not, that is to say, if there be a valid debt established, valid both in law and in equity. One does not like to say positively that no case could occur in which it would be right to refuse it, but ordinarily speaking, it is the duty of the Court to direct a winding up" 3. When a petitioning creditor alleged that the company was unable to pay its debts, and the allegation is denied on behalf of the company in the objections lodged against the winding up petition, and upon the materials before the Court there was no evidence to justify the finding that the company was unable to pay its debts, the matter was not allowed to proceed by Page C. J. and Maung Ba J. by allowing the petitioning creditor to lead oral evidence to prove the company's inability to pay its debts 4.

Creditor's right.

The right of a creditor however is not his individual right, but his representative right as one of a class 5. If a majority of the class take a different view, the Court, in the absence of special circumstances, making an order "just and equitable" 6, gives effect to such right as the majority desire to exercise 7. The Court under ss. 174 and 223 then has regard to the wishes of the majority, and may refuse to make any order 8 or, if the company be in voluntary liquidation, may make a supervision order instead of a compulsory order 9 or, may direct the petition to stand over, if there is a better prospect of payment on that course being taken 10.

Where it is found that it would be more to the advantage of the creditors and the shareholders if an opportunity is given to the company to complete a proposed sale of its properties, the petition for winding up will be ordered to be adjourned 11.

The creditor of a solvent company whose debt is bona fide disputed will be restrained from presenting a petition for the winding up of the company ; nor can a creditor be allowed to present such a petition as a counter blast to an action brought against him by the company to enforce a legal claim 1. Mere service of a notice of demand by a creditor under s. 163 on a solvent company does not entitle the creditor to a winding up order if the company bona fide disputes the existence of the debt. To make an order for winding up in such a case would deprive the company of its rights to have the question decided in the normal way by the Civil Court and this would be opposed to public policy. An application for winding up in such a case must be regarded as a vehicle of oppression and an abuse of the process of the Court and must be dismissed. An order for the compulsory winding up of a company is a very extreme step to take and such order ought not to be lightly passed 2.

Where debt is bona fide disputed.

When a debt is bona fide disputed by the company no order for winding up will be made and the petition will be dismissed 3. Where a petition against a company is presented ostensibly for a winding up order but really for another purpose, such as putting pressure on the company 4, the Court has an inherent jurisdiction to prevent such an abuse of process and will do so, without requiring an action to be commenced, by restraining the advertisement of the petition and staying all proceedings upon it 5. But if the debt is not disputed on some substantial ground, the Court may decide it on the petition and make the order 6. Where a company has a bona fide defence, the petition should be dismissed 7 ; but it is otherwise if the petitioner would in the circumstances be left without a remedy 8.

Where the action of the petitioning creditor in making the application for the winding up of a company and in insisting upon further proceedings in liquidation is not bona fide, he should be saddled with the entire cost of the liquidation ; and in the absence of a clear provision in the Companies Act dealing with a case of this kind the matter is governed by s. 35 C. P. Code 9.

In the case of judgment debt.

Where a judgment has been obtained against a company for debt, the judgment-creditor cannot be called upon, on an allegation that it was obtained by fraud, to go into further evidence in support of his claim 10. But upon the respondent undertaking to bring an action to set aside the judgment, the petition may be ordered to stand over 10. If however the judgment be shown to have been obtained by collusion, the petition for winding up may be dismissed although the judgment has not been impeached in an action 1.

An order will not be refused on the ground that the judgment is under appeal, unless a stay of execution be obtained 2. But if the judgment be reversed on appeal before the petition for winding up is heard, the petition will be dismissed, although a further appeal may be pending 3.

Debenture holder's right to petition.

A debenture-holder or a debenture-stock holder to whom a company is indebted in a sum presently payable, can demand payment, and if default be made, can petition for winding up the company 4. The mere fact that he has obtained the appointment of a receiver does not preclude him from applying for a winding up order 5. As against the company he is entitled to a winding up order ex debito justitiæ, but not so as against the wishes of the majority of the creditors 6. The holder of a mortgage debenture who applies for a winding up order is not bound to give up his security 7.

His other rights.

A debenture holder however is not bound to come in and enforce his rights in a winding up. He may exercise such powers of realization as are given him by his securities, e.g., appointment of a receiver or sale, and where it is necessary to bring an action, he can apply to the Court and the Court will give liberty to bring or proceed with the action as a matter of course, the winding up not withstanding 8. Debenture-holders and debenture-stock holders are entitled as against their securities, whether the company is solvent or insolvent, to take principal, interest and costs 9.

Shareholder's petition.

A petition for winding up made by a shareholder however stands on a different footing. It will be more fully scrutinized. Where the petition proceeds on the ground that the company is unable to pay its debts, it must pay the debt or submit to a winding up order. If the petition allege one of the grounds under clauses (i), (ii), (iii), (iv) and (vi) the Court will, under ordinary circumstances, admit the petition. If any other grounds are alleged, the petition does not satisfy the requirements of the law 10.

Contributory's petition.

A contributory, inorder to obtain an order for winding up, must make out a special case, e. g., that the substratum of the company is gone. The substratum is held to be gone where the main object for which the company was formed has become impracticable 11.

Petition by holders of fully paid shares.

The holders of fully paid shares may apply for winding up as a contributory. But the Court will not be satisfied with the bare statement of a director that the company is unable to pay its debts 12.

The words are not to be read ejusdem generis.

Cl. (vi). It was formerly held that the words in this clause should be read as being ejusdem generis with the words in the preceding clauses 1. Now it has been authoritatively laid down by the Judicial Committee that the power of the Court under this clause is not confined to cases in which there are grounds analogous to those mentioned in other parts of the section 2. Thus it is just and equitable to wind up a company when its substratum is gone 3 although the majority of the shareholders desire to continue to carry on the business 3 or where the company is a "bubble" company 4, or where there is a complete deadlock in the management of the company's business 5 unless the deadlock is only temporary 6, or where the company was formed to carry on an illegal business 7, or where the company was conceived and brought forth in fraud 8, or if the particular circumstances of a case require it 9. For other cases see Hals. pp. 397-98. The corresponding clause of Act VI of 1882 viz., s. 128 ran as follows: "(e) whenever for any other reason of a like nature the Court is of opinion &c." The change in the present section is in accordance with the later English decisions.

What the Court will consider.

The position of the Court in determining whether it is just and equitable to wind up the company requires a fair consideration of all the circumstances connected with the formation and the carrying on of the company; and the common misfortune which has befallen some shareholders in the company does not involve the consequence that the ultimate desires and hopes of the ordinary shareholders should be disregarded, simply because there is a strong interest in favour of liquidation naturally felt by the preference shareholders 10. No general rule can be laid down as to the nature and circumstances which have to be borne in mind in considering whether the case comes within the phrase "just and equitable" for purposes of winding up. The decisive question must be the question whether at the date of the presentation of the winding up petition there is any reasonable hope that the object of trading at a profit, with a view to which the company has been formed, can be attained. In considering that question the guarantee of the preference shares should be left out of sight, except in so far as it may have biased the evidence on either side 10. It is not the function of the Court to determine the question of the prospects of the company in future on its own views as to the probable success or failure, but to form the best opinion it can upon the evidence of persons given with a practical knowledge of the trade in question and the local conditions where those affect the matter. If at the relevant time there is a reasonable hope of trading over a period of difficulty and emerging out into a region in which the company might reasonably expect to carry on at a profit, there is no sufficient reason why the Court should wind up the company under this clause. Where there is no evidence of persons with practical knowledge of the business in question, the fact that a public officer, whose duty it is to intervene in cases where a company's affairs are not conducted in a sound manner, has not taken action to wind up the company is, of course, not a deciding factor in determining whether a petition for winding up by a contributory should be granted or not, but it is a fact which is deserving of consideration under this just and equitable clause 1.

There is a great difference between a question of positive fact, such as the pecuniary position of a trading company at a particular date, and a question of the prospects of such a company in the future, a matter which must depend on all sorts of views as to the state of world trade, the confidence of the public, the price at which articles can be sold, a matter which depends very largely upon the number of such sales and an infinity of other considerations, very difficult either to summarise or to define (last note, last page).

Instances.

Where there were only three directors and shareholders of a private company and one of them left the country and the remaining two quarrelled among themselves, and there was a deadlock, it was just and equitable that the company should be wound up 2. Where a private limited company is in substance a partnership, circumstances which would justify dissolution of a partnership will induce the Court to exercise its jurisdiction under this clause 3.

Where the capital of a private company is so owned as to make the company in substance a partnership, and one director has purported by means of irregularities to acquire complete control of the company and to exclude the other director or directors from the management, it may be "just and equitable" that the company should be wound up 4.

Where a company was formed to carry out a contract which it had no reasonable probability of carrying out and the moneys of the company had been misapplied by the directors, and the company was so constituted that it was deprived of its usual remedies, it was held that the substratum of the company was gone, and that it was just and equitable that the company should be wound up 5.

Where the managing director of a company had in a chancery action been adjudged to be personally largely indebted to the company and had entered into large contracts with the company, but the company not only neglected to enforce payment but continued him as managing director, passed a vote of confidence in him immediately after the aforesaid judgment and passed another resolution approving of the directors opposing the winding up petition, it was held that the company had so identified and associated itself with the managing director in his misconduct that it was just and equitable that it should be wound up 6.

Where one director can exercise a dominating influence on the management of the company and the managing director can outvote the minority and retain the profits between the members of his family and there are several complaints of irregularity and the rate of dividend is steadily diminishing, there are sufficient grounds for entertaining a winding up petition and for calling upon the directors to enter upon their defence 1.

It is just and equitable to wind up a company when there is a justifiable lack of confidence in the conduct and management of the company's affairs owing to the management being held in one family which is in a position to dominate the other shareholders and monopolize the company's affairs for their own individual benefit 2. But the fact that one of the shareholders has a preponderating voice in the company by reason of his owing or controlling a large number of shares is of itself no reason for winding up the company under this section 3 ; nor is the fact that dividends have not been paid regularly is a ground for such a winding up 3. It is well settled that an ultra vires transaction on the part of the directors is of itself no ground for a winding up order, a shareholder having his complete remedy in other directions 3. So where there was no question of deadlock, nor was there any question of shareholders using their voting power for their own commercial interests outside the company in disregard of the interests of a minority, nor again was there any question involved of any improper management of the company by the directors who were in control, and the problem involved was of the nature of a business problem : held that if there was at the relevant time a reasonable hope of tiding over the period of deep depression and of emerging into a region in which the company might reasonably expect to carry on at a profit, there would seem to be no sufficient reason why the Court should wind up the company under the "just and equitable" clause 4.

Where a person who had been adjudicated insolvent transferred large estates to a private limited company in which he had 90 per cent. shares, it was held to be just and equitable that the company should be wound up 5.

Onus.

Where a petition is presented for winding up of a company on the ground that it is just and equitable to do so, the onus is on the petitioner 4.

Court should not act under this clause unless there is a strong ground.

The Court has ample jurisdiction to order the winding up of a company where it thinks that it is just and equitable to do so, although the assets would be entirely absorbed in paying off debentures 6. But the power given in cl. (vi) to the Court should not be exercised unless there is a very strong ground for acting upon it, because companies are governed by a majority of their own members, and where there is a domestic tribunal which has powers to decide upon a question, it should, if possible, be left to the domestic tribunal 7. Thus in the case of a company which is not shown to have been conceived and brought forth in fraud or to be one whose substratum is gone, the mere fact that the applicants apprehend that the assets of the company will be frittered away and that loss would result from the company continuing to work, is no ground for winding it up under cl. (vi) 7. Inspite of heavy losses if under a new management a company showed reason to believe that it would shortly be in a sounder position, the Court will not order a winding up 8. So the Court will not order a company to be wound up under this clause by reason of any liabilities not immediately payable, unless it is reasonably certain that the existing and probable assets will be insufficient to meet the existing liabilities, and the Court will not in any case take into account the possible liabilities or profits which may accrue in respect of future business[1]. Where the directors (two elder sons of the deceased member and director) of a private company refused to register the executors (the younger sons of the deceased) in their capacities of beneficiaries under the will of the deceased as member of the company and subsequently refused to supply the latter with copies of the balance-sheet and accounts, it was held that though the principles applicable to the case were those which would be applied in an action for dissolution of partnership, there were no grounds shown in the petition on which it would be "just and equitable" to make a winding up order[2].

Where substratum is gone.

The fact that the firm of the managing agents of a company have been dissolved, but steps have been taken to appoint new managing agents, is no indication of a complete deadlock which can only be removed by winding up the company[2]. In the absence of proof that the objects of a company, as set out in the memorandum, cannot he fulfilled in other ways or by the employment of other agencies, the principle of "substratum gone" cannot be applied[3]. "The substratum is gone when the main purpose has become impossible"[4].

The distinction between failure of substratum of a company and an ultra vires act was pointed out by Lord Parker of Waddington in the following words : "The question whether or not a company can be wound up for failure of substratum is a question of equity between a company and its shareholders. The question whether or not a transaction is ultra vires is a question of law between the company and a third party"[5]. Where a private company has been formed to pay off the family debts, the shareholders mainly being the members of that family, to bring the company within the "just and equitable" clause it must be shown that the substratum of the company, that is, the family estate, has gone or that a deadlock has arisen in the sense that it is now impossible for the company to carry out the objects for which it was formed[6].

If it appears to the Court on a general perusal of the balance-sheet that the assets of the company are insufficient to satisfy its liabilities, that will enable the Court to order its winding up[7]. Where a bill is dishonoured, this may be a sufficient proof of insolvency[7], although the petitioner had not served a demand requiring payment[8].

Where object is fraudulent.

Where the whole object of a company is fraudulent it may be wound up[9]; but fraud must be specifically alleged and proved[10] and it is not sufficient that it should be stated in the statutory affidavit alone[11]. But in such a case if the question of fraud is tried without objection and the Court directs the winding up on the ground inter alia of fraud, the objection cannot be allowed to prevail in appeal[12]. In the last cited case the appellant company, which was not an ordinary commercial concern, was ordered to be wound up by the Privy Council under the "just and equitable clause", as there was ample material upon which the Judges of the High Court might in their discretion reach the conclusion that this company should not be permitted to continue its existence. Fraud towards outside public is however no ground for compulsory winding up 1. The mere fact that there was fraud in the promotion or fraudulent misrepresentation in the prospectus is not of itself sufficient for a winding up order 2.

Other circumstances.

A company has been wound up under this clause for the purpose of defeating a reconstruction scheme prejudicial to the shareholders 3, or in the case of a deadlock 4. Where the report of the auditors shows that there had been defalcation of certain funds of the company and that attempts were made to cover up the defalcation by various devices, and the contributories level charges of dishonesty and mismanagement against each other, the case is one in which the conduct of some officers of the company would require investigation which can only be obtained in winding up by the Court. In such circumstances considerations of justice and equity are more in favour of a compulsory winding up than voluntary liquidation 5.

No doubt the mere misconduct of directors or of managing agents or the fact that the business of the company has not resulted in profits is not per se a ground for winding up; but where the cumulative effect of these facts does demonstrate that the company is insolvent, that its affairs have been mismanaged from the very outset, that debts have been recklessly incurred and never paid, that balance-sheets have not been prepared and published and informations withheld, the company ought to be compulsorily wound up 6.

Ultra vires act.

If a company proceed to do something which is ultra vires, a shareholder has a right in an action on behalf of himself and all other shareholders to restrain it, but has no right to come for a winding up order under this clause 7.

Foreign company.

Where an order for winding up has been passed by the Court of principal domicile, it does not mean that a similar order should automatically follow in other Courts having ancillary jurisdiction where similar proceedings for winding up might be pending. Such Courts may on practical considerations find it just and equitable to pass an order for winding up but are not obliged to do so 8.

Persons who can make the petition.

It has been held that the following can make a petition for winding up, viz., the assignee of a debt 9, the depositary by way of mortgage of debentures to bearer the interest of which is in arrear 10, the executor of a deceased life policy holder the sum of the policy being payable out of the assets of the company 1, and a secured creditor 2 even after obtaining the appointment of a receiver in an action 3.

Contributories' petition.

In the case where a contributory petitions for a winding up, two matters must from first to last be kept in view. The first is the unwillingness of the Court to interfere with the shareholders in the management of their own affairs including the question whether the business shall be continued or not, and the second is that there is in fact jurisdiction in an extreme case to wind up a company at the instance of a contributory, notwithstanding that he is not supported by a majority of the shareholders 4.

Part fulfilment of two or more conditions.

The law requires the fulfilment of one or more of several conditions before an order could be made under this section. The part fulfilment of two or more such conditions should not be taken as having cumulative effect justifying the order. If the Court comes to the conclusion that the main original object for which the company was formed has substantially failed, or that the substratum of the company is gone, it will consider that it would be just and equitable to wind up the company 5. The Court will not be justified in making a winding up order merely on the ground that the company has made losses and is likely to make further losses 6, or that the directors have misapplied the funds of the company 7, or have committed ultra vires acts 8.

Amendment.

By the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936, the original s. 163 has been re-numbered as sub-s. (1), in cl. (i) thereof for the words "by leaving the same" after the words "on the company" the words in italics have been substituted and the new sub-s. (2) has been added. For the effect of the amendments see Introduction.

This section is explanatory to cl. (v) of the last section.

Meaning of "creditor."

The term "creditor" is not limited to one to whom a debt is due at the date of the petition and who can demand immediate payment 1. It includes any contingent and prospective creditor 2. It was held under the former Acts that a garnishee order against a company did not make the garnishor a creditor 3. A person who had a claim against a company for unliquidated damages was not a creditor within this section 4, nor a person who had guaranteed the payment of a due from the company, but had not paid such debt 5. The law was changed by s. 137 of the Act of 1908 corresponding to s. 166 of the present Act which says that "creditor" includes any contingent or prospective creditor.

Meaning of "assignment."

The word "assignment" includes an equitable assignment 6, including an assignment of part of a debt 7. Such an assignee can present a petition for winding up, but if he does so, he must establish the company's insolvency otherwise than by a demand for payment under this section 7. The assignee of part of a debt cannot serve an effective demand under cl. (i), in the absence of the person entitled to the remainder of the debt 7. But such an assignment does operate in equity to transfer the part assigned and it constitutes the assignee a creditor in equity of the original debtor and as such he can, when the debtor is a company, present a winding up petition under s. 166 8.

Statutory demand—Court's duty.

Omission by a company bona fide disputing the debt is not neglecting to comply with the statutory demand 9. In such a case if it is not shown that the company will be unable to pay the debt when it has been established by judgment, the Court may dismiss the petition 10, or may order it to stand over until the debt has been so established 11 ; but if the petitioner has already obtained judgment, hearing of the petition will not be stayed, unless the company undertakes to bring an action to set aside the judgment. In the case of London & Paris Banking Corporation [1] Sir G. Jessel M. R. said: "If the debt is bona fide contested and there is no evidence other than non-compliance with the statutory notice to shew that the company is insolvent and the company denies its insolvency, I ought to dismiss the petition."

What the creditor must prove.

If the creditor relies upon neglect of a statutory notice, he must prove it and prove that it took place before the petition was presented, but may show insolvency in any other way [2]. Thus dishonour of the company's acceptance [3] or the fact that he being a judgment-creditor the company has informed him that he had better not levy, for it has no asset, is enough [4].

Consequences of neglect to pay.

Default in complying with the demand of a creditor gives not only him but other creditors and contributories the right to petition for winding up [5]. Where the statutory demand has not been complied with, the company is unable to pay its debts and there is no reasonable chance of the company resuming its work in the near future, petitioning creditors are prima facie entitled to a winding up order [6].

Principle.

The principle upon which a company is to be wound up on the petition of a creditor is simply its inability to pay after proper demand made and the lapse of three weeks. Any such neglect must be judged by reference to the facts of each particular case and when the defence is that the debt is disputed, all that the Court will first see is whether the dispute is on the face of it genuine or merely a cloak of the company's real inability to pay its just debts. [7].

Where the object of the petition is to put pressure on the company to accept terms of settlement in a litigation pending between the company and the creditor, the proper order is to stay the winding up proceeding until the determination of the suit [7]; for it is a well established principle that the Court has inherent jurisdiction to stay proceedings when they amount to an abuse of its process [8].

Rs. 500 limit.

It seems that a creditor for less than Rs. 500 can present the petition under s. 166 where no limit is fixed [9]. But generally the Courts treat the Rs. 500 limit as a guide to the stake which the pititioner ought to have [10]. But where the petition is supported by creditors of more than Rs. 500, the usual order may be made [11].

Notice.

The statutory notice under this section is a highly formal and important document and the provision of the Act as to its service upon the company must be strictly complied with 1. Where the registered office of a company still exists at the usual place, but a part of the company's business has been shifted to some other place without any notification of such change to the registrar of companies, the statutory notice must be served at the registered address 1.

Agent's notice of demand.

An advocate's notice 2 of demand or that of any other agent 3 did not before the amendment satisfy the requirements of this section 3. Under the new sub-s. (2) an agent's or a legal adviser's notice is sufficient.

Cl (i) of sub-s. (1) means that the company to be served must, at the time of the service, be in default and that being in default is to be served with a demand under rather special precautions so that if it makes further default for a period of three weeks the question of its inability to pay the debt is set at rest 4. A demand by the solicitors of the creditor not being "under his hand" was not before the amendment sufficient for the purposes of this section 4. The general common law principle qui facit per alium facit per se in accordance with the decision in in re Whitley Partners 5 did not apply 4. In the last cited case 4 Sir George Rankin, C. J., observed: "The effect of the statutory notice is that unless the debt is paid within three weeks or some arrangement is made with the creditors, the company is in the position of being conclusively estopped from denying that it is unable to pay its debts. It is a highly formal and important document although it is perfectly true that the demand may be made in any terms. It has to be served on the company by leaving the same at its registered office and it has to be a 'demand under the hand' of the creditors. I think that those words must be taken to have a special intention. The intention must be that there can be no doubt at all about such a notice as this being recognized as a notice directly authorized by the creditors, and as one to which will attach or may attach the very serious consequences which the Companies Act imposes."

Judgment debt.

Cl. (i) is general in its terms and has application to all sorts of debts, be it a simple money debt, a mortgage debt or a judgment debt. In the case of a judgment debt, if execution for the recovery of that debt has been taken and has remained unsatisfied, the Court is, in accordance with cl. (ii) bound to presume that the company is unable to pay its debts. Nevertheless the decree-holder is not debarred from making a demand for the payment of the judgment debt by a notice under cl. (i) without having recourse to execution proceedings. In such a case if the demand remains unsatisfied for three weeks, the presumption enjoined by this section necessarily follows 6.

The petition must not be presented until after the expiration of 21 days from the service of the demand [1]. If the company has no registered office, service of the demand may be made at its unregistered office [2]. As to the registered office see notes to ss. 3 and 72.

Where appeal is pending.

Where a judgment has been passed against a company, the Court will not stay proceedings on a winding up petition or refuse order because an appeal is pending, but will usually allow the petition to be suspended if security is given by the company for the amount of the debt and costs [3].

Sub-s. 2. A limited liability company must necessarily act through its officers and authorized agents. The manager of a company must, unless the contrary is proved, be deemed to have the authority to demand and receive payments of the debts due to the company [4].

See notes to s. 162, cl. (v) and s. 166.

Winding up may be referred to District Court.

164. Where the High Court makes an order for winding up a company under this Act, it may, if it thinks fit, direct all subsequent proceedings to be had in a District Court; and thereupon such District Court shall, for the purpose of winding up the company, be deemed to be "the Court" within the meaning of this Act, and shall have, for the purposes of such winding up, all the jurisdiction and powers of the High Court.

Under this section the District Judge has the jurisdiction and powers of the High Court and therefore he has power to order attachment before judgment of property beyond his ordinary jurisdiction [5].

This section does not occur in the English Act.

Transfer of winding up from one District Court to another.

165. If during the progress of a winding up in a District Court it is made to appear to the High Court that the same could be more conveniently prosecuted in any other District Court having jurisdiction to wind up companies, the High Court may transfer the same to such other Court, and thereupon the winding up shall proceed in such other District Court.

Provisions as to applications for winding up.

166. An application to the Court for the winding up of a company shall be by petition presented, subject to the provisions of this section, either by the company, or by any creditor or creditors (including any contingent or prospective creditor or creditors), contributory or contributories, or by all or any of those parties, together or separately, or by the registrar :

Provided that—

(a) a contributory shall not be entitled to present a petition for winding up a company unless—

(c) the Court shall not give a hearing to a petition for winding up a company by a contingent or prospective creditor until such security for costs has been given as the Court thinks reasonable and until a prima facie case for winding up has been established to the satisfaction of the Court.

Amendment. By the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936, in the first paragraph the words in italics and in the proviso the new cl. (aa) have been inserted. For effect of the amendments see Introduction. In the sub-cl. (i) of the said new cl. (aa) the words within square brackets have been substituted for the words "Local Government" by the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937 which came into force on 1st April, 1937. But with effect from 1st April, 1938 the functions of the Central Government in this respect have been entrusted to Provincial Governments. Vide Gazette of India dated 26th March, 1938, Part I, p. 440.

Who can apply. The following persons can make the application : a creditor whether secured or unsecured 1, an assignee of a debt 2 even if the assignment is only equitable 3, the executor of a creditor 4, holder of a debenture which is presently payable 5 and the holder of a bond which entitles him in consideration of certain periodical payments to the principal sum of money from the company at a future date, such a bond-holder being a "contingent or prospective creditor" 6. A judgment-creditor may petition, although an appeal is pending against the judgment obtained by him 7.

Who can not. The following persons cannot make an application under this section : a person claiming unliquidated damages 8, a judgment-creditor who has attached a debt due from the company to the judgment-debtor 9, a creditor who has so charged or dealt with his debt as to pass the real interest therein to another person 10, a creditor whose debt is attached 11 and the holder of debentures secured by a trust deed 12.

"Creditor." For what the word "creditor" in this section includes see notes to s. 163 ante. It includes a contingent or prospective creditor. The right given to policy-holders of a life assurance company to present a petition for winding up the company is given to them because they are prospective or contingent creditors 13. As to the effect of s. 22 of the Life Assurance Act of 1912 replaced by s. 53 of Act IV of 1938 see notes to s. 287 post. A company may be wound up compulsorily by the Court on a petition presented by a local authority which is a creditor within this section 14.

Secured creditors. If a secured creditor presents a winding up petition, he does not thereby elect to give up his security or lose his right to it 15. A creditor who cannot get paid without a winding up is entitled ex debito justitiæ to a winding up order 16.

The word "contributory" has been defined in s. 158. The holder of fully paid up shares is a contributory 17 and can make the application 18, even if there is a voluntary winding up 1. But the holder of a share-warrant to bearer cannot make the petition 2. Persons who do not cease to be members for one year or upwards before the commencement of the winding up proceedings are contributories within the meaning this section and are entitled to present a petition for winding up, if their shares are held by them and registered in their names for more than six months preceding the commencement of the winding up 3.

Application by contributory.

Where the application is made by a contributory who is in arrear in the payment of his call, the Court will not as a rule hear the application until the arrears have been paid either to the company or to the Court 4. As to the application by the legal representative of a contributory see notes to s. 158.

Where a contributory makes the application on the ground that the company is insolvent, he must allege and prove that there will be a substantial surplus for the shareholders : otherwise he has no interest which the Court should take into account 5. The Court may also make a compulsory order on the petition of a fully paid shareholder, if satisfied that the voluntary winding up is likely to prejudice the shareholder 6. But the shareholder must show that he will derive some real benefit from a compulsory order 7.

Shareholder's petition.

Where the petition is presented by a shareholder and the allegations made therein all related to the internal management of the company's affairs, it is a matter for the shareholders to deal with and not a matter that will call for interference by the Court 8. The fact that a voluntary winding up is in progress is prima facie a bar to the winding up on a shareholder's petition 9, because the shareholder is bound by the wishes of the majority. But the Court has a discretion and if it sees cause will examine the composition of the majority passing the resolution to make sure that it represents the real wishes of the shareholders 10. Prima facie a petition by a shareholder alleging that the company has no assets will be dismissed with costs 11.

In a shareholder's petition for winding up the omission to make the statement that the petitioner has held the shares for 6 months before filing the petition does not make the petition demurrable 12. But the registered name of the company must be accurately stated in the advertisement, otherwise the advertisement would be invalid 12. Where the date fixed for hearing as advertised is a holiday, the Court has discretion to dispense with the necessity of publishing fresh advertisement 12. In the last cited case the Court of Appeal discharged the order for winding up to enable the shareholders to meet and decide whether the company should be wound up voluntarily.

A creditor who has presented a petition cannot sell his debt and the right to Creditor cannot sell his right to proceed. proceed with the petition, for it is opposed to public policy 1. The executor of a creditor can make the petition before obtaining probate 2. A creditor cannot utilize his petition for obtaining some pecuniary benefit for himself alone 3.

Third parties have no right. A third party can have no right of action in respect of a contract, unless he possesses an actual beneficial right which places him in the position of cestui que trust under the contract 4.

Contents of the petition. There is no obligation whatever on the Court to admit a petition for winding up merely because it is presented. The petitioner must allege facts which, if proved, would justify an order for winding up. But if a petition does not allege such facts, the Judge has a discretion (since the admission of the petition must inevitably damage the company's credit) to consider whether the petition is really a bona fide one ; otherwise the door will be laid open to unlimited opportunities for blackmail, especially in times of financial panic 5.

Malicious petition. An action for damages will lie for presenting a winding up petition maliciously and without reasonable cause, though no special damage can be proved 6.

Restraining of petition. The Court will restrain the issuing of advertisements and will not allow the name of the company to transpire when the petition is an abuse of the process of the Court and is made from improper motives 7. On application made in time the Court will restrain the presentation of the petition 8.

In estimating the number of members for the purpose of cl. (a), sub. cl. (i) neither past members nor representatives of deceased or bankrupt members should be taken into account 9.

In cl. (a), sub-cl. (ii) the words "or have been held by him" means standing in the name of the contributory petitioner 10.

Company's name. In petitioning for the winding up it is important to state correctly the name of the company. Even a slight error will render it necessary for the petition to be amended, re-served, re-advertized and again brought before the Court 11.

Affidavit. The petition must be supported by an affidavit made by the petitioner or in a proper case by his solicitor 12.

Who may appear. Only the petitioner, the company, the creditors and the contributories supporting and opposing are entitled to appear on the petition 13. Where several petitions are presented, they rank according to the date of presentation and not according to their dates of advertisement 14. A fully paid shareholder is entitled to be heard (last note, last page) but in these matters it is improper to allow the company to fight the battle or the grievances of an individual shareholder 1.

Debenture-holders usually do not appear to oppose the petition, for they have another remedy; but if a winding up would prejudically affect them, this may be a ground for refusing to make the order for winding up 2. Debenture-holders, who oppose a petition by a creditor for winding up the company, must show that there is no possibility of any benefit accruing to the unsecured creditors from an order for the winding up. The unsecured creditors are entitled to ask the Court to pass a winding up order so that the question whether the debentures were bona fide issued for value may be enquired into and they may, before it is too late, be able to realize, if not the whole, at least a portion of their unsecured debt 3.

A creditor who has presented a petition for winding up, being dominus litis, is entitled on receiving payment of his debt to dismiss his petition at the hearing, but creditors who have appeared in consequence of the advertisement of the petition are entitled to their costs 4.

Procedure.

A petitioner cannot take his case out of the list for hearing without leave of the Court 5. Where a petitioner withdraws his petition, he will be ordered to pay one set of costs to those supporting and one to those opposing the petition 6. For further cases regarding costs see Gore-Browne, 36th ed. pp. 492-93.

The right to petition for winding up a company being a statutory right cannot be excluded by provisions in the articles of association 7.

Contempt of Court.

While a petition for compulsory winding up is pending, it is a contempt of Court to obtain by improper means a resolution for voluntary winding up with a view to mislead the Court as to the real views of the shareholders and thereby induce the Court to abstain from making a compulsory order 8.

The Court will also punish as a contempt an abuse of the occasion, e. g., an advertisement at length of a petition containing charges of fraud 9 or comments on the conduct of the directors published in the public press during the pendency of the petition 10. But it is not contempt to circulate among persons interested arguments or statements regarding the matter before the Court 11.

See notes to s. 162, cl. (v) and s. 163.

As to the petitions for compulsory winding up when the company is already in voluntary liquidation, see s. 218.

Effect of winding up order.

167. An order for winding up a company shall operate in favour of all the creditors and of all the contributories of the company as if made on the joint petition of a creditor and of a contributory.

Operation of winding up order.

A winding up order operates in favour of all the creditors and contributories. Where a sum was recovered by the liquidator from a director for fraudulent trading under s. 275 of the English Act of 1929, (no such provision is in this Indian Act), it was held that the money formed part of the general assets of the company and was not restricted to those creditors with whom debts were contracted during the period of fraudulent trading 1.

Effect of withdrawal of a petitioner.

When a depositor in a company applies for its winding up and other creditors and contributories are allowed by the Court to join with him in prosecuting the case, the petition of the depositor should be considered as a joint petition of all the persons allowed to join, and his withdrawal from the case does not operate as a withdrawal of the whole case. If the original petition is duly verified and signed, the co-petitioners are not debarred from proceeding with the case on account of omission to verify their petitions 2.

Effect of winding up order.

The effect of the winding up order is to stop the running of the statute of limitation in the company's favour 3. It does not however bring the company's business to an end and if the liquidator carries out a contract on the company's behalf, he can recover the consideration 4. If the liquidator has declared his inability to perform the company's contracts, other contracting parties may treat this as an immediate breach of contract and claim damages 5. A manager who having a contract for a term of years has covenanted not to trade in competition with the company is freed from his obligation by the breach of contract caused by the liquidation 6.

Effect on directors' power &c.

The winding up order puts an end to the directors' powers e. g., as to making calls 7 ; but they do not cease to be officers of the company 8. As to the effect on the directors' remuneration, see the case noted below 9.

On agents.

An agreement that an agent shall receive commission upon the sales of the company for a period of years will not however give the agent a right to damages by reason of the company going into liquidation 10. But an agreement that the company shall accept and pay commission upon such orders as the agent shall introduce will give a right to damages ; for this amounts to an express agreement to continue the business 11.

On debenture holders.

On an order for winding up a company debentures and other debts payable at a future date become immediately payable, and leases forfeitable in the event of a winding up are determined 12. Where the company has altogether ceased as a going concern, the debenture-holders are entitled to a charge on all assets, including proceeds of sale of realized assets and uncalled capital, in priority to the claims of unsecured creditors 13.

The liquidators in a voluntary winding up recovered a sum of money alleged to have been paid to a creditor by the company by way of fraudulent preference. A debenture-holder took out a summons in the liquidation for an order that the money recovered from the creditor should be paid to the receiver of the property charged by the debenture: held that the money did not become part of the general assets of the company, but was a sum of money received by the liquidators impressed in their hands with a trust for those creditors among whom the assets of the company were distributable 1.

Commencement of winding up by Court.

168. A winding up of a company by the Court shall be deemed to commence at the time of the presentation of the petition for the winding up.

Date of commencement.

If an order is made on more than one petition, the commencement of the winding up dates from the earliest petition 2. If after presentation of a petition for compulsory winding up a resolution is passed for voluntary winding up and then a supervision order is made on the petition, the commencement of the winding up is the date of the resolution and not that of the presentation of the petition 3, even if the supervision order be superseded by a compulsory order 4.

A compulsory order superseding a supervision order may be made not by way of appeal but upon a petition for a compulsory order presented subsequent to the supervision order 5. Where a purely voluntary winding up is superseded by a compulsory order made upon a petition presented after the commencement of the voluntary winding up, the commencement is the date of the presentation of the petition 6.

A voluntary winding up is deemed to commence at the time of the passing of the resolution authorizing the winding up 7.

Disposition of property.

Any disposition of the property of the company made after presentation of the petition for compulsory winding up shall, unless the Court otherwise orders, be void 8. Where after the dismissal of such a petition a lease of a factory for ten years was given by a resolution of a general meeting of shareholders, but in the meantime an order winding up the company was passed on appeal, their Lordships of the Judicial Committee allowed the lease to stand on the ground that as there was no creditor of the company, the only persons interested in the property were the shareholders who have by an unopposed resolution approved of the lease 9. See notes to s. 227.

Court may grant injunction.

ceedings in any suit or proceeding against the company, upon such terms as the Court thinks fit.

Effects of ss. 153, 169, 171, 268, 269, 273 and 274.

Sections 153 and 169 give the Court, in the interval between the presentation of a petition and an order upon it, a discretionary power to restrain proceedings against the company, and ss. 268 and 273 give the same power against any contributory; while ss. 171, 269 and 274 peremptorily stay proceedings after an order has been made until the leave of the Court has been obtained to proceed with them 1.

Difference between this section and s. 273.

A difference is to be observed between this section and ss. 268 and 273. Under this section the proceedings to be restrained do not include proceedings against the contributories, for they are not here liable directly to the creditors. The application under this section may be made by the company, creditor or contributory. Under ss. 268 and 273 the proceedings to be restrained do include proceedings against contributories. These sections provide that a creditor only can apply to stay proceedings against a contributory. The result is that proceedings against a contributory can be stayed only on the application of a creditor and not on that of the company or a contributory; but proceedings against the company may be stayed on the application of the company, creditor or contributory, whether the company is formed under the Act, formed otherwise and registered under Part VII of the Act, or be an unregistered company. For as regards an unregistered company the words at the end of s. 276 do not exclude a company as to which there are winding up proceedings pending though no order has been made, and consequently the beginning of the section renders applicable to unregistered companies the whole, except as expressly excepted, of Part V of the Act including s. 169 2.

Effect of ss. 222 and 225.

By s. 222 a petition and by s. 225 an order for winding up under supervision are respectively, for the purpose of giving jurisdiction over actions, to be deemed to be a petition and order for winding up by the Court 3.

Effect of ss. 207 and 215.

By s. 207 (now s. 211) in a voluntary winding up the creditors are to be paid pari passu, and by s. 215 (now s. 216) the Court may on the application of the liquidator or a contributory or creditor exercise all or any of the powers which it might exercise if the company were being wound up by the Court 3. Actions, executions 4 and distress 5 may therefore be restrained after a voluntary winding up commenced; but upon the liquidator lies the onus of showing special grounds for staying an action 6.

Where the application for stay is to be made.

Under the corresponding section (s. 172) of the English Act of 1929, where the action or proceeding is pending in the High Court or Court of Appeal in England or Northern Ireland, the application for stay is to be made to that Court and in any other case to the Court having jurisdiction to wind up the company. But under the present section of the Indian Act the application in all cases is to be made to the latter. The provisions of the English Act have been adopted in the new s. 216.

Suits and proceedings are stayed.

When a winding up order has been made, no suit or other legal proceeding shall be proceeded with except by leave of the Court [1], and any attachment, distress or execution put in force, or any sale held, without such leave, against the estate or effects of the company after the commencement of the winding up shall be void [2]. But after presentation of the petition and before the winding up order is passed, the jurisdiction of the Court to stay proceedings is discretionary [3]; and in its exercise regard must be had to the primary object of winding up, namely, collection and distribution of the assets pari passu amongst unsecured creditors after payment of the preferential debts [4]. In the absence of special circumstances the Court will stay execution and further proceedings [5].

What is a "proceeding."

An execution after judgment has been signed is a "proceeding" and may be restrained [6]. Proceeding to a sale under an execution perfected by seizure before commencement of the winding up is a "proceeding" [7]. The Court however will not, as a rule, restrain a judgment-creditor from reaping the fruits of his action [8]. A distress is a "proceeding" [9] and a landlord will not be allowed to distrain for rent due before the winding up; he must prove his debt like any other creditor [10]. But if the company is a sub-lessee, the superior landlord will be allowed to distrain, for there is no debt in respect of which he can prove [11].

In what case Court will restrain proceedings.

Where the assets have not been actually seized before the petition, the Court will, in the absence of special circumstances, stay proceedings and either restrain the sheriff from seizing or, if he has actually taken possession after the presentation of the petition, will order him to withdraw [4]. When a garnishee order has not been served before the presentation of the petition, the Court will restrain further proceedings [12]. Where a distress has been levied before a winding up, but not completed by sale, the Court has power to restrain proceedings, but will only do so if special circumstances exist rendering a sale inequitable [13]. A landlord will not be allowed to distrain after a winding up, for he is a creditor in respect of such rent and should prove in the winding up [14]. But where a landlord distrains before the winding up for rent payable in advance covering a period after winding up, he can recover the whole amount [15].

When a creditor obtains judgment and issues execution bona fide, and the sheriff is actually in possession before presentation of the petition [16], the creditor will not, except under special circumstances, be restrained from realizing [17]; so also if the execution of the writ be only stopped by resistance made to the sheriff's officer [18]. But if a forced sale by the execution-creditor would be ruinous to the company and the other creditors, an injunction may be granted to restrain the sale, a first charge being given to the execution-creditor on the property for his debt and costs 1, or the same rights being reserved to the creditor against the proceeds of the property seized by the sheriff 2.

(1) On hearing the petition the Court may dismiss it with or without costs, or adjourn the hearing conditionally or unconditionally, or make any interim order or any other order that it deems just, but the Court shall not refuse to make a winding up order on the ground only that the assets of the company have been mortgaged to an amount equal to or in excess of those assets, or that the company has no assets.

(2) Where the petition is presented on the ground of default in filing the statutory report or in holding the statutory meeting, the Court may order the costs to be paid by any persons who, in the opinion of the Court, are responsible for the default.

(3) Where the Court makes an order for the winding up of a company it shall, except where a liquidator is appointed simultaneously, forthwith cause intimation thereof to be sent to the official receiver.

Object & effect of the section.

The object and effect of an order for the compulsory winding up of a company is the closing down of its business. No doubt in order that the assets of the company should be distributed among those entitled to them in the most efficient and fair manner, the Court in some cases may permit the realization of the assets to be suspended temporarily, but for no other purpose. The reason why an order is made that the affairs of a company should be wound up by the Court is because it is deemed expedient that the company should come to an end as a business undertaking. If the general body of creditors are of opinion that it will best serve their interest that an order for compulsory liquidation should be made and the company closed down, their views are entitled to respect. On the other hand if the creditors think that it will be more to their interest that the company should go into voluntary liquidation, again it is primarily a matter for them to decide. But the wishes of the majority of the creditors are not binding upon the Court, though in every case the Court might try to give them serious consideration. It is true as between the creditor and the company as his debtor the creditor who proves insolvency is entitled ex debito justitiæ to a winding up order. But the right ex debito justitiæ is not his individual right, but his representative right. If majority of the class are opposed to his view and consider that they have a better chance of getting payment by abstaining from seizing the assets, then upon general grounds the Court should give effect to such right as the majority of the class desire to exercise 1.

Former law.

Formerly a winding up order was not, as a rule, made where there were no assets or where all the assets would be taken by the debenture-holders 2. But this section recognizes 3 and gives effect to the decision in Crygglestone Coal Co. [1906] 2 Ch. 327. A fully paid shareholder is entitled to an order where the company has no assets and is insolvent 4.

Where the Court will not make the order.

Where it appears that a winding up order will not benefit the petitioner, that nearly all the other creditors oppose the petition and the company is trying to arrange a scheme for reconstruction, the Court will refuse to allow the petition to stand over and may dismiss it with costs 5. Where creditors to a very considerable amount proposed a compulsory winding up and wished it to be voluntarily wound up, Sir John Romilly M. R. said : "I will explain the principle on which I proceed in these cases. Where a creditor applies to wind up one of those companies, especially a limited one, and the company says 'if you allow this to stand over we will supply funds to pay the debt', I am disposed to grant that indulgence. So where a shareholder who applies for the order and the company says 'if you allow it to stand over, the remaining shareholders are ready to advance the necessary money', I allow it to stand over. But here it is admitted that the company must be wound up and the only question is whether it is to be voluntarily or under the Court. I do not know what advance of money can be obtained. I do not know how money can be advanced if the company is to be wound up : the case is very different where it is to be carried on" 6. In Western of Canada &c Co. 7 Lord Selborne L. C.

observed : "A very large majority of the debenture-holders think that their interests would be better promoted by delay, and the delay appears to me in the circumstances reasonable."

A winding up order will not be made on a debt which is bona fide disputed by the company[1] ; but the Court will see that the dispute is based on substantial grounds. If the petition has been actually presented, it may be either dismissed or stayed[2], and an injunction may be granted restraining the advertisement of the petition[3]. If the petition is ordered to stand over at the request of the company, it will be required to give an undertaking that it will not consent to a winding up order on the petition of another person or to a voluntary liquidation[4].

Adjournment of petition.

A petition will not be adjourned on the ground that an order, if made, will relate back to the presentation of the petition and affect acts done in the interval[5]. But if the petitioner may, by reason of the petition standing over, get paid earlier than he would under a winding up order, an immediate order will be refused[6].

Second petition.

When a creditor is aware that a petition to wind up has been presented, he cannot present a second petition without the risk of having to pay costs[7], even if the first petition be of the company[8]. As regards costs[9] see Buckley, 10th Ed. pp. 349-56.

Persons entitled to be heard.

The only persons entitled to be heard are the company, its creditors and the contributories[10]. The Court may in its discretion hear other persons who have an interest in order to learn what public grounds there are in favour of or in opposition to the winding up[11] ; but such persons cannot appeal[10]. "There can be no doubt really," as observed by Sir George Rankin in the undernoted case[12], "whether or not the wording of the Companies Act uses the word 'contributory' in all cases with exactness, that a fully paid up shareholder has the right to appear and to be heard upon the application to wind up the company. That has been the settled practice of great many years and we have been referred to the cases re Anglesea Colliery Co.[13] and re Rica Gold Washing Co.[14] which say that a fully paid up shareholder has the right to present a winding up petition. The Companies Act does not, it appears to me, deal directly with the question of who shall be heard at the time when a winding up petition is being tried. If one goes on the ordinary principles it seems to me manifest that a shareholder has an interest in the questions whether the company should be wound up, a receiver appointed over all the assets, its goodwill brought to nothing and its capital, as it very often happens, sold at a ruinous loss." It is not correct to say that creditors appearing on a petition for winding up are entitled to their costs as of right. It is usual to give one set of costs when many appear and when there is a reasonable ground for appearing 1.

Costs.

As the advertisement of the petition is an invitation to the creditors and contributories to appear 2, if the petitioner wants to get his petition dismissed he must pay the costs of the former 3. For this reason the petitioner will not be allowed to take his petition out of the list 4; and if when it is called on he elects to get it dismissed, it will be dismissed with costs including those of the creditors who appear 5, whether the persons supporting or opposing the petition are in the right or not 6.

Procedure.

Where a winding up order is made on a petition, it is an order for the benefit of all the creditors and contributories 7, and the petitioner's costs including those of establishing his debt, if disputed, are a first charge on the estate and must be paid in full in priority to any costs of the liquidator 8.

Effect of the order.

A winding up order is not a judgment in rem, and a stranger, e. g., a purchaser from the liquidator may dispute its validity 9.

Petition of holder of fully paid share.

An order to wind up a company compulsorily will be made on the petition of a holder of fully paid up shares, notwithstanding that an extraordinary resolution has been passed to wind it up voluntarily 10.

Two companies cannot, for the sake of convenience, be included in one winding up order 11.

It has been held in England that any person who appeared at the hearing can appeal 12, and persons who did not appear at the hearing must obtain leave before they can appeal 13.

Appeal.

Suits stayed on winding up order.

being wound up, except with the consent of the Court, and all proceedings in which the company is either a defendant or a respondent are proceedings against the company. Therefore a revision petition against a company cannot be proceeded with after the winding up order without leave of the Court in which the winding up proceeding is going on 1. But see next para.

Scope.

An appeal or an application for revision arising out of an action brought by a company does not however come within the purview of this section, and such appeal or application can be proceeded with without the leave of the liquidation Court 2. The word "suit" in this section means, as stated in s. 26, C. P. Code, a proceeding which is instituted with the presentation of a plaint in a Court of original jurisdiction. The expression "legal proceedings" in this section is coupled with "suit" and obviously means proceedings ejusdem generis, that is to say, original proceedings in a Court of first instance, analogous to a suit, initiated by means of a petition similar to a plaint. It does not include proceedings taken in the course of the suit, nor proceedings arising from the suit and continued in a higher Court like an appeal from an interlocutory order or final order passed in the suit 3. But the Allahabad High Court has held that where a decree in favour of a company has been passed and the judgment-debtor has appealed from the decree and goes on with his appeal at the date of the winding-up of the company, he should be regarded as proceeding with legal proceedings against the company, and he cannot do so without leave of the Court 4. Leave to commence an appeal cannot be granted under this section, where such leave is applied for at a time beyond that at which the commencement of the appeal would become time-barred 5. An appeal against a decree in favorur of a bank was filed within time, but before that the bank had gone into liquidation. On an application under this section to continue the appeal it was held that since the appeal was a proceeding within the meaning of this section, it was not valid and effective as it was instituted without leave and the application for leave must be taken to be one to "commence" and not to "continue" the appeal 6. Leave under this section to commence an appeal after expiry of the period of limitation should not be granted, inasmuch as such leave cannot have the effect of reconstituting the appeal as a valid appeal 6. When once an action by the company in liquidation itself has been proceeded with, and is successful, there is no necessity for the defendant in the action to obtain leave for any defensive proceedings against the company 7. On this point Lord Davey said : "The respondents now objeet that the present appellants cannot proceed with the appeal without the leave of the Court in Ireland. I am of opinion that the objection cannot be maintained. It was the respondents who themselves proceeded with the action after the winding up order, by prosecuting their appeal in the Court of appeal, and when once an action by the company has been proceeded with, there is no necessity for the defendants in the action to obtain leave for any defensive proceeding on their part. The liquidator was either party or privy to the proceedings in the Court of appeal and the respondents having been successful in that appeal cannot now object to the appellants defending themselves against the consequences of the judgment by the ordinary means of an appeal to this House" 1.

Leave under this section to proceed with a pending legal proceeding can only be granted where that proceeding has been instituted prior to the winding up order. The Court has no jurisdiction to give a plaintiff leave to continue a suit which is instituted without the Court's leave subsequent to an order for compulsory liquidation. It has inherent jurisdiction to dismiss the suit on the interlocutory application for leave to continue the suit 2.

Insolvency proceedings.

The provisions of this section are very wide and though an application for discharge of an insolvent may not start independent proceedings, the section would require leave of the High Court even for continuation of the insolvency proceedings already taken 3.

Construction.

The words "or commenced" in this section are not otiose. They were put in to show that no suit could be instituted or other legal proceedings commenced without the leave of the Court after the company had gone into liquidation. The words immediately preceding them, namely, "shall be proceeded with" were put in merely to meet the case of those suits or legal proceedings which were pending at the time the liquidation started. The word "commenced" has been used because a proceeding is usually said to be commenced just as a suit is usually said to be instituted, but the meaning of the two words is the same. This section means that after liquidation has started a suit cannot be instituted and other legal proceedings cannot be commenced, until the leave of the Court is given 4.

Effect of winding up order.

Where a company is being wound up by or subject to the supervision of the Court, any attachment, sequestration, distress or execution put in force against the estate or effects of the company is, unless leave to proceed is given by the Court, avoided altogether 5, so that no interest in any goods seized is acquired even against third persons 6. The Court will set aside a judgment obtained without leave after the winding up order 7. The provision applies to distress for rent 8 or rates 9. A suit or application can only be instituted or made with the leave of the Court 10. But it has been held by the Lahore High Court that where leave has been obtained within the period of limitation, it would be useless to dismiss the suit and compel the plaintiff to bring another suit after obtaining the leave 11. It has however been held by the Calcutta High Court that if after an order for winding up is passed, a suit is instituted against the company, the Court has inherent jurisdiction to dismiss the suit as incompetent. On an interlocutory application under this section the winding up Court has no jurisdiction to give the plaintiff leave to continue a suit instituted without leave subsequent to the winding up order 1.

Execution.

If execution or process of the nature has been duly levied or put in force before the winding up commenced so as to make the creditor a secured creditor, a stay will be refused or leave to proceed and to sell given 2, unless the liquidator pays the debt 3 or there are special circumstances. Service of a garnishee order nisi is, for this purpose, equivalent to execution 4 ; but an order appointing a receiver by way of equitable execution does not per se make the judgment-creditor a secured creditor 5. If the writ has merely reached the hands of the sheriff, but he has not seized at the commencement of the winding up, the Court will not, in the absence of special circumstances, allow execution to be levied 7 ; for an execution is not put in force unless possession is taken under it 6. As to a mortgagee submitting to have his rights determined see the case noted below 7.

An attachment of the assets of a company (which is subsequently wound up), which has not been completed by sale, cannot be treated as having been completed before the commencement of the winding up, so as to allow such attachment to prevail over the interests of the body of creditors as a whole 8.

Where in execution of a decree obtained by a company in liquidation certain property has been attached as belonging to the judgment-debtor, and a third person has unsuccessfully objected to the attachment on the ground that the property belonged to him and not to the judgment-debtor, such person cannot bring a suit under Or. 21, r. 63, C. P. Code against the company for a declaration of his title without having first obtained under this section leave of the Court which passed the winding up order 9.

The leave of the Court is essential for the purpose of proceeding to execution even in the case of a decree obtained by the Government ; there is no exception to this section 10.

S. 145, Cr. P. Code.

This section is not meant to override an express enacment in s. 145, Criminal Procedure Code, by which a Magistrate, if satisfied that a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace exists, is bound to call on the parties to attend his Court and put in their claims as regards actual possession 11.

Where proceedings will be allowed to continue.

Proceedings will be allowed to continue where they are to enforce a mortgage or security upon the company's property, or where the company is a necessary party to an action against other persons, or where an action is the most convenient method of trying a question, or where a shareholder has commenced proceedings for rescission and rectification of the register before the winding up, or where the claim is for specific performance or for recovery of possession 12. Leave to continue a suit against the company should be given where some question arises which cannot be satisfactorily determined in the winding up proceeding 1.

Where the decree sought to be executed is one assigned by the company since gone into liquidation, the judgment-debtor cannot maintain the objection that the execution proceedings are incompetent for the reason that no leave of the Court was obtained when the company presses no such objection and the judgment-debtor did not take the objection in the Court of first instance 2.

Effect of winding up proceedings in England.

The liquidation Court will restrain a person within its jurisdiction from taking or continuing actions or proceedings out of the jurisdiction 3. Where a company was being wound up by the Court of Chancery in England, all actions brought against it in India were ordered to be stayed in the case noted below 4. But a suit may be brought in the Court of this country against a company that is being wound up in England without leave of the Court of Chancery. The High Court will however in the exercise of its general power stay the proceedings where the circumstances are such as to render it proper to do so 5. Parliament never legislates, unless expressly so mentioned in the statute, respecting colonial or Indian Courts 6. But the fact that the property is out of the jurisdiction does not prevent the application of the Act 7. Where a company has in England been ordered to be wound up, judgment-creditors who have proved will not be allowed to attach property in India belonging to the company 6.

Court's jurisdiction.

The Court has jurisdiction to restrain a British subject from taking proceedings in a foreign Court 8 ; but it cannot take away from a creditor the fruits of judgment in rem (e. g., against a ship) obtained by him in a foreign Court, a judgment in rem being final against every one including the liquidator 9. This section does not apply to proceedings pending in a foreign Court; the Court can, however, in the exercise of its equitable jurisdiction in personam, restrain a respondent properly served in this country from proceeding with an action brought in a foreign Court to enforce a liability incurred abroad; but as against a respondent domiciled abroad a substantial justice is more likely to be attained by allowing the foreign proceedings to continue and in such a case the Court will not, as a rule, exercise that jurisdiction 10.

Under this section leave to proceed with a pending legal proceeding can only be granted where that proceeding has been initiated prior to the winding up order; the Court has no jurisdiction to give the plaintiff leave to continue a suit instituted without leave subsequent to the winding up order 11.

A regular suit brought by an unsuccessful claimant of attached property against a company in liquidation is not a part of the proceedings of execution and therefore cannot be commenced without leave of the liquidation Judge 1. On the other hand leave given to proceed with a suit does not extend to execution 2.

Under this section the Court has a wide discretion in the matter of granting leave. It may grant leave unconditionally, it may grant it on terms or it may refuse it absolutely. But in the exercise of this discretion the Court cannot act arbitrarily or capriciously 3. Where leave had been given to certain creditors to proceed to execution while the winding up proceedings were pending but before winding up order had been made, it was held that the leave to proceed was not affected by the winding up order 4.

When leave has been granted pending the suit, the leave is not to be treated as a nullity and the suit cannot be dismissed on the ground that before it commenced no leave has been obtained 5.

The authority who is responsible to see whether winding up proceedings would be properly safeguarded or not by the granting or withholding of leave is the company Judge. If he thinks that leave may be granted, it is not the business of anybody else except the Court of appeal to say that the leave should not have been granted 6.

Effect of want of knowledge.

A sale of the assets of a company, after winding up order, in execution of a decree passed before the date of that order without the permission of the Court, is voidable at the instance of the liquidator. Want of knowledge of the winding up order does not validate such a sale 7. When the execution Court becomes aware of the winding up, it should refuse to confirm the sale 7.

Disabilities of persons alleged to be contributories.

Persons alleged to be contributories cannot, after the winding up order, be allowed to have recourse to an action for the purpose of having an adjudication upon their liability to pay calls on their shares. Such matters are peculiarly within the jurisdiction of the Court conducting the liquidation and cannot be decided by any other Court 8. But a debtor to a company who is not a member is entitled in an action by the liquidator to recover the amount due from the former, to plead by way of set off that an ascertained sum of money is then due to him and to claim that only such balance, if any, as is due to the company, is recoverable from him 9.

Application for substitution.

An application by a transferee of a decree obtained against a company, which has since gone into liquidation, for substitution of his name as decree-holder under s. 47 (3) C. P. Code must, inspite of the provisions of this section, be made to the execution Court and not the winding up Court. After that the decree-holder is to make his claim to the liquidator 10.

Secured creditor.

A person claiming to be a secured creditor cannot be forced to prove his debt in liquidation, but he can stand outside the winding up proceedings and rely upon his security for whatever it is worth. When such a person asks for leave to sue, the prayer should ordinarily be granted, unless there are special grounds to support the contrary course. But where he stands by for a pretty long time after accrual of the cause of action and takes no steps to enforce his security, leave should be granted on terms 1.

Secured creditor's remedy.

Although the winding up Judge has jurisdiction to refuse leave absolutely, it cannot, under colour of refusing leave or otherwise, annul or modify a secured creditor's security or decree. The winding up Judge should refuse leave absolutely only in exceptional cases. Ordinarily he should refuse leave only for such time as may be necessary to enable him in the particular circumstances of each case to determine whether he will direct the liquidator to pay off the claim and thus save unnecessary costs to the estate or whether he will give leave to proceed, or whether he will direct the liquidator to take such steps as may be open to him to get the decree set aside 2. Upon a winding up a debenture-holder is entitled to enforce his charge, even though his debenture has not matured 3. Where properties are ordered to be sold by the winding up Court without prejudice to the rights of the secured creditors to proceed in the usual way, the secured creditor's suit previously permitted to be prosecuted would not be stayed 4. Leave under this section is not given on an ex parte application 5.

Where a decree has been obtained under a charge which has not been registered under s. 109 even prior to the winding up application, an application for leave to proceed with the execution thereof will be refused 6.

Waiver by company.

It is competent for a company or its liquidator to waive a plea founded on this section and in such circumstances it is not part of the duty of the Court to put the section into operation 7. But a liquidator cannot waive the bar created by this section in such a way as to require him to admit a claim under a decree rendered inoperative by that bar. A decree obtained against a company after a voluntary winding up has been superseded by a winding up order under supervision of the Court is invalid as it contravenes this section 8.

Voluntary liquidation.

In the case of a compulsory winding up a creditor is debarred from proceeding by way of action, unless he can show special grounds for granting him leave to do so; but in the case of a voluntary liquidation the onus is on the liquidator to show that an order should be made staying an action; for prima facie the ordinary tribunal is the proper one to decide upon a claim against the company 9.

"The general practice", observed Lort-Williams J., "with regard to staying executions where there is a voluntary liquidation, has been described by Scrutton, L. J. in Anglo-Baltic &c. Bank v. Barber & Co. [1924] 2 K. B. 410 (418). He states the general practice to be to grant an order staying execution for the reason that the execution, if allowed, would necessarily interfere with the distribution of the assets pari passu, and that it was only in very special circumstances that the Court would depart from that general practice, such as, for instance, where the judgment-creditor had been induced by a false pretext on the part of the company to postpone the execution as was the case in Armorduct Manufacturing Co. v. General Incandescent Co. [1912] 2 K. B. 143" 1.

Where a company has gone into voluntary liquidation it can be sued for debts due by it incurred prior to the liquidation, although the fact that there are liquidators may be material if execution of the decree is sought 2. Under s. 136 of Act VI of 1882 it was held that the language showed that the proceedings in execution were regarded as distinct from the suit for the purposes of that section; therefore the leave given to proceed with a suit was not authority for proceedings taken in execution of the decree in the suit authorized 3.

After a bank had been ordered by the Court to be wound up, a person sued both the voluntary and the official liquidators of the bank for recovery of his pay for his employments by the voluntary liquidators for the period prior to the winding up order; it was held that this section applied to the case and that the suit could not be entertained without the Court's leave 4.

The passing of resolutions for a voluntary winding up does not, like an order for winding up by or under the supervision of the Court, stay any proceedings or invalidate executions or distresses or prevent actions or other proceedings being brought or continued against the company without the leave of the Court. But on an application being made the Court has jurisdiction to stay any action, proceeding, attachment, distress or execution against the company or its estate and effects on such terms as it thinks fit. Until a stay is granted a creditor may commence or continue any such proceedings and the liquidator may obtain a supervision order to protect himself against actions threatened and so save the expenses of applying for the stay of proceedings against the company 5.

In the case of a voluntary winding up, although the commencement of the winding up does not automatically stay proceedings 6, the Court has power under s. 215 (now s. 216) on the application of the liquidator or a creditor or contributory to order a stay 7. But if in an action against a company in voluntary liquidation the liquidator denies liability but shows no special reason why a stay should be granted, the action will be allowed to proceed 8. If an order is made staying an action brought against a company which is already in voluntary liquidation, the plaintiff may be ordered to pay the costs of the application 9. If a distress has been levied by a lessor before the commencement of a voluntary winding up, but has not been completed by sale, the Court will not, at the instance of the liquidator, restrain further proceedings under the distress unless there are special reasons which render it inequitable to allow the distress to go on 10.

Practice.

The practice is that a heavy contested money claim against a company and its agents, where the allegations are that the debt was really a personal debt of the agents which they fraudulently attempted to foist on to the company, is usually left to be decided by a suit 11.

Creditors not to change their position. An unsecured creditor cannot be turned into a secured creditor after winding up by granting him specific performance of an agreement to create a charge. A rigid line is drawn at the winding up and creditors should not be allowed to change their position after the date of commencement of the winding up 1.

Rights of Crown. The effect of this section is not to restrict any of the rights to recover debts due to the Crown which it may possess by virtue of its prerogative 2. But the Patna High Court in a later case has held that there is no exception to this section and the leave of the Court is essential for the purpose of proceeding to execution even in the case of a decree obtained by the Government 3. Where income tax is justly and legally leviable there will be no difficulty in obtaining leave of the Court to enforce payment of the tax 4. See notes to s. 230.

Limitation ceases to run. The liquidator being a trustee for the creditors, time to recover a debt due from the company does not run after an order or resolution for winding up. The date for testing the liability is the commencement of the winding up 5.

Applicability of section. This section applies to liquidation under the Court's supervision as well as to liquidation by the Court 5. The liquidators cannot waive the bar created by this section in such a way as to require them to admit a claim under decree rendered inoperative by that bar 6.

Court's discretion. An appellate Court does not ordinarily interfere with the discretion of a Court in the matter of granting leave to continue an action against a company which is being wound up; but where the order of the Court is wholly wrong, it will not be sustained 7.

take into his custody and control all the books, documents and the assets of the company.

(4) The official receiver shall be entitled to such remuneration as the Court shall fix.

Amendment.

This section is new. It has been introduced by the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936, as inconvenience was experienced through the office of official liquidator remaining vacant after a winding up order had been made. This section is designed to secure that a public official shall automatically become the liquidator until some other person is appointed by the Court and can undertake the work. In sub-s. (1) the words within square brackets have been substituted for the words "Local Government" and "local official Gazette" respectively by the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937 which came into operation on 1st April, 1937. But with effect from 1st April, 1938, the Central Government has entrusted its functions under the said sub-section to Provincial Governments. See Gazette of India dated 26th March, 1938, Part I, p. 440.

Copy of winding up order to be filed with registrar.

172. (1) On the making of a winding up order it shall be the duty of the petitioner in the winding up proceedings and of the company to file with the registrar a copy of the order within a month from the date of the making of the order.

(2) On the filing of a copy of a winding up order, the registrar shall make a minute thereof in his books relating to the company, and shall notify in the [Official Gazette] that such an order has been made.

(3) Such order shall be deemed to be notice of discharge to the servants of the company, except when the business of the company is continued.

Amendment.

By the companies (Amendment) Act, 1936, for the original sub-s. (1) the new sub-s. (1) has been substituted. In sub-s. (2) the words in italics within square brackets have been substituted for "local official Gazette" by the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order 1937. For effect of the amendment see Introduction. The original sub-s. (1) was as follows :

Copy of winding up order to be filed with registrar.

172. (1) On the making of a winding up order, it shall be the duty of the company forthwith to file with the registrar a copy of the order, and the petitioner in the winding up proceedings may so file a copy.

Notice of discharge to servants.

Sub-s. (3). An order for compulsory winding up has the same effect as a notice of discharge given on the day when the winding up order was made and servants are not entitled to payment in full in priority of other creditors [1]. The order however operates as a wrongful dismissal of the servants of the company and damages are allowed for breach of contract of service [2]. The reason for holding such an order to operate as a notice of discharge is that it changes the personality of the employer i.e., substitutes the liquidator for the company [2].

In voluntary winding up.

The decisions as to whether a voluntary winding up operates as a dismissal of servants are conflicting, but the better opinion is that it does not 1.

As to the priority of payment of the servants' wages or salaries in liquidation, see s. 230 and notes.

Power of Court to stay winding up.

173. The Court may at any time after an order for winding up, on the application of any creditor or contributory, and on proof to the satisfaction of the Court that all proceedings in relation to the winding up ought to be stayed, make an order staying the proceedings, either altogether or for a limited time, on such terms and conditions as the Court thinks fit.

Where the order is made.

The power to make an order for the stay of proceedings under a voluntary winding up has been given to the Court by this section read with s. 216 2. The winding up proceeding will not be stayed on the application of the company alone 3, or of an alleged contributory who does not admit himself to be a contributory 4. In dealing with such an applicatian for stay of proceedings the Court has to see whether a stay will be conductive or detrimental to commercial morality and to the interests of the public at large 5.

An application for stay is frequently made when a re-organization under s. 153 or a reconstruction is contemplated 6 ; but the Court will refuse consent, if the directors' conduct require investigation 7.

Where not.

In exercising its jurisdiction to stay proceedings the Court would, so far as possible, act upon the principles which are applicable in exercising jurisdiction to rescind a receiving order or annual an adjudication in bankruptcy against an individual, in which case the Court refuses to act upon the mere assent 8 of the creditors and considers not only whether what is proposed is for the benefit of the creditors but also whether the rescission or annulment will be conducive or detrimental to commercial morality or to the interest of the public at large 7.

What the Court will consider.

In refusing or postponing a stay of winding up proceedings the Court will have regard to the following facts :—(a) That the directors have not complied with their statutory duties as to giving information to the official receiver or furnishing a statement as to the affairs of the company ; (b) that there has been an undisclosed agreement between the promoter and the vendor as to the participation by the former in fully paid up shares forming the consideration for the purchase of property by the company on its formation ; (c) that the promoter has made gifts of fully paid shares to the directors ; (d) that there are any other matters connected with the promotion, formation or failure of the company or the conduct of its business or affairs which appear to the Court to require investigation 8.

Where time is running under s. 217 (now ss. 208E and 209H) towards the moment when the company will be dissolved and there is good reason for preventing dissolution, the result may be achieved by an order under this section [3].

Court may have regard to wishes of creditors or contributories.

174. The Court may, as to all matters relating to a winding up, have regard to the wishes of the creditors or contributories as proved to it by any sufficient evidence.

Court's power when exercised.

The section applies as soon as a petition for winding up has been presented [2]. The wishes of the majority of the creditors are not binding upon the Court, though in every case the Court might try to give them serious consideration [4]. The Court may disregard them where a single person has a controlling interest [5] or where the majority consist of persons whose conduct is impugned [6], or where the scheme of reconstruction suggested by the creditors is entirely illusory and unpractical and is in essence but a scheme for the voluntary liquidation of the company [7]. The rule that the opinion of the creditors and shareholders regarding carrying on the liquidation should be followed as generally applied in England should not apply so strictly to India. Limited liability companies in India are in their infancy. Shareholders and creditors are easily misled. Fraudulent directors have no difficulty in this country in deceiving shareholders and creditors. While the opinion of the latter undoubtedly ought to be taken into consideration, these classes of persons in India at present require to be protected against themselves. Hence even though the creditors and shareholders agree that the liquidation should be carried on by certain directors who themselves are indebted to the company, the Court can order compulsory liquidation where it finds that those directors are not doing their work of collecting debts properly [8]. For other cases see notes to s. 183.

Creditors.

The word "creditors" does not necessarily mean a majority of the creditors, and in very exceptional cases a creditor's right to a winding up order may be displaced by special circumstances urged by a minority of creditors [9]. The Court will have regard to the wishes of the majority in value of the creditors and if, for some good reason, they object to a winding up order, the Court in its discretion may refuse the order [10]. But if the facts disclose a strong prima facie case for investigation into the formation or promotion of the company or the issue of debentures by it, the Court will make a compulsory order irrespective of the creditors' opposition [11].

Contributories. If the company is solvent, the wishes of the contributories as the persons chiefly interested in the assets carry most weight, and if the company is insolvent, the wishes of the creditors [1]. In the case of a company where assets are entirely covered by debentures, the wishes of the unsecured creditors must be regarded in preference to those of the secured creditors [2].

Where the section will apply. The section may be used for the purpose of re-summoning the statutory "first meeting" of creditors and contributories [3]. It is not confined to questions arising after the winding up order, nor to the manner in which, or the terms upon which, an order shall be made, but is equally applicable before the order, when the petition is before the Court [4]. It gives the Court complete discretion to refuse an order [5], or to direct the petition to stand over [6] upon terms [7], and to exercise its discertion with reference to all the surrounding circumstances [8] and the Court may disregard the result of the meeting [8]. For the purpose of this section a fully paid up shareholder is in an entirely different position from a creditor or a contributory who is still liable for calls. "For the purpose of giving value to a mere desire of a contributory or shareholder the position of fully paid up shareholder may be one of comparative unimportance" [9].

The wishes of the creditors and contributories are ascertained in the manner laid down in s. 239.

Cases in which the question arose of giving weight to the wishes of the creditors and contributories have been collected in Buckley, 10th ed. pp. 362-65.

Official Liquidators.

Appointment of official liquidator. 175. (1) For the purpose of conducting the proceedings in winding up a company and performing such duties in reference thereto as the Court may impose, the Court may appoint a person or persons other than the official receiver to be called an official liquidator or official liquidators.

(2) The Court may make such an appointment provisionally at any time after the presentation of a petition and before the making of an order for winding up but shall before making aay such appointment give notice to the company, unless for reasons to be recorded it thinks fit to dispense with notice.

(3) If more persons than one are appointed to the office of official liquidator, the Court shall declare whether any act by this Act required or authorised to be done by the official liquidator is to be done by all or any one or more of such persons.

(4) The Court may determine whether any, and what, security is to be given by any official liquidator on his appointment.

(5) The acts of an official liquidator shall be valid notwithstanding any defect that may afterwards be discovered in his appointment : Provided that nothing in this sub-section shall be deemed to give validity to acts done by an official liquidator after his appointment has been shown to be invalid.

(6) A receiver shall not be appointed of assets in the hands of an official liquidator.

By the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936, the words in italics have been inserted in the section.

What the Court will have regard to.

The Court in appointing a liquidator will have regard to the wishes of the creditors 1. Where a majority in number vote one way and a majority in value the other way, the Court will decide the question 2.

Who may be appointed liquidator.

The liquidator should be a disinterested person. As a general rule the appointment of a shareholder or a creditor would be improper 3. The secretary of the company being cognizant of its affairs is however a proper person 4. But where there are matters requiring investigation an independent person will be appointed.

Where a mortgagee has obtained an order for a receiver, it is not reasonable that there should be two persons, each of them responsible to the Court, the one as receiver and the other as liquidator ; the practice in such cases is to appoint the liquidator receiver, or allow him to act as receiver, even though a receiver has been appointed before 5. But where there are substantially no outstanding assets, the mortgagee's receiver will not be displaced 6. On the other hand if the mortgagee appoints his own receiver under the power in his security, he is entitled to possession and the Court cannot interfere with his possession. In such a case the Court would, under proper safeguards, direct the liquidator to give possession to the mortgagee's receiver 7.

Where the memorandum of association of a company shows that one of the objects of the company is to manage estates, it entitles the company to act as a liquidator of another company; and after the company having been appointed a liquidator and having accepted the position, the legality of the appointment cannot be questioned in proceedings of an order for payment under s. 186 1.

Court has discretion.

The appointment of any person as an official liquidator is so entirely a matter for discretion of the liquidation Judge that an appellate Court will not reverse his decision except under very special circumstances, or unless it can be shown that the Judge has acted on a wrong principle 2. This section does not make it obligatory on the Court to comply with the wishes of the majority of creditors 2.

Where a company has to admit that it has in all its branches suspended business and that it must inevitably go into liquidation, the Court is fully justified in taking action under this section and in appointing a provisional liquidator 3.

Premium on security bond.

In an unreported case 4, Sir George Rankin, C. J., and C. C. Ghose, J, have held that when a liquidator gives a security bond by a guarantee society, the premium should not be paid out of the assets of the company. In this case their Lordships also discussed the principles governing the remuneration of liquidators.

Liquidator's duty.

It is wrong to assume that a private company need not be regarded as a corporation distinct from the persons composing it, and that irregularities in connection with its liquidation which in the case of a public company would be most serious are venial and perhaps even permissible. The duties and responsibilities of the liquidator are as serious in the liquidation of a private company as of any other 5. A person who has been appointed liquidator ought not, after such appointment, to continue to act as a Vakil of a creditor whose right to prove against the company is in dispute in the liquidation 6. The liquidator appointed pendente lite has no right to contest the order directing the compulsory winding up 7. A provisional liquidator has no right to appear on the hearing of the petition 7.

Appointment of provisional liquidator.

A provisional liquidator is not generally appointed before the hearing of the petition unless the company is shown to be insolvent 8, or unless the petition is presented by the company itself or shown to be unopposed 9. But in a case of urgency the Court would make such appointment upon his undertaking to give security forthwith 10.

The appointment of a provisional liquidator is not only provisional but contingent, for it operates to protect the property for an equal distribution only in the event of an order for compulsory winding up being made. If no such order is made, the appointment ought not to interfere with the rights of third parties 11.

Fiduciary position. The liquidator as occupying a fiduciary position must not make any secret profit out of his office 1.

Directors' right to appeal. After the winding up order the directors cease to be such and the managing director has no locus standie to appeal against an order appointing an official liquidator or an order refusing re-hearing of the appointment proceeding 2.

Resignations, removals, filling up vacancies and compensation.

176. (1) Any official liquidator may resign or be removed by the Court on due cause shown.

(2) Any vacancy in the office of an official liquidator appointed by the Court shall be filled up by the Court and until the vacancy is so filled up the official receiver shall be and act as the official liquidator.

(3) There shall be paid to the official liquidator such salary or remuneration, by way of percentage or otherwise, as the Court may direct; and, if more liquidators than one are appointed, such remuneration shall be distributed amongst them in such proportions as the Court directs.

The words in italics have been inserted by the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936.

Removal of liquidators. Though the Court may have a general discretion of removing the liquidator, its jurisdiction is not confined to cases where there is personal unfitness in the liquidator; but it extends to cases where the unfitness is occasioned by his connection with other parties or by circumstances of the particular case 3. Whenever the Court is satisfied that it is for the general advantage of those interested in the assets of the company that a liquidator should be removed, it has power to remove him and appoint a new one 4.

in such interest of the liquidation that the present liquidator should be removed, the Court declined to make the order even if the liquidator was clearly guilty of neglect in carrying out the specific orders of the Court and the specific Rules which have been laid down by the High Court 1.

Who can apply for removal.

A contributory or a creditor can apply for the removal of a liquidator, but not an outsider 2. A contributory in arrear as to his calls cannot however apply for a liquidator's removal 3.

In case of supervision order.

If a supervision order is made and the company is insolvent, the Court may give effect to the wishes of the creditors by removing a voluntary liquidator 4.

A liquidator may appeal from an order for his removal 5.

Remuneration of liquidator.

As a general rule when the liquidator applies for exceptional remuneration, the registrar should see that the creditors of the company have specific notice of the application, so that the circumstances may be discussed and the figures properly checked 6. The practice as to the remuneration is generally to adopt as a guide the scale applicable to trustees in bankruptcy which is on a percentage basis 7. But the remuneration is to be considered in each case according to its particular circumstances 8. It has been held that the Court will not interfere to determine the proportion in which the remuneration ascertained to be due to joint liquidators shall be divided between them 9.

The official liquidator is not entitled to receive anything out of the assets of the company by way of remuneration until all the costs of the winding up including the solicitor's bill have been paid in full 10.

There is a fiduciary relationship between the liquidator on the one side and the shareholders and creditors on the other. He cannot therefore receive remuneration beyond what is allowed by statute or the Rules, even though being a solicitor he conducts proceedings on behalf of himself and his co-liquidator in the process of winding up 11.

Official liquidator.

177. The official liquidator shall be described by the style of the official liquidator of the particular company in respect of which he is appointed, and not by his individual name.

Statement of affairs to be made to the liquidator.

177A. (1) Where the Court has made a winding up order or appointed an official liquidator provisionally, there shall, unless the Court thinks fit to order otherwise and so orders, be made out and submitted to the official liquidator a statement as to the affairs of the company verified by an affidavit and containing the following particulars, namely :—

Amendment.

Sections 177A and 177B are new and have been introduced by the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936. They reproduce ss. 181 and 182 respectively of the English Companies Act of 1929. For the effects of the amendments see Introduction.

Custody of company's property.

178. (1) The official liquidator whether appointed provisionally or not shall take into his custody, or under his control, all the property, effect and actionable claims to which the company is or appears to be entitled.

(2) All the property and effects of the company shall be deemed to be in the custody of the Court as from the date of the order for the winding up of the company.

Amendment.

By the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936, in sub-s. (1) after the word "liquidator" the words in italics have been inserted, and the new sub-s. (2) has been substituted for the original sub-s. (2) which ran thus:

(2) If no official liquidator is appointed, or during any vacancy in such appointment, all the property of the company shall be deemed to be in the custody of the Court.

Liquidator is trustee of company's property.

The official liquidator is a trustee of the company's property for the creditors, and the statute of limitation caases to run against them as soon as the winding up order is made 1. Thus Lord Selborne said: "The hand which receives the calls necessarily receives them as a statutory trustee for the equal and rateable payment of all the creditors" 2, and James L. J. spoke of the assets as being "fixed by the Act of Parliament with a trust for equal distribution among the creditors" 3, and Lord Cairns observed: "There is by this section imposed upon the assets of the company, wherever they may be at the time of the winding up, a trust to be applied in discharge of the liabilities of the company" 4. But the liquidator is not a trustee in the full sense of the word, for the property in the assets remains vested in the company 5, and when he makes contracts he does so in the company's name 5. The liquidator is not a trustee for each creditor and contributory so as to be liable in his capacity of trustee for negligence 1. The liquidator is only the company's agent appointed by the Court and there is no parallel between his position and that of the trustee of a bankrupt or of the sheriff as to property taken in execution, for the purpose of dealing with the company's property 2. See notes to s. 179.

New rights and liabilities in winding up.

Although the liquidator is substituted for, and enforces the rights of, the creditors in right of the company, yet the winding up order calls into existence new rights and liabilities and equities which, though they might have been set up against the company, cannot prevail against the liquidator as representing the creditors 3.

If money has been paid to a liquidator under mistake of law he, being an officer of the Court, would be ordered to refund 4.

Liquidator's powers.

The property of the company attached before the liquidation does not however vest in the liquidator. The powers of the liquidator differ in this respect from those of the receiver of an insolvent's estate in whom the property vests under the provisions of the Insolvency Act 5.

A solicitor engaged by the company is bound to make over to the liquidator any document that has come into his possession since, but not prior to, the winding up order 6.

As between the liquidator and the company's mortgagees the former is entitled to the custody of books and documents which are not necessary to support the mortgagee's title 7.

As to the resemblances and distinctions between bankruptcy and winding up see cases collected in Buckley, 10th ed. p. 374.

Committee of Inspection in compulsory winding up.

178A. (1) The official liquidator shall within a month from the date of the order for the winding up of a company convene a meeting of the creditors of the company (as ascertained from the books and documents of the company) for the purpose of determining whether or not a committee of inspection shall be appointed to act with the liquidator, and who are to be members af the committee, if appointed.

(2) The official liquidator shall within a week from the date of the creditors' meeting convene a meeting of the contributories to consider the decision of the creditors and to accept the same with or without modifications.

(3) If the contributories do not accept the decision of the creditors in its entirety it shall be the duty of the official liquidator to apply to the Court for directions as to whether there shall be a committee of inspection and, if so, what shall be the composition of the committee, and who shall be members thereof.

(4) A committee of inspection appointed under this section shall consist of not more than twelve members being creditors and contributories of the company or persons holding general or special powers of attorney from creditors or contributories in such proportions as may be agreed on by the meetings of creditors and contributories, or as, in case of difference, may be determined by the Court.

(5) The committee of inspection shall have the right to inspect the accounts of the official liquidator at all reasonable times.

(6) The committee shall meet at such times as they may from time to time appoint, and, failing such appointment, at least once a month, and the liquidator or any member of the committee may also call a meeting of the committee as and when he thinks necessary.

(7) The committee may act by a majority of their members present at a meeting, but shall not act unless a majority of the committee are present.

(8) A member of the committee may resign by notice in writing signed by him and delivered to the liquidator.

(9) If a member of the committee becomes bankrupt, or compounds or arranges with his creditors, or is absent from five consecutive meetings of the committee without the leave of those members who together with himself represent the creditors or contributories, as the case may be, his office shall thereupon become vacant.

(10) A member of the committee may be removed by an ordinary resolution at a meeting of creditors if he represents creditors, or of contributories if he represents contributories, of which seven days' notice has been given, stating the object of the meeting.

(11) On a vacancy occurring in the committee the liquidator shall forthwith summon a meeting of creditors or of contributories, as the case may require, to fill the vacancy, and the meeting may, by resolution, re-appoint the same or appoint another creditor or contributory to fill the vacancy.

(12) The continuing members of the committee, if not less than two, may act notwithstanding any vacancy in the committee.

Amendment. This section is new. It has been inserted by the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1936, and is based on s. 199 of the English Act of 1929. Following the provisions of ss. 198 and 199 of the English Companies Act, 1929, provisions have been made in this section for the appointment of a committee of inspection in a compulsory winding up. The section has also defined the powers, duties &c. of such committee of inspection, and made provisions for their procedure and removal of members thereof.

A member of a committee of inspection is in a fiduciary relation with the insolvent's estate. Therefore any transaction with the latter is void 1. In the last cited case the validity of the appointment of a limited company as a member of a committee of inspection was doubted.

Powers of official liquidator.

179. The official liquidator shall have power, with the sanction of the Court, to do the following things :—

(a) to institute or defend any suit or prosecution, or other legal proceeding, civil or criminal, in the name and on behalf of the company ;

(b) to carry on the business of the company so far as may be necessary for the beneficial winding up of the same ;

(c) to sell the immoveable and moveable property of the company by public auction or private contract, with power to transfer the whole thereof to any person or company, or to sell the same in parcels ;

(d) to do all acts and to execute, in the name and on behalf of the company, all deeds, receipts, and other documents, and for that purpose to use, when necessary, the company's seal ;

(e) to prove, rank and claim in the insolvency of any contributory, for any balance against his estate, and to receive dividends in the insolvency, in respect of that balance, as a separate debt due from the insolvent, and rateably with the other separate creditors ;

(f) to draw, accept, make and indorse any bill of exchange, hundi or promissory note in the name and on behalf of the company, with the same effect with respect to the liability of the company as if the bill, hundi, or note had been drawn, accepted, made or indorsed by or on behalf of the company in the course of its business ;

(g) to raise on the security of the assets of the company any money requisite ;

(h) to take out, in his official name, letters of administration to any deceased contributory, and to do in his official name any other act necessary for obtaining payment of any money due from a contributory or his estate which cannot be conveniently done in the name of the company ; and in all such cases the money due shall, for the purpose of enabling the liquidator to take out the letters of administration or recover the money, be deemed to be due to the liquidator himself: Provided that nothing herein empowered shall be deemed to affect the rights, duties and privileges of any Administrator General.

(i) to do all such other things as may be necessary for winding up the affairs of the company and distributing its assets.

Order in general terms may be made.

An order under a compulsory winding up in general terms giving the liquidator power to do all acts without the previous sanction or interference by the Court may be made[1]. But an order in general terms will not be readily made[2]. As to whether or not a general sanction includes a power to compromise, see the case noted below[3].

Liquidator's powers under general authority.

It is the duty of the Court to settle the list of contributories, to rectify the register of members, if necessary[4], and to make calls[5]. But the High Court may by rules enable or require the official liquidator to perform these duties, provided that the official liquidator shall not, without the special leave of the Court, rectify the register of members or make any call[6]. The Calcutta High Court in a recent case[7] has observed that in India, as distinct from England, there is at present no provision by which the liquidator in a compulsory winding up can make a call without coming to the Court. But it is apprehended that in this respect there is little distinction between the Indian and the English Act, for the proviso mentioned above exists in the English Acts substantially[8].

The defendant to proceedings brought by the liquidator cannot take the objection that the sanction of the Court has not been obtained. The Court's sanction may sometimes be inferred from the general authority given to the liquidators on their appointment[9].

Directors' powers cease.

On the appointment of a liquidator all the powers of the directors cease[10]. "The Company when in liquidation", observed Lord Watson, "although by no means defunct, could no longer act by its directors and appoint or employ agents capable of binding the corporation or its estate, and was represented by the liquidator who could not himself carry on its business without the special leave of the Court"[11].

Liquidator and receiver.

Where there is a question of competition between a liquidator and a receiver appointed by the Court at the instance of the debenture-holders or mortgagees, the Court will ordinarily in the exercise of its discretion give preference to the liquidator 1.

Suit by or against company.

Cl. (a). Where a company is the plaintiff or defendant in a suit, the liquidation of the company does not make any difference. The change brought about by the liquidation in regard to the suit is merely that in the conduct of its defence : the company before liquidation will act through the directors, but during liquidation through the liquidator 2. In a suit against a company since gone into liquidation the official liquidator cannot be substituted in place of the company, but the title of the suit should be amended as follows : "...... Ltd. (now in liquidation) being represented by......liquidator" 3.

It was recently held by the Court of Appeal in England that this clause did not enable a liquidator to bring an action in the name and on behalf of a company which had no existence, e. g., a foreign company which had been dissolved by the laws of that country and that it only enabled a liquidator to enforce any cause of action which the company suing in its own name could enforce 4. But this decision has been reversed by the House of Lords which has held that the order for winding up having been validly made, the order under s. 191 of the English Act of 1929 (corresponding to s. 179 of the Indian Act) permitting the liquidator to bring the action in the name and on behalf of the company was rightly made and the action so brought was properly constituted 5.

Liability for costs.

If the liquidator brings or defends an action in the name of the company, he is not personally liable for costs 6 ; but if he takes proceedings in his own name, he will be personally liable 7. If he appeals without leave and his appeal is dismissed, he will be ordered to pay the costs out of his own pocket 8. If the liquidator applies for leave to appeal, he will, as a rule, be entitled to the costs of his application, unless the appeal would be frivolous 9.

If an action is pending to which the company is a party, and the liquidator decides to prosecute or defend the proceedings for the estate, the estate must be treated as the party litigant and must in case of failure pay the costs, and they are payable in full out of the assets in priority of the costs of winding up 10. The mere fact of the judgment obtained against a liquidator being under appeal does not affect the application of the last cited case 11.

Where the party to a proceeding under s. 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is not the company but the liquidator and though the latter happens only to be a party by reason of the fact that he is clothed with that character, for the purposes of a proceeding under s. 145 he is to be regarded as a separate personality responsible for the action of his men, though he may be in fact acting on behalf of the company 1.

A successful litigant with the company is prima facie entitled to be paid immediately the cost ordered to be paid in full. The onus is on the liquidator to show that immediate payment cannot be made, or that other persons have claims in priority or ranking pari passu 2. Where the costs are to be paid by the liquidator personally and he is to be at liberty to retain them out of the assets of the company, such costs rank even before the costs of realization 3. Actual expenses of realization mean strictly the costs of a sale of the assets and do not extend to bill of costs of the liquidator's solicitor 4.

When the liquidator does not sue or defend in his own name, but in that of the company, there is no jurisdiction to order the liquidator to pay costs personally any more than the directors of a going company can be ordered to pay costs 5. But if he takes proceedings in his own name he will incur a personal liability 6 ; and if he appeals without leave and his appeal is dismissed, he will be ordered to pay the costs out of his own pocket 7. Where the liquidator is the applicant and fails, the proper order would be, as between himself and the adverse party, that he do pay costs without prejudice to any application that, as between him and the estate, the costs be paid out of the estate 8.

In the appeal Court if a liquidator be the appellant and fails, he will be ordered personally to pay the costs 9, which he may recover from the estate. But if the proceedings be in the Court which has the control of the winding up, it may at once determine whether as between the liquidator and the estate, the cost will come out of the estate 10.

Where in an order winding up a company there was no order as to costs by the appellate Court, it was open to the liquidator under the direction of the Court to allow payments of costs, incurred by the directors, to a reasonable amount, if he is satisfied that they were so incurred bona fide in the interest of the company 11. Where a company passed a resolution for voluntary winding up and a creditor shortly after that filed a petition for compulsory winding up which was opposed by the voluntary liquidator, costs of the latter were properly allowed in the discretion of the Court 12.

Where costs are ordered to be paid by the liquidator out of the assets of the company, then in case the assets are insufficient to pay these costs and the costs of the winding up, the former are entitled to payment in priority 1. Where in arbitration proceedings the liquidator is in the position of a defendant and an award is made against the company, the costs of the reference and award should not be ordered to be paid by the liquidator personally with a right to re-imbursement out of the assets of the company, but should be ordered to be paid by the company 2. If however the liquidator applies for the statement of a special case at the hearing of which he fails he, as being there in the position of a plaintiff, may be ordered to pay the costs of the hearing with a right to re-imbursement 3.

Where a winding up order is discharged the liquidator is not entitled, as against any person, his remuneration or costs 4. His only claim is as against the assets of the company and then only so far as without interfering with the rights of the secured creditors 5. The liquidator is, as a rule, entitled to his costs out of the estate and they are generally left to the liquidation Judge 6.

The adverse litigant, if he be the defendant, may apply for security for costs under s. 280.

Right of audience.

A liquidator as such has no right of audience in a suit on the original side of the High Court to which the company is a party. A company cannot appear in person and must appear by either counsel or solicitor 7.

Solicitors appointed by liquidator.

The solicitor appointed by the liquidator will be deemed to have contracted to act for the company with recourse to the assets for payment 8, and as such has no claim against the liquidator personally 8. This applies in the case of a solicitor to the voluntary liquidator 9. In complicated cases the liquidator should be advised by a Vakil dissociated from either side 10.

Liquidator must be upright.

The Court will not encourage a liquidator in resisting, especially on technical grounds, claims to which manifestly there is no defence 11. The Court will also insist on the liquidator as its officer to act in an upright manner even to the company's opponents ; but he must not be generous at other people's expense 12.

Registration of transfer.

Where the registration of an out and out transfer of shares has not been obtained by any falsehood or concealment, the company is bound by such registration, and the liquidator is not entitled to take advantage of any equitable rights which the transferee may have as against the transferor to have the transfer set aside 13.

Summary order.

An official liquidator is not entitled by summary order to a refund of money realized by a creditor before the winding up order was passed but after the company has passed a resolution stopping payment of debts. The liquidator in such a case has to institute a regular suit like other claimants to recover the amount realized by such creditor 14.

Inspection of books &c.

The liquidator is in the position of a receiver and manager of partnership assets appointed by the Court. Under s. 241 an order may be obtained for inspection of books of the company and it will be the liquidator's duty to give every assistance and facility in finding out the relevant books and papers; but he cannot be called upon to make an affidavit of documents 1.

Adverse party's right to discovery.

Where the liquidator represents the company as a party litigant, the adverse party has right to obtain from him the same measure of discovery as he would from any other litigant 2. Discovery may also be obtained from the liquidator in his personal as distinguished from his representative character upon a proper case being made out 3.

Authority to bid at sale.

A Judge in liquidation has no jurisdiction to make any order giving the liquidator leave to bid at an auction sale. He can of course give any direction to him to take such legal steps as he desires to take in accordance with the general provisions of the law; but the granting or refusing of permission to bid at a sale is clearly a matter for the execution Court 4.

Cause of action.

Cause of action for the liquidator to realize contributions from the contributories arises only on the appointment of the liquidator 5.

Proceeding by liquidator.

Cl. (a). A proceeding started by the liquidator is not initiated in his personal capacity but in the name and on behalf of the company, and it must be deemed as if the proceeding is being continued not only in the interest of the company, but actually by the company through its liquidator 6.

What is for the beneficial winding up.

Cl. (b). What is necessary for the beneficial winding up of a company will be determined by the Court having regard to all the circumstances and includes "mercantile necessity" 7. "The company when in liquidation," observed Lord Watson, "although by no means defunct, could no longer act by its directors, and appoint or employ agents capable of binding the corporation" 8. Without the special leave of the Court 8 a liquidator cannot carry on the business of the company with the view of making a profit for the company 7, or for facilitating reconstruction 7. Contracts may be made for the purpose of beneficial winding up of a company 7 and the onus of proving that a contract is not beneficial lies upon the party objecting to it 9. It is only for the purpose of administration and realization that the business can be continued; if a majority carry a resolution which goes beyond this, the minority are entitled to a declaration that it is ultra vires 10. But a contract not required for the beneficial winding up may be binding between the company and the person with whom it is made, although as between the shareholders and officers of the company it may be open to objection 1.

Costs of carrying on business.

The costs of carrying on the business may not be chargeable as costs of preservation in priority to the claims of debenture-holders 2. If goods are sold and bills given by the purchaser which have not matured at the commencement of the winding up, the liquidators can collect the bills or discount them without embarking on new business.

Where it would be clearly for the benefit of the creditors that a further sum should be advanced for completion of a certain transaction, even a provisional liquidator would be justified in advancing the money 3.

As to voluntary winding up, see s. 205 and notes thereto.

Transfer by liquidators.

Cl. (c). This clause makes the official liquidator's power to sell whether by auction or by private treaty conditional on the sanction of the Court; but this must be exercised with judicial discretion having regard to the interests of the company and its creditors 4. This clause means that the liquidator can finally dispose of the property, once he has got the sanction of the Court. It does not mean that he has power merely to invite offers and to submit them to the Court for approval 5. Any sales or contract of sale effected by the liquidator in pursuance of the Court's sanction previously obtained are not merely conditional agreements subject to subsequent confirmation by the Court. Hence, where the District Court has given the official liquidator a general permission to sell the properties (provided that a certain price was obtained) and has expressly sanctioned the contract of sale entered into by the official liquidator for a sum considerably in excess of the stipulated price, the Court cannot revoke its own sanction so as to nullify the contract of sale 5.
